So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, we have witnessed one of the most remarkable performances I think I have ever known in this or any other deliberative body. I believe the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Vermont was adopted on the 25th was 34 in favor to 28 against the amendment. The vote this morning is 21 in favor to 29 against, making a change of 14 votes. I had not heard that there had been a meeting of the Republican caucus, but there seems to have been one, and I assume that the orders have been issued from that caucus, and the result is as we see it to-day.

I take it for granted the Senator from New York has not the slightest idea of the bill becoming a law. This is a little by-play, I take it, for the purpose of catching votes in the Northwest perhaps, and making a record, as the saying is. He has not the slightest idea of getting the bill through Congress, and as we have nothing else to do and it is very well that the record be made up and all the instructive literature on the subject that is available be placed before us, I ask the Secretary to read a very interesting paper from the other branch of Congress:

Mr. SWINBURNE, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted the following as the views of the minority, to accompany bill H. R. 8843.

A bill upon this subject. I ask the Secretary to read it, and to read it carefully.

Mr. MILLER. I object to the reading of that document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the paper being objected to, the question will be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It must be decided without debate.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Secretary will hand it back I will indulge the Senate by reading it myself, with somewhat more deliberation perhaps than it would have been read at the desk.

Mr. MILLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he proceeds with the reading. I inferred from the remarks of the Senator——

Mr. BUTLER. I am not very much inclined to indulge the Senator from New York by extending that courtesy. As he has been guilty of want of courtesy in objecting to my having this paper read at the desk and imposing the task on me, I decline to answer any question by him.

Mr. MILLER. I shall reserve my remarks until the Senator finishes reading, and then I will submit them in my own time.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish the Senator would. When I get through the Senator of course will have a right to the floor, and can speak as long as he pleases, but possibly I may have something to say in reply to him; I do not know. I proceed to read the views of the gentleman who submitted this minority report:

The undersigned, believing that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture was imposed upon in the representations made to him by the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, upon which he founded his report, submitted to this House on March 23, and believing that if the recommendations made in the report are carried out a large amount of money will be uselessly expended, a dangerous power invested in incompetent men, and great injustice inflicted on the raisers of cattle in this country, we submit the following report to accompany House bill 8843, as a substitute for House bill 3350:

The Bureau of Animal Industry was established under an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of deceased cattle, and provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals," approved May 9, 1884.

By the provisions of the creative act the bureau was to be in charge of a chief "who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon," appointed by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and who was to "investigate and report upon the condition of domestic animals of the United States, their protection and use, and also inquire into and report the causes of contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases among them and the means for the prevention and cure of the same, and to collect such information on these subjects as shall be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of the country." The act further provided that a full and detailed report of the bureau should be presented annually to Congress at the "commencement of each session."

To carry on tthe provisions of that act, $250,000 have been appropriated by the Government during the last two years; only about $100,000 have been expended; not a large sum, it is true, if the objects were attained and the great interests of cattle raising benefited. But such has not been the fact. No knowledge of the disease so called pleuro-pneumonia has been discovered further than what has been known for hundreds of years in Europe, to wit, "that the disease has scarcely spread at all except by the movement of cattle," and that practically it existed in France "for thirty years without making any important progress," but was spread, according to the first report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, because of the necessity to drive herds of cattle to supply the armies under the great Napoleon.

There is so much confusion in the Senate that it is impossible for me almost to hear my own voice. I should be very glad if order would be restored.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from South Carolina would very kindly give us some remarks of his own instead of reading other people's, we would all listen with eagerness.

Mr. BUTLER. I will entertain the Senate after I get through with the remarks of this gentleman with some remarks of my own perhaps, but I must finish this first, and in the mean time I would be very glad to have some order in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appeals to the Senate to be in order.

Mr. BUTLER. This gentleman proceeds:

None of the requirements of the law have been complied with, even to the rendering of a report at the commencement of the session, and, notwithstanding the fact that no advance has been made either in means for the protection of the farmer or in giving any scientific knowledge as to the origin of the disease or the means to eradicate it, a further appropriation of $350,000 is asked by the bill. Both the original bill and the substitute offered by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture re-enact the powers of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and extend them so that wherever, in the opinion of the Commissioner, it is deemed advisable, he may appraise and slaughter the diseased and exposed cattle and compensate the owners, by the original bill, at four-fifths their value, and by the substitute of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture at three-fourths.

The forthcoming report of the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry will clearly exhibit the dangerous predicament in which the Government will place itself by such a barbarous and unjust mode of procedure. The chief of the bureau of animal industry states that at the time of closing his report 455 herds, comprising over 60,000 animals, were exposed to the disease termed pleuro-pneumonia. His report states that experience places the average of animals which will be severely affected at less than 30 per cent., and that the average of these which die from the disease is one-third. By the investing of this power of slaughtering in the bureau if but 25 per cent. were affected, and one-third of these were to be slaughtered, each animal, at a valuation of $75 (the chief's estimate), the amount of money to be paid at two-thirds the valuation would be over $250,000. But as 15,000 out of the 60,000 are infected, there could be no discrimination, and all must be slaughtered at an expense of nearly $750,000, a rather costly luxury for the Government to indulge in to the injury of the raisers of fine stock for the purpose of offering a market to speculators and traders.

Mr. CULLOM. My friend from South Carolina is not a very good reader. I think he had better allow the Secretary to read the report.

Mr. BUTLER. I was congratulating myself that I was getting along first rate.

Mr. CULLOM. I think he is a very poor reader; I would rather hear him talk.

Mr. BUTLER. If I am reading too rapidly, perhaps the Senate might be benefited by getting the clerks to read it.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it would be better to let the Secretary read it.

Mr. BUTLER. As my hand is in, I believe I will continue.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I am sorry to say that I can not permit the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. MILLER. I was going to withdraw my objection to having the paper read at the desk.

Mr. BUTLER. This gentleman proceeds—

The whole argument of the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry is an effort to convince the nation, and particularly Congress, to whom he appeals for an appropriation, that there is but one remedy, and that is the total extirpation of the disease by slaughter. According to his theorizing there is no method of knowing what cattle are infected, as the disease may not develop itself for months, and as a result every one of the 60,000 exposed must be slaughtered, at a cost to the Government of not less than $3,000,000, at $50 each. That Congress is prepared to accept the suggestions to be evolved out of the mass of contradictions to be submitted by the chief "as his report" can not be entertained. According to his own showing, only one-third of the 30 per cent. of infected cattle die, the remaining two-thirds of the sick recover. According to their own report, throughout Europe, and particularly in the sections where the contagion is less virulent, the average of cattle which die from the disease is less than 40 per cent. of the infected.

In Austria, out of 114,757 head of cattle exposed to the disease, only 6,614 died. In Prussia, of 10,154 head exposed but 1,856 died, while in Saxony, of 505 head exposed only 88 died. In Holland, where the disease was attempted to be crushed out by wholesale slaughter, an experiment revealed that only 202 were found infected out of 3,050 head which had been exposed and were slaughtered. And yet, in the face of these facts, the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry asks $650,000 to enable him to carry on the Government-slaughter house. If such a system is to be adopted, we would recommend the changing of the name of the department from that of Bureau of Animal Industry to bureau of butchery for the destruction of the domestic animals of the United States, to be in charge of a corps of butcher boys, who would be as well qualified for the positions as the present head of the bureau seems competent for his.

In this recommendation the chief advocates the very absurd proposition that a liberal indemnity should be paid owners of cattle to report cases of sickness, where a small indemnity leads to secreted disease. A new feature in public ethics, which requires a premium to be paid men to prevent violations of law.

It is held by the chief of the Bureau that animals infected still have a certain value, and that to take them by the right of eminent domain and slaughter them would be unjust and foreign to the wishes of the stockmen of the country and unjust where they are often the entire dependence for the support of a family. There can be no question that the slaughtering of these animals would be a great injustice. They are of a breed which the owners desire to preserve and not to butcher. In every instance reported by the bureau this disease is only found to break out among valuable imported herds of Jerseys, which the owners have been at great expense to import and improve, and which, at a money valuation, could not be disposed of at double the amount estimated as damages. The destructive effect of this disease is reported to be principally among cows, and, if it be true, as the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry says, that the disease lays latent for months before discovery, it is evident to save the people from poisoned milk that the department should be in charge of a man who might be able to devise methods to save instead of destroy.

That paragraph is especially instructive and interesting, and to it I invite the earnest, sincere, prayerful attention of my friend from Illinois, because I know he has a very humane disposition and would be more than willing to protect the people of this country against impure milk, so much of the milk of human kindness has he.

Aside from the legal question arising, as a matter of equity, it would be equally logical to ask the Government to appropriate funds to reimburse farmers for the loss of their stocks by cyclones, birds, rot, or any other unforeseen cause because such crops were the dependence of a family. There are others interested in the protection of cattle from disease besides the stockmen—the consumers, consisting of the public at large—and to protect these from diseased meats and impure milk the Government of the United States should, with the co-operation of the authorities of the States, enforce stringent laws to govern herds in pastures and stables, and to compel the observance of proper sanitary laws, which would prove more effective than any other means suggested. These laws, extending to the slaughter-houses or shambles, would prevent impure meats from being placed on the market. Such a system would compel owners to greater vigilance in their own interests rather than to encourage negligence, a result to be expected if the Government were to become the purchaser of diseased cattle which had become valueless and beyond cure.

It is asserted in the report that contagious pleuro-pneumonia prevailed in the vicinity of New York city and Brooklyn, and in parts of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Virginia, and "from the facts given that there is no reason to expect any aid in the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia from either medical treatment or inoculation." How far intelligent legislation should be based on this report may be inferred from the fact that when, on the strength of this report, a request was made to have one of these cases in the District of Columbia shown, the reply was, "We know of none now in the District, but will try and find one." The health department of New York city says "it has no knowledge of the presence of contagious diseases or what is termed pleuro-pneumonia among cattle."

The commissioner of health of the city of Brooklyn, in a letter dated May 4, 1886, says:

"Examinations are made by officers under the authority of the State board of health, who are also inspectors in this department. Management of cases of pleuro-pneumonia: Strict quarantine, isolating the diseased from the healthy. Treatment: Inoculation and the destruction of those deemed incurable. Conclusions: Although not strictly founded on actual statistics, that in pleuro-pneumonia for several years there was 25 to 30 per cent. is now reduced to about 5. Thus the gain of 20 to 25 per cent. less of pleuro-pneumonia, although fairly attributed to the more intelligent management and the inoculation combined, may be counted as a logical sequence of the better hygeine and improved methods, does not establish the fact as absolutely incontrovertible. For the past seven years the practice of inoculation in pleuro-pneumonia has obtained. With but few exceptions the results have been satisfactory, the present number of horned cattle being 1,850 as against 2,550 in former years. This must be admitted as a factor in drawing conclusions, the former conditions being one, no doubt, of overcrowding in many instances."

Here are positive and distinct contradictions of the report, elicited after the report of the chief of the Bureau was made public by advance sheets to the Committee on Agriculture, first, that contagious diseases does not exist among cattle in the District of Columbia, nor in nor around the city of New York, and that in the city of Brooklyn in has been reduced from 25 to 30 per cent. down to 5 per cent. by strict quarantine, inoculation, and the destruction of the incurable.

The argument is advanced by the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry that the publication of the existence of contagious disease in dairy herds, so long as it is known that no measures are adopted for its suppression, destroys the legitimate business of these herds, and is such an intolerable hardship to such owners that they would not submit to it for any great length of time, therefore the idea of a quarantine at State lines is impracticable, and will fail to accomplish the desired object. The freedom of commerce is a matter of too great importance, he says, to be interfered with, except in the cases of the most urgent necessity.

The remedy suggested is to stamp out contagion by slaughter of all the exposed animals because it does away at once with the necessity of placing restrictions upon commerce, and "because it is the most economical means of controling diseases." To us this line of reasoning is simply absurd, and might with equal force be applied to anarchists, dynamiters, or any other lawless men whose business may be destroyed by law, and who, considering law an intolerable hardship, might conclude "that they would not submit for any great length of time." These are strange reasons upon which to predicate conclusions that the Government should spend a large amount of money. The greater consideration than that of commerce, the dangerous results to consumers of infected meats or by milk from infected cows on the consumer, has apparently no effect with the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry. He seems to hold that they have no rights.

Looked at from a national point of view, however, it is desirable, says the report, to have the plague exterminated at once. Not only are our enormous investments of $1,200,000,000 in cattle menaced, but we have now in our national commerce, foreign and domestic, restrictions which cost us every year several times as much as would be required to exterminate the disease once and forever.

The fallacy of this line of reasoning, devoid of all scientific knowledge, is only equaled by the presumption of the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry in his attempting to criticise the medical profession when he says, in answer to his own question, "How can this danger be removed?"

"When we are called upon to deal with a grave problem like this we naturally inquire what methods have been settled upon as most efficient by others who have had experience in similar emergencies. With twelve hundred millions of property at stake it would be inexcusable rashness to adopt a course of procedure which had been tested in many other countries, and had failed in all. It is not a case where theorizing is admissible, but our course should be guided by the irresistible logic of facts and experience. Doubtless it would be a grand thing if we could pour a few doses of some potent medicine into the body of an affected animal and utterly destroy the contagious principle which is coursing through its veins, and is multiplying itself in the innermost recesses of the animal organism. But such a medicine has not yet been discovered, and probably never will be, for the simple reason that the germs of such contagious diseases have been found to be of a vegetable nature, and have more powers of resistance than the living matter of the animal body. And so, long before the virus could be destroyed, the animal itself must of necessity perish.

"To combat the contagious diseases of mankind the medical profession is equally at a loss for remedies which have any decided effect upon the period of their duration."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BUTLER. I decline to yield to the Senator from New York.

The views of the minority of this House committee proceed:

The patient is eased when in pain, stimulated when sinking, receives such care as tends to prevent complications, but the essential disease is allowed to run its course. To prevent the spread of such contagion the sanitarian imposes quarantine restrictions and isolation from susceptible people; but how often he fails to prevent the spread of such diseases is shown by the simple fact that we lose in this country every year more than 90,000 human lives from maladies which only arise by contagion, and if we add those which often, if not always, are contracted in this way, we should have a grand total of 230,000.

Isolation and quarantine is also applicable to contagious animal diseases; but as in the case of those affecting mankind, it is an inefficient and expensive remedy, which may hold a plague in check for a time, but seldom eradicates it. We have a simpler, less expensive, speedier, and in every way more efficient remedy in the destruction of every diseased animal.

Every learned physician has become thoroughly convinced that all blood diseases will run their course, and that the victim will either die or recover after a certain point is reached, and that it is not drugs but sanitary measures which prove the remedial agencies, and that unless the physician believed in and followed the traditional and barbarous teachings of the dark and ignorant days of the profession, he would never think of its being "a grand thing if we could pour a few doses of some potent medicine into the body." The medical profession has not devoted its time to horse doctoring or study of animal diseases, yet all the knowledge of these so far acquired has been discovered by the regular medical profession. In their legitimate line, the treatment of disease in the human family, they have learned the nature of all (nearly thirty) the known blood poisons to which humanity is heir and how to control as well as prevent their spread. They have demonstrated that they can check, and eradicate the most virulent, such as cholera, yellow and ship fevers, and small-pox. This was clearly shown when, in 1866, eighteen vessels, mostly steamships, arrived in the port of New York from foreign ports with 8,501 passengers and crews aboard who had been exposed to cholera during the passage. On five of these vessels there were 3,133 steerage passengers, and of this number but 243 cases, or 7¾ per cent., proved fatal in quarantine.

On one of the vessels, the Virginia, with 985 steerage passengers, there were 78 deaths, or 7¾ per cent., while on board her twin-sister vessel, the England, which put into Halifax, out of 1,145 steerage passengers, there were 214 deaths, or 18¾ per cent. Of the latter vessel there are strangely conflicting accounts; the health officer at Halifax reported that 400 cases were sent to the hospital ship. As the passengers were all destined to New York, and no trace could afterwards be found of but 9, the deductions are that the remaining 391 died in hospital. From infected bedding thrown overboard from the England and picked up by children on the beach, the contagion was conveyed into several families in the city; the pilot who took the vessel into port died of the disease, as did also his two children, and one of the men employed in cleaning the vessel was taken with the disease and died in a few hours.

The superiority of the principle of quarantining as pursued in the port of New York over that pursued in Halifax, in separating the sick from the healthy, and the observance of sanitary laws, was proven in the fact that not one of the officials or employés at the New York quarantine was infected in any way with the disease, and that not a case of cholera was known to have occurred in the city of New York. In 1867 there arrived at the New York quarantine 152 vessels from ports infected with yellow fever and small-pox, on which there were 1,030 cases, of which 384 proved fatal. On 28 of these vessels there was small-pox, to which 16,680 persons had been exposed. Between the years 1864 and 1868, inclusive, 147 vessels arrived, on which there was small-pox, to which 73,541 persons were exposed, and yet, during all these years, not more than half a dozen cases of sickness could be traced beyond the boundaries of the quarantine as coming from the quarantine, and not a single case of sickness occurred among the officials or employés at that station.

The preventives enforced were a safe and well-guarded quarantine, and a system of disinfecting, and a strict regard to the laws of nature. Science, when threatened with these diseases, did not resort to the cowardly methods of ignorance and quackery and seek safety by having their victims cover up the ignorance of the profession in the grave. True science realizes that all laws governing the health and condition of men and animals are founded on the laws of God, and believe that the only treatment of this disease in cattle is to be found in a well-regulated quarantine, where the sick and infected animals are kept in distinct and separate quarantine, with proper nourishment and care. Every consideration of humanity and science protest against the Government unnecessarily clothing any commission with power to destroy the lives of any animals whom God has given to man for the sustaining of his life and strength, except for that purpose.

The experience learned during these years in the treatment of the four most virulent diseases—small-pox, cholera, yellow and ship fevers—enabled the physicians, by their analyzing the diseases, to know that each had a peculiar mode of propagation, and that by understanding the laws of nature they could control much of the infection. Of yellow fever they discovered that it was not personally contagious and was spread through soiled and contaminated clothing, and that it becomes virulent and is carried from one locality to another through ships and spread through drains and foul places where the pabulum is sufficient for its growth and extension. Ship fever, they learned, has its origin generated in unhealthy and improperly ventilated places, bad food, filth, and animal excretions, and that its treatment is simply a dependence on sanitary laws.

Cholera, they learned, came from the Eastern country and was due to excessive heat, filth, moisture, and bad water, and originated among the poorer or laboring classes, who through their poverty were compelled to live in poorly-constructed and miserably-ventilated houses, and who were forced to subsist on poor and insufficient food, and that it was extended through fecal matter, and that the only means by which it could be checked was removal from the surroundings which produced the disease, cleanliness, and good food and nourishment and pure air. Small-pox, the most virulent of all the four, they found was personally contagious, and was spread by being carried short distances in the atmosphere and by clothing saturated with the poison, and that the only proper treatment was good sanitary arrangements and plenty of good cool air, and that it was in no way controlled by medicines.

It is possible the same knowledge can be learned of the diseases in cattle. It is generally accepted now that Texas fever originates in exhalation from the soil, and by the investigations in New York State, in 1869, it was settled that the disease could be carried and spread by cattle without their manifesting any indications of disease, and that cattle taken to Texas would die of the disease, while native cattle seemed to enjoy an immunity from the disease.

It is generally conceded, and by the Bureau that up to this time no person has, either by practical treatment of cattle or by scientific observation and experiment, discovered when this disease first becomes contagious, and first ceases to become contagious, or how it is imparted one to another, and for this very reason the principle of a strict quarantine and the slaughtering of the herds stand on equally strong grounds of reasoning, with this exception, that by quarantining at least 75 per cent. of the infected bovines recover, thus saving to the Government, as suggested in the report, $3,000,000 annually, and to the owners, in many instances, cattle they prize beyond money for breeding purposes, and also prevent the slaughtering of inferior stock for which the Government is asked to reimburse.

When yellow fever, small-pox, cholera, or any other blood poison (excepting those induced by the bites of animals or the poisons of plants) was found to have broken out in the land, or was being imported from other nations, had the boards of health throughout the country recommended the slaughtering of the infected for the purpose of stamping out the disease they would have been pronounced as ignorant and barbarous, and yet that course would have been as intelligent as the method recommended by the Bureau of Animal Industry for the suppression of contagious disease among cattle.

Says the chief in his report:

"The diseased portion of the lungs remains diseased; it loses all life, becomes encysted, breaks down into pus, and retains the virulent contagion for an indefinite period, and the animals which possess such lungs are frequently the most dangerous of any. They may appear in perfect health to the casual observer, or to the best judge of cattle, and yet they scatter the contagion and infect all susceptible cattle with which they come in contact."

This is a scientific assertion, and, if proven, one of great value in leading to light in the manner of protection and treatment. Any student of medical science might make the same assertion, as all are taught these are possible conditions under certain circumstances, and if they be true in this case it is very important the public should know why they are true, and upon what facts and line of reasoning they are true. No scientific assertion is to be accepted unless proven, and this is not, nor can it be, by post mortems over the carcasses of animals which die of disease. To establish this as a fact can only be accomplished by a careful scrutiny and examination in all stages of the disease, as well as of the healthy, and by post mortems, and by exposing the healthy to the sick in every stage of the disease as experimental tests, thus ascertaining whether or no the well become infected by such exposure. Other knowledge is requisite of which we are yet in the dark, and more especially the important point why is it that the Jerseys or other imported stock are particularly susceptible to this disease. If this can be learned it may be discovered that in the methods of caring for these valuable breeds the remedy may be found.

To arrive at these results there is no possible method but by quarantine. The idea of slaughtering is a remedy devised in foreign lands, and among other extensive quotations in the report is given extracts from the laws of England as far back as 1869. Yet we find in all the countries where they have the slaughtering law the contagion still breaks out with serious results. By our quarantining of sick persons with contagious diseases and the isolating of the sick from the healthy, we have proven our supeirority over the European nations in that matter, and to adopt their unsuccessful methods in the treatment of disease in cattle will be a scientific step backwards, and exhibit as profound ignorance as is shown by the surgeon who thinks no process correct unless he finds it in the books of practice given by some foreign author, and practiced by a dignitary in his profession, and who rushes with knife in hand to maim and cripple by amputation for every break or wound simply because he was too lazy or stupid to study for himself. To pursue this very course, Congress is asked by the bureau to extend its powers so that the Commissioner of Agriculture may not be limited in the number of employés, and have power in his discretion to slaughter at will, and to enable him to do this $350,000 is asked.

We honestly object to this power being vested in the Commissioner much more than we do to the granting of the amount asked, although we believe the amount far in excess of what is necessary to attain present relief as well as practical scientific results, which will throw light on a subject now wrapped in mystery, and of which the Bureau of Animal Industry is absolutely ignorant. We do not charge any desire to enter into any criminal bargain or arrangement, but are satisfied that for some reason this matter of disease among cattle has been incompetently managed, and we can see no plausible reason why a strict quarantine of infected and suspected infected herds can not be efficiently carried out, and by scientific examinations and post mortems the same knowledge acquired as has been in the treatment of contagious blood diseases among human beings. By this system of quarantining science was enabled to study the contagion of cholera, learn the manner of its propagation, as well as means for preventing the spread. During the prevalence of one of the blood poisonings in animals, in 1869, it was discovered, and by scientific men generally accepted, that the disease was extended, just as cholera is extended, by the excretions and not by atmospheric means.

Further than this the experience of the last two years by the Bureau of Animal Industry has developed nothing. It is essential that for the better protection of commerce, and to avert the annual visitations of these diseases and the destruction of the cattle therefrom, that a more thorough examination be made, and that the authorities of the States be invited by the Commissioner of Agriculture to co-operate with the General Government in preventing the spread of disease and protecting the people from the evils resulting from the use of poisoned meats and milk. To effect this desired end, in the interests of humanity and trade, it is desirable that proper men should have this great work committed to them, so that out of the multitude of conflicting views some truths might be evolved. We protest against the expenditure of money through incompetent channels.

From the confused mass of speculations in the report of the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, advance copies of which have recently been furnished the Committee on Agriculture, and which by law should have been published at the commencement of the session, the only facts we can glean are that the Department has been floundering around in ignorance among a mass of theories and speculations; that no investigations have been made other than the lungs to find whether the poisonous explosions ever occur in any other part or organ of the animal, or to define whether the disease was that of blood-poisoning or inflammation. Having accepted the theory of pleuro or inflammatory, this was all that seemed necessary, when, in truth, the disease is not inflammatory. One of the deductions that the animals were infected only in one lung, and that that lung would become encysted, would explode the theory of contagion, as an encysted part can not throw off contagion.

The chief of the Bureau complains that members of the medical profession were responsible for deceiving the public in regard to their ability to detect this disease, but hopes this species of quackery will in time disappear, and asserts that the examinations made by the stockmen were worse than useless. He believes that the only safe way is for an experienced veterinarian to carefully examine the lungs of every animal by oscultation and percussion. Yet, according to his own statement, one of his experienced veterinarians issued a certificate at Cynthiana, Ky., that a herd was "very healthy, in a thriving condition, and altogether free from disease, contagious or otherwise."

Of 124 of this herd shipped to Austin, Tex., only 72 remained alive. Several post mortems were made by an experienced veterinarian of a number which died, and his report was that "in none of these did he find evidence of pleuro-pneumonia." Of this herd, the chief of the Bureau says that when he was in Austin on official business to inquire into the condition of cattle there, he was reliably informed that the carcasses of three animals could be seen on a farm not far from where he was, and that two or three were lying on the lot too sick to stand, but asserts that he did not have sufficient authority to make an investigation. By the reports then made there were conflicting opinions among the veterinarians as to the condition, and yet it seems that the head of the bureau was incapable of giving any decision in the matter, and when asked if he would, in the event of the cattle being found in good health, give a certificate, satisfied himself with the remark that he was not there to give certificates.

We are firm in the conviction that this disease termed pleuro-pneumonia is a blood poison, originating among cattle in stables and stock-yards, and we agree with the opinion of ex-Commissioner of Agriculture Loring that it can be checked by quarantining in open, well-protected fields, and that until stringent laws are enforced to protect cattle in the stables and stock-yards, and in transportation, and for providing them with proper food and water, the disease cannot be extirpated and the public protected from diseased meats and the poisonous milk of infected cows. We are of the opinion that the disease is not increasing, but rather diminishing, as in New York and Brooklyn, where stringent sanitary laws are enforced and frequent inspections made. Believing that the theory of inoculation has failed to produce the desired results, and that the slaughtering, as a means to extirpate, is cowardly and unwise, we are opposed to the appropriation asked by the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry to be expended as he recommends in his report.

Seventy-nine pages of the report are devoted to this herd from Cynthiana, Ky., and another in Calloway, Mo., which were sick in the latter portions of 1884 and the first months of 1885. Nothing is to be found in the forthcoming report which gives any particular touching any of the 455 herds reported to be exposed at the time of the making of the report. Nothing is said to indicate where they are, except in general terms: and what is there asserted, that the disease prevails to any extent, is contradicted by the reports from the departments of health of the cities of New York and Brooklyn, and in the report of the statistician published from the Department of Agriculture for April last. According to this report of the statistician, the condition of cattle is shown to be good, and that for the previous year losses from all causes did not rise above two per cent. in any of the New England or Middle States, in any of the States between the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, or in Minnesota or Iowa; while in no Southern State, except Florida, did the losses reach 8 per cent. The statistician reports no instances where pleuro-pneumonia exists except a few cases "supposed to be pleuro-pneumonia" in Scott County, Iowa, and cases "also reported under the same name from Contra Costa County, California." Evidently this expert official does not see in figures, which are supposed to be "stubborn facts," the great havoc the imagination of the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry haunts his dreams with.

JOHN SWINBURNE.

Mr. President, this is a very long, very elaborate, and a very interesting report, and whilst perhaps the Senate has become impatient at the time consumed in reading it, I think it would be well paid for reading it in the RECORD.

In the debate the other day on this question I asked the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from New York if they could state the number of animals diseased with pleuro-pneumonia in the United States. They failed completely to give any satisfactory information upon that subject. When I read from the last printed report of the Bureau of Animal Industry which I held in my hand, the report of 1885, both undertook to plead the statute of limitations upon it and said that the last report would disclose a most frightful condition of things in this country. From the concluding observations of this minority report it seems that the losses from all causes did not rise above 2 per cent. in any of the New England or Middle States, in any of the States between the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, or in Minnesota or Iowa, while in no southern State except Florida did the losses reach 8 per cent. And yet we are told that unless this Congress, in plain violation as I insist, and as I think every lawyer in this body must admit, of the Constitution, pass an act clothing three commissioners with such powers as no three men have ever had in this country in time of peace, we are imperiling the great cattle interest of this country.

Why, Mr. President, I believe, as I stated the other day, that this clamor has been raised for a purpose, and that purpose is to extract from the Treasury of the United States pay for these cattle.

The Senator from Illinois stated that the great State which he represents on this floor is unable to protect herself, and although she might establish quarantine regulations upon her borders they would prove ineffectual; that cattle would be driven over on foot, they would come over on the steamboats, and on the railway cars, and in the great city of Chicago there exists to-day a perilous number of these diseased cattle, threatening the prosperity and property of that city and everybody in it. The Senator from New York states, by way of excuse for passing this bill, that under the present animal-industry act the States refuse to co-operate with the Federal Government in many instances, and therefore the disease can not be arrested and extirpated.

Mr. President, I undertake to say for his State that if all the surrounding States should quarantine against the State of New York and prevent the exportation of cattle from that State into any other, or abroad, three months would not elapse before the citizens of that State, from self-interest, if from no other motive, would take hold of the question and extirpate it themselves, instead of coming to the Congress of the United States and asking for the passage of a bill which violates almost every principle of the Constitution.

I know, sir, it has become a little hazardous and rash to read anything from the Constitution of the United States in this body. I am well aware that a Senator who refers to that instrument is written down as an old fogy, as having belonged to that school of State-rights people in this country who by adhering to their principles involved the country in war, and all that idle talk; but I think it a little wholesome that we should read occasionally extracts from that instrument. On page 3 of this bill we find:

> And such commissioners are hereby authorized to enter, either in person or by their duly authorized and accredited agents, any premises or places, including stock-yards, cars, and vessels, within any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Territories of the United States, in or at which they have reason to believe, and do believe, there exist any of such diseases, and to make search, investigation, and inquiry in regard to the existence thereof.

The bill does not require that an affidavit should be made, does not require that any of these agents shall proceed upon any information except the belief of the agent himself, of which he is to be the sole judge. He may enter the premises of any citizen of the United States; he may commit any act he pleases of oppression, of wrong, of outrage, and when he shall be arraigned for it he can appeal to this provision of an act of the Congress of the United States for his protection, and he will be protected by it. Article IV of the Constitution provides:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the person or thing to be seized.

And yet, sir, we are conferring upon the agents of these commissioners, without limit as to number, without limit as to power, the right to enter the premises of any citizen of this country upon any pretext. All he has to do to protect himself is to say, "I believed that there was pleuro-pneumonia or some contagious disease among your cattle." It is, I repeat, the most monstrous and the most dangerous power ever conferred upon any three men in this country; and in saying that I have in mind all the summary and extreme and extraordinary measures resorted to, even in time of war, when perhaps extreme measures may have been excusable. But in time of peace, with the powers of the States in full play, with no pretext or pretense that there is not a willingness on the part of the State authorities to exert the last atom of their State power to extirpate this disease, we are told that the Congress of the United States must pass this bill to protect the cattle-growers of the West and the cattle-raisers of the East against the danger of having their property destroyed by this disease.

I stated on a former occasion and I repeat now that I will go as far as any Senator on this floor and do whatever I conscientiously can in my official position to relieve the people of this country of this or any other contagious disease, but when I am called upon and invited, as I am by this bill, to do violence to my conscience and do violence to the written Constitution of the country, I must ask to be excused.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, a few words only. The Senator from South Carolina seemed to intimate that the action of the Senate to-day, at least on this side of the Chamber, was controlled by caucus dictation. I shall not go into that matter any further than to state what has been stated here in the Senate before, that committees of the Senate, one on the Republican side and one on the Democratic side, had agreed to the consideration of this bill before the end of this session, and had only disagreed as to the particular time when it should be taken up. But the Republican party is entirely willing to assume the responsibility of forcing this measure on the consideration of Congress at this time. No bill before Congress has been asked for by so many of our people as this bill now under consideration, and the Republican party, always willing to respond to the demands of the people of this country, has made this measure one which it proposed to consider before the Senate should finally adjourn. In doing this in response to the demand of the people of the country thus generally expressed, it has only done what it has done heretofore in its history in this body and in the other House.

When our brethren from the South, a few years ago, fearing great loss to themselves and their property and danger to their lives by the spread of yellow fever throughout the Southern portion of this country, came here and demanded the appointment of a National Board of Health with most extraordinary powers, and the appropriation of large sums of money to enable the President and that board appointed by him to prevent the introduction of yellow fever and its spread throughout the Southern States, the Republican party joined with the Senators from the Southern States and gave them all they asked.

Mr. President, let me refer to some of the provisions of that law and let us see how much more stringent the law we are now seeking to pass is than that; how much greater the powers given to the President by the present law than in this, if any such. I read from section 3 of the act passed June 2, 1879, in regard to the introduction and spread of contagious diseases.

SEC. 3. That the National Board of Health shall co-operate with and, so far as it lawfully may, aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, and into one State from another; and at such ports and places within the United States as have no quarantine regulations under State authority where such regulations are, in the opinion of the National Board of Health, necessary to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another; and at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State, which in the opinion of the National Board of Health are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, the National Board of Health shall report the facts to the President of the United States, who shall, if, in his judgment, it is necessary and proper, order said board of health to make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State from another, which, when so made and approved by the President, shall be promulgated by the National Board of Health and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the States, where the State authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose.

Here the President of the United States, acting with the National Board of Health, was given power to make all rules and regulations regarding quarantine for all the States and ports, and it imposed upon the State authorities the necessity of carrying them out. But realizing the fact that the Federal Government could not control the action of the State authorities, it says in distinct language:

But if the State authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations the President may detail an officer or appoint a proper person for that purpose.

There is not any power found anywhere in this bill now before the Senate which exceeds the power given to the President in that law passed in 1879.

I have no doubt that the gentlemen here who have talked against this pleuro-pneumonia bill because of its unconstitutionality, as they have claimed, voted for that bill; but, sir, I hold in my hand House of Representatives bill 10072 of the present session, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes. I believe this bill was passed by the vote of every Senator belonging to this body to-day; in other words, it passed unanimously. Now let us see what powers it gives to the President on a matter of this kind. I find this provision:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated therefor by the act approved August 4, 1886, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same and for maintaining quarantine and maritime inspections at points of danger.

Here, in a bill passed only a few days ago, voted for by the entire Senate, we gave the President of the United States power, outside of all consent or co-operation of State authorities, if he found it necessary, to use the power of the Federal Government in maintaining quarantine and maritime inspections at points of danger for the purpose of preventing the introduction of cholera or yellow fever or other contagious diseases. I need not go into any elaboration of what the right of maintaining a quarantine implies. It carries with it the power of shutting up human beings, holding them in confinement absolutely, of taking possession of their personal effects, and, if necessary for the prevention of the spread of disease, of destroying those personal effects if they are charged with contagion. In short, the power of quarantining a person or property may amount, in fact, to confiscation of the property and to the imprisonment of the person. There can be no doubt about that. That bill passed this body a few days ago withot a dissenting vote.

There is nothing, then, to be found in the present bill which at all exceeds in the powers given to the President or to the Federal authorities the power which we have been giving to the President of the United States, and officials appointed by him for the last eight or ten years. The act creating the National Board of Health, and appropriating money and giving the President this unlimited power, was passed in the face of a great national danger. The yellow fever had spread from our coast into the interior of many of the Southern States, and was causing great loss of life and loss of property, and to-day we are confronted with another great danger, which, whilst it does not directly affect the life of the citizens of our country, does affect their material interests; and if it be not stopped by Federal legislation, it will, in my judgment, result in losses which can be numbered only by hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion upon this bill. I believe there is yet time for the bill to pass both Houses of Congress and to become a law, and if such shall happen, I have no doubt that when Congress meets again in December the officers who shall be appointed under this act by the President will be able to report to Congress that they have substantially eradicated and eliminated this disease from every State and Territory in the Union, and then the embargo which has been laid upon our foreign commerce in cattle will be raised, and the embargo which is being laid by a large number of our States upon interstate commerce in cattle will also be raised, and many millions of value will be added to this property in our country.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to renew an amendment which I offered to the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Section 2, line 4, after the word "rinderpest," insert:

And swine plague, hog-cholera, or other contagious diseases among swine.

Mr. MILLER. I do not particularly rise to oppose this amendment. I was in hopes the Senator, as a member of the committee reporting the bill, would not suggest this amendment, not because I am opposed to it in itself, but because I believe that the powers given in this bill are sufficient to enable the commission, in fact they lead directly in the direction of compelling them to make investigation of the diseases he has mentioned specifically; and certainly the bureau of animal industry, which is now in existence and will not be displaced by this commission, is by law especially charged with the investigation of these particular diseases, as mentioned.

I simply rose to express the hope that the Senator would refrain from pressing the amendment, but if he in his wisdom and knowledge of his own country shall insist upon it, of course I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I am paired and shall not be able to vote on this question, I desire to state that I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and I also voted for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], not because those amendments would have rendered the bill acceptable to me, for with those amendments, either the substitute of the Senator from Vermont or the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, I would still have voted against the bill.

I have but one opinion in reference to it. It is a question with which we have no business to concern ourselves. I regard the bill as one of the most dangerous measures, setting aside the guarantees of the Constitution to the States of this Union and to the people of the States, and assuming jurisdiction and control by the Federal Government over questions that properly belong to the States and to the people. Therefore no amendment that has been offered or that could be offered to a bill embodying such a principle could ever receive my vote.

I do not desire to discuss the question further. I wished simply to state, in order that my vote for these amendments might not be misconstrued or misunderstood, that notwithstanding I voted for the amendments I shall vote against the bill, and should do so even if those amendments were adopted.

I will say furthermore that I do not see the propriety of this legislation. Great complaint was made this morning in reference to the consumption of time, and the neglect of the performance of public duties devolved upon certain committees of Congress; and here is a bill originating in the Senate at this late hour that comes here with the certainty that it can not ever get on the Calendar of the House, and it is pressed to the exclusion of other business in the Senate. It seems to be, as the Senator from South Carolina intimated, for some purpose to be accomplished. What it may be I do not know.

I have no idea that it will accomplish any political advantage to the party of which the Senator from New York is a member, because while a large number of cattle-men may be in favor of this bill, the great body of the people are not in favor of being taxed to pay for the cattle of other persons that die from disease. In every farming community and on almost every farm every farmer loses some stock. He loses a horse occasionally, a cow occasionally, and he loses his poultry. There are losses constantly occurring all over the country. Nobody proposes to go and pay for anything except pleuro-pneumonia, as I understand the bill, or other contagious diseases. It is not proposed to pay every man for a horse that dies from old age, from weakness, or from being injured. I do not believe the people of this country desire to be taxed for any such purpose. The great mass of the people of this country do not desire to be taxed to indemnify the men who have invested their hundreds of thousands in speculation in cattle. They do not desire to be taxed in order to indemnify them for the losses they may sustain by reason of disease among their herds.

I am opposed to this whole thing, my principal objection being, however, that it is violative of the provisions of the Constitution, which gives to the States and to the people the right to look after their own particular interests.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I should have preferred this bill with the amendment of my colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS], but I think it is too important to allow all legislation to be omitted, and that some bill on this subject ought to pass at this session. I therefore shall vote for the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were here, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. We voted together on the substitute of the Senator from Vermont, and I do not know how he would vote on the passage of the bill. I reserve my vote until I see whether he comes in.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], but believing as I do that he is opposed to this bill, as I am, I will record my vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. KENNA'S name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] requested me to announce that he was paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. HAMPTON. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is now in his seat, and I shall vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. My pair being transferred to the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD], I vote "yea."

Mr. FARWELL. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who is detained in committee-room, being engaged on a committee of conference in drawing a report. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE subsequently said: The Senator from Illinois informs me that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is not present, and desires a pair, and under the circumstances——

Mr. HARRIS. There has been a pair announced between him and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. CULLOM. I paired him with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], but the Senator from Indiana came in and voted.

Mr. HARRIS. Some one announced a pair between the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] upon this vote, I think.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will pair the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and will myself vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I repeat, and the Reporter tells me he so understood it and has it just as the announcement was made, that the pair was between the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. CULLOM. Who made the announcement?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL].

Mr. CULLOM. The matter is so mixed that I shall withdraw from it.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WALTHALL. By request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] I announced that he was paired with the Senator from Oregon Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. FRYE. Then I do not vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that I was informed by the Senator who sits nearest the Senator from Oregon that he was not paired and he asked me to have him paired, and I did what I have already announced. So I withdraw from any further connection with the matter.

Mr. FRYE. I will inquire whether or not a pair was announced with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. FRYE. The Chair will have to consult the Reporter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have to consult the Reporter to be sure.

Mr. FRYE. The Reporter says there was none. Then I will pair the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], who is in favor of the bill, with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not in favor of it.

Mr. FRYE. I will not try any further. I will not vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I met the Senator from Pennsylvania in the corridor awhile ago and he asked me to say that he was paired on this bill. I am not prepared to say how he would vote, but I understand he has been voting in favor of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was told that he was against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The result of the roll-call will be announced.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—31.

So the bill was passed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11074) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish streets and avenues in the county of Washington, District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PALMER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c.; which was ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the resolution reported by me this morning from the Committee on Rules, authorizing that committee to sit during the recess of Congress be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following order:

Ordered, That the Senate hereafter meet at 11 o'clock in the morning until otherwise ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio ask for action upon the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. If there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

MAILING OF LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 260) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in section 1, line 18, after the words "two hundred" to insert "nor more than one thousand;" so as to read:

Any person engaged in publishing a newspaper, as owner or part owner, proprietor, general manager, or superintending agent, president, or other officer connected therewith, and any person engaged in conducting a lottery, as owner or part owner, and any person connected therewith as superintendent, manager, agent, or in any other capacity, violating the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine for each offense of not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, with costs of prosecution, or imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There was another amendment in section 2, line 2, inserting the word "knowingly."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. It seems to me that the only effect of this bill will be to transfer from the mails to the express business of the country this entire class of advertisements. It will not affect the carrying or the distribution of such advertisements, and it will not affect the lottery business, so far as I can see, to any extent, or in any way except to drive from the United States mail all advertisements of a lottery, and they will be carried and distributed by express companies instead. Exactly why we should adopt a policy such as that is what I am unable to comprehend or perceive.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the passage of this bill should induce such an effect as the Senator from Tennessee seems to fear, there need but one other step be taken to remedy that result, and that will be to apply the same character of provisions and penal sanctions to the carrying over any of the postal roads of the United States such advertisements as we apply to carrying them through the mails; and when that time comes I shall be prepared, as I hope the Senate will be prepared, to apply the same remedy to that evil that we now seek to apply in the present case.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In section 1, line 8, after the word "advertisement," I move to strike out the words "or other notice;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful to convey by mail, or to deposit or cause to be deposited in a post-office, railway postal car, letter-box, or other receptacle for mail-matter, or to deliver to a letter-carrier or other employé of the postal service, to be sent by mail, any newspaper, pamphlet, or other publication containing or having printed therein an advertisement of a lottery, or any agency thereof, or any notice, report, or statement of any drawing of a lottery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Many newspapers may speak of A. B. drawing a prize, without any intention except as a matter of information, and yet if they should happen to notice that one of the neighbors had drawn a prize, under the provisions of the bill, the owner of that paper would be subject to the fine imposed by it. I think that is a harsh measure.

The owner of a newspaper can not at all times look at everything that goes in his paper. He is compelled to depend upon somebody for local news, and he may have no chance whatever to examine it, and such a notice might slip into the paper without his knowledge, without his consent. A mere notice is different from receiving an advertisement for which he is paid.

Therefore I hope the words "or other notice" before the words "of a lottery" may be stricken out.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have two answers for the Senator from Delaware. First, the notices he has referred to do not go in accidentally, but are of the character of an advertisement in common use for the purpose of inducing unsuspecting persons to purchase lottery tickets.

In the second place, the Senator has answered his own objection. He says that these things are done sometimes without knowledge, without any intent. The amendment we have adopted to the second section says that the person becoming amenable to the penal sanctions of this bill must have done the thing knowingly.

Therefore either answer is sufficient to meet the objection made by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to a provision in the bill which I think he will agree with me is contrary to what has now become the settled policy of the Senate, and that is in no instance to have a minimum punishment in any penal statute. Ever since I have been in the Senate, whenever the attention of the Senate has been called to the matter, and bills have been reported containing a minimum punishment, it has been stricken out, except in one case which stood on its own exceptional reasons.

Here the sending through the mails of a newspaper containing a lottery advertisement, or a statement of a drawing of a lottery, must be punished by an imprisonment of not less than thirty days or a fine of not less than $200, with costs, or both. It is quite possible that some person might put in a newspaper an announcement that somebody had drawn a large prize in a lottery or an account of a raffle at a church fair without any criminal intent.

I see the bill not only has a minimum punishment but in regard to the matter of a fine it has no maximum; the court can impose a fine of $100,000, or $1,000,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There has been an amendment made. Will the Secretary please read the amendment made in reference to the penalty.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Shall be liable to a fine for each offense of not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars.

Mr. HOAR. How about imprisonment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The imprisonment clause stands as reported.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator to consent to amend the bill by striking out the words "not less than," leaving it a fine of not more than the amount fixed and imprisonment of not more than the time fixed, and to have no minimum at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is an amendment pending, moved by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. HOAR. The Chair called for further amendments expressly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did so inadvertently.

Mr. HOAR. I thought that amendment was withdrawn. I was misled by the Chair.

FISHING RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg leave at this time to submit a report for the information of the Senate from the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate upon what is known as the fisheries matter, Senate bill 3173, and I ask that it may be read. It is a report for information and not for the action of the Senate, but I think it comes within the privileged order.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator to have it printed in the RECORD without being read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I want to have it read for the information of the Senate and some other people who are here now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the Senate of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on their disagreeing on the amendments proposed by the House to the bill (S. 3173) respecting the fisheries respectfully report that the bill passed the Senate on the 24th day of January, 1887, and on the 23d of February was returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment striking out the whole of the Senate bill and proposing one entire House amendment in its place.

On the 24th the bill was laid before the Senate and the House amendment was disagreed to, and a committee of conference asked and the papers ordered to be printed.

On the 25th instant the House agreed to the conference, and on the 26th the managers on the part of the House met the Senate managers in the afternoon of that day, and the differences in the views of the two Houses fully discussed. The House conferees did not object to the substance of any part of the bill as it passed the Senate so far as it goes, but the first part of the first section of the House amendment undertakes to restate the enumeration of the cases of injuries mentioned in the Senate bill by entirely dropping the classifications or groups of vessels made in the Senate bill and to bring all vessels of the United States of whatever character or class within one definition.

The ground on which the Senate bill went in this respect was that United States fishing vessels purely had their rights regulated and measured by the treaty of 1818, as having the absolute right of fishing inshore in certain ports of the marine territories of the British Dominions in North America and being prohibited from fishing in other ports, but still having the right to enter those other waters for the purposes enumerated in the treaty and not to be abused with a view to fishing in prohibited waters.

The second classification of United States vessels made in the Senate bill covered precisely the same vessels but having also a commercial character obtained by having not only a license to fish, but also under the laws of the United States a permit to touch and trade in foreign ports, and which, therefore, in their character as trading vessels would not, as it was thought, be under the prohibitory provisions of the fishery treaty of 1818.

The third classification covered all other vessels of the United States not falling within the two preceding classes. It was thought by the Senate in passing the bill in that form that a more clear understanding could be had of its application and enforcement than if all the vessels had been massed under one description. The Senate bill then proceeded to provide for cases not merely of the denial of treaty rights to purely fishing vessels, or the denial of lawful trading rights to fishing vessels otherwise to touch and trade, or lawful rights to purely trading vessels, but to include also unjust vexation and harassment as well as exclusion from rights to trade accorded to the vessels of the most favored nation.

The House amendment applicable to the whole of this part of the subject purports to provide for the cases of vessels of the United States which "are denied in the ports or territorial waters of the British dominions in North America rights to which such vessels are entitled by treaty or by the law of nations, or are denied the comity of treatment or the reasonable privileges usually accorded between neighboring and friendly nations."

It is, with great respect to the House of Representatives, thought by the Senate managers of the conference that this provision is not nearly so adequate to the condition of affairs as the provisions of the Senate bill, which have been already described. There is no treaty in existence between the United States and Her Majesty's Government on the subject of the treatment of American vessels in British North American waters or ports other than the provisions already referred to concerning purely fishing vessels and contained in the treaty of 1818, with possibly an exception as it respects one or two particular ports, and with the exception of such provisions as are contained in the treaty of 1871, which provisions in this last-named treaty are in those respects not applicable to the now existing difficulties.

What positive rights "the law of nations" mentioned in the House amendment United States vessels entering British North American waters are entitled to the Senate managers think it would be somewhat difficult to define or explain. For it is believed by what is called the "law of nations" no vessel of the United States would have a right to enter British waters at all other than under an implied and tacit consent of the sovereign of that country, which could, at any moment, be positively withdrawn consistently with the understood sovereign rights of all nations. The Senate managers therefore think that this definition, measured by the law of nations, is really not much more than a definition measured by the will of the British Government so far as exclusion or the regulation of conduct in such waters might happen to go.

The next phrase in the House amendment proposed to take the place of the enumerations and descriptions mentioned in the Senate bill purports to provide for cases in which American vessels "are denied the comity of treatment or the reasonable privileges usually accorded between neighboring and friendly nations."

The Senate managers are of opinion that this phrase, so far as it applies to purely fishing vessels, may go beyond the treaty rights of such vessels as measured by the treaty of 1818. Whether the phrase was intended to include treatment and reasonable privileges secured between neighboring and friendly nations by treaty such as exists in respect of British vessels of her majesty's dominions in Europe in waters of the United States and American vessels in European British waters does not appear to be at all clear. If it be meant to cover such cases, then the provision would be entirely inapplicable to the case in hand. If it be meant to make the test that of the conduct of neighboring and friendly nations in the absence of a treaty concerning the respective rights of their vessels in the waters of the other, then the cases occurring in the last year of the treatment of American vessels in British waters of North America might be considered the standard to which this language would apply, for Great Britain is, in respect of her dominions of North America, a neighboring and, in a public sense, a friendly nation. But if it were taken in general as applied to the general good neighborhood of nations, the standard would probably vary more or less whatever country should be resorted to for finding the measurement of administration in regard to foreign vessels.

But, as has been before stated, the House managers, so far as we can understand, do not appear to find fault with the substance or the essential phraseology of the Senate bill.

The irreconcilable point of difference between the managers on the part of the two Houses is the insistence on the part of the House managers upon adding to the scope of the Senate bill and so going beyond it, the further provision that, in case of injurious treatment to our vessels in British North American waters, it shall be within the competence of the President of the United States to absolutely stop intercourse not only by water but by land, between the people of the United States and the people of the British territories adjacent, thus absolutely cutting off the continuous movement of railway trains from the British provinces to any part of the United States, and in effect reciprocally from the United States to British dominions, either on the northern border of Minnesota, at the river Saint Mary, at Port Huron, at Detroit, at Grosse Isle, at Buffalo, at Niagara Falls, at Rouse's Point, at Highgate, Franklin, Biddeford, Troy, Derby, and Norton, on the northern border of Vermont, and on the northern and eastern borders of Maine, at all of which places it is understood there now exist interior railroad lines crossing the boundaries of the two countries—in some cases operated and practically owned by British subjects, and in other cases operated and practically owned by American citizens.

The Senate managers have felt it to be a duty to decline to go to this extent, and have thought it to be clear that the provisions for the protection of American interests set forth in the Senate bill, and in that part of the House amendment applicable to any British violation of the treaty of 1871, are entirely adequate to the peaceful end in view, and that there is no present justification for reposing in the Executive this further enormous power proposed by the House of Representatives in its amendment, and insisted upon by the House managers.

It seems clear to the Senate managers, and has not been controverted by the House managers, that the things the President is authorized to do by the Senate bill in the cases named are none of them in derogation, either directly or indirectly, of any treaty right, or of the peaceful business intercourse of nations, but that this Government in these respects is absolutely free to act in the manner proposed without being subject to the imputation that it is either in any way infringing the most liberal interpretation of any treaty, or doing any act that nations at peace have not hitherto found themselves from time to time justified in doing, not in a spirit of belligerency, but merely as a matter of countervailing business regulations.

The Senate managers offered to the House managers to add to the Senate bill the provision contained in the House amendment providing that, if there should be any violation of article 29 of the treaty of 1871 on the part of Great Britain, the President should be authorized reciprocally to withdraw from British subjects the benefits of the same article with certain changes of phraseology which it is understood were satisfactory to the House managers.

The Senate managers also expressed their willingness to accede to the third section of the House amendment, although the propriety of its form and substance is open to very considerable question.

The result of the conference, therefore, has been that the House of Representatives, through its managers, not objecting to the Senate bill, but desiring to add a new and enlarged provision to the Senate bill and to adopt measures additional to those mentioned in the Senate bill and not necessarily dependent thereon, and the Senate managers unwilling to go to that extent and so disagreeing to the House proposition, declines to make even the provision that has passed the Senate in respect of the subject of the protection of our fishing and other vessels, and to which the House makes no objection so far as it goes, unless the Senate will consent to make further legislative provisions which it believes to be unwise. It would seem needless to say that such a pretension, made by one of two co-ordinate legislative bodies, is quite untenable.

The essential principle upon which the two Houses have almost universally hitherto acted, and without which no legislation whatever could be accomplished when there was not perfect accord on all points, has been that when either House proposes legislation that is satisfactory to the other so far as it goes, and the other House desires to go further and make affirmative and additional law, if it can not convince its co-ordinate body that it is desirable to go further, the House proposing the affirmative additional legislation must recede. This principle is vitally important to the independence of each House, and so indispensable to the practical legislation of the country that the Senate managers have felt it to be a paramount duty to refuse to accede to this further House proposition, both as unnecessary and unwise and as in derogation of the equal rights of the two bodies.

The Senate managers have felt it to be a duty in this important matter to report this state of things at once to the Senate for its information.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
WM. P. FRYE,
JNO. T. MORGAN.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the report printed not only in the RECORD but in document form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I confess that I am not thoroughly an adept in questions of order, but I submit to the Senate that this report of conferees is not responsive to the duties imposed upon a conference committee, which is simply to report whether there is an agreement or a disagreement. It occurs to me upon hearing the report that it is a partisan argument either upon the part of the Senate or of some party in the country, and it is not in order as the report of a conference committee upon the simple question of agreement or disagreement between the two Houses. It is an arraignment apparently of the action or views of the other branch of Congress. It is an arraignment of the administration of the country. I speak it in plain words. Wherefore, in my judgment, it is not such a report as ought to have been made or as under the rules of the Senate should have been received on matters of disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, my distinguished friend from Tennessee I am sure entirely misapprehends the spirit in which and the purpose for which this report from the servants of the Senate is made. I understand the principles of parliamentary law and of good conduct in differences between the two Houses to be that each House has at all times the right to know the state of discussions between its respective conferees.

Therefore, having had a full discussion of this subject, the Senate managers have thought it to be a duty, as in the same case the House managers will undoubtedly feel it to be a duty to be exercised if they choose, to report to their superior what is the state of the discussion and what is the point of difference between the respective agents of the two Houses.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask him whether he thinks it is politic or wise, in case of a disagreement between the two Houses on a question of foreign policy that we should disclose to our adversary, the foreign government, the reason of the differences between the two Houses?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be an argument in favor of having had this report made and the report to the House and the whole of this business done with closed doors, but it has no application to the question of the strict propriety of the three agents and servants of this body informing it from day to day, if we think it necessary to do so, as to exactly how the matter stands between the two Houses, because I am under the impression that we are equals, that we are all patriotic, that we are desiring to come to an accord, and that the servant of either House ought to inform its principal as soon as it might when matters had come to a definite shape, as to what the condition of affairs was.

It was not, therefore, for any party purpose, which has no place in a discussion of this kind, in the sense in which my friend spoke of it, or for any political purpose, but as doing a simple duty to the body that had confided to my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and to me the duty of conducting this matter of difference between the two Houses, to inform our principal, whose views we thought we were representing, exactly what had taken place in these discussions.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Is this a report of a conference committee?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; it is a report of the Senate managers to their principal as to what they have done and what has come out of it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It is not, therefore, a report of the conference committee, but simply a report of the conferees on the part of the Senate; and I submit that it is an argument instead of a report, and its office, its purpose, is to influence partisan views either in the Senate or in the House, and I submit to the judgment of the Senate that it is not within the office of a committee of conference.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have never supposed that it would be improper for a committee of conference of this body to come into the Senate with a report of progress upon a conference between this and the other House. If the Senate wants no information of the action of its conferees it ought to instruct them never to report until they agree upon something, or to delay any mention of a report that shows a disagreement until somebody else has acted upon the disagreement.

The time of this body is growing short for the present session of Congress. The matter which is brought to the attention of the Senate by this report of the conferees on the part of the Senate is one of great gravity, and I esteem it to be one of the highest and most responsible duties that I have ever had to perform in this body, and one which I discharge with great pleasure, to announce to Great Britain, to the people of the United States, to the whole world that as far as the Senate went in this matter of legislating for the control of our own affairs in connection with the affairs of Great Britain or of the Dominion of Canada the two bodies have substantially agreed, and would have found no difficulty in coming to a final agreement; and then further in announcing that the only difficulty we have found in coming to a final agreement was the apprehension of the Senate conferees that the proposition submitted to us by the other House and insisted upon by their conferees would lead us into belligerent conflict with an existing treaty between the United States and Great Britain.

It is a matter of very great importance to both countries that it should at least be understood that the matured opinion of both Houses of Congress has fixed upon the proposition that we are not intending to leave our own laws in such shape that the President of the United States will be entirely powerless in what is termed retaliatory action between this country and the Dominion of Canada in order to meet the outrages which all confess have been perpetrated upon our property, upon our seamen, and upon our flag.

I should think that the committee of conference would be derelict indeed if they should fail to come forward and to satisfy this country of the practical agreement of the two Houses to the extent we have gone, and leave this matter to be undecided, if it shall remain undecided at the end of this session of Congress, upon a point which is introduced into the discussion, not by the Senate, but by the House of Representatives.

If we had chosen to have said nothing about this matter, or if we had chosen to have veiled ourselves in a secret session in making our report, the people of Great Britain would have been informed by our delinquency in this particular that there was such a disagreement of American sentiment between the two Houses of Congress as that they would have rather an invitation and an encourgement to go along hereafter to perpetrate upon our commerce and upon our fishermen, upon our ships of every class, the same wrong and injustice that they have been doing in the past.

In the debate which occurred on this question in the Senate great emphasis was placed by many Senators upon the fact that if we chose to leave this question in doubt and difficulty, as it is and has been, without any legislative intervention, we should be very apt to find that our fishermen would resort to the right of personal self-defense against the aggressions of the British people upon the waters of the high seas and elsewhere, to which it is not necessary now that I should make any further specific reference, for the facts are known everywhere, and are put in all the reports that have come to either House of Congress upon this question.

More than that, the Government of the United States through its minister at Great Britain and through its Secretary of State here, and through the message of its President, has taken upon this question very high and very firm ground. They have vindicated, so far as they were able to do without our assistance, the rights of our fishermen in the waters of the British dominion. They have informed them of what their rights are in the most emphatic and decided manner, and I take it that the people of the United States, or indeed the people of any country that is self-respecting, being thus informed by the highest authorities in their own land of what are their rights and their privileges, finding that their Government has been delinquent in providing for them a suitable means of redress, would take redress into their own hands. The danger of involving this country in a war with Great Britain has consisted more emphatically in that state of facts than in any other which has been suggested in all the debate that has occurred in either House upon this question.

It rests with Congress to make this provision of law, for it must be remembered, as is stated in the report of the Senate conferees, that we have by treaty no commercial relations with the British dominions on this continent except in respect of our rights of fishery. All of the rights of commerce subsisting between the United States and Canada are rights that depend upon their statutes and upon our statutes. There is no agreement between us in respect of any of these rights except in one particular, and that is under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of Washington, in which the right of the transit of goods in bond, without the payment of duty, through the country on either side to the other is secured. These are the only treaty rights we have except some in regard to the transportation of vessels through the canals of the respective parties.

Under the circumstances it became the duty of the Senate, through its conferees, as the Senate had before done by a solemn vote against the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], to consider the question whether the proposition brought forward by the other House was a violation of that treaty, or whether it might be considered as a threat of the violation of that treaty, and whether we should give our sanction to that proposition by concurring in the amendment suggested by the House of Representatives. Your committee, so far as it has been instructed, has been unable to do what the other House required on this question without overruling the action of the Senate taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

So I think the course of the committee in bringing this subject to the attention of the Senate rises very far above partisan grounds, and I congratulate the Senate, the country, and the committee upon the fact that they are able to overlook the paltry consideration of party influence in regard to a matter of such grave national importance as this.

It may not suit everybody. It has been intimated, if I understood the intimation of the Senator from Tennessee, that the administration has a different view of this question, and that the view of the administration has been expressed in the action of the other House. How that honorable Senator came to be informed of the views of the administration, I am not aware. I am a friend of the administration, as well as himself, and while I am a far humbler supporter of it perhaps than he is, yet the attitude I hold to these questions as the oldest Democrat in position at least upon the Committee on Foreign Relations, would have entitled me to the information of which the Senator speaks so confidently about the position of the administration.

Can it be the position of the administration that after we have given the President the power to suspend the introduction of fresh fish, salt fish, or any other product of said dominions, any other goods coming from said dominions to the United States, thereby covering every product of Canada and covering all the goods that may come into Canada from any foreign country—after we have put it in the power of the President of the United States to absolutely suspend the introduction of all these goods, whether wheat from the West, or cattle from the valley of the Red River, or copper from the Lake Superior country, or lumber along the whole line, or petroleum, or any Canadian manufacture, or any other thing, hay, corn, or what not—after we have given the President the power to suspend the introduction of all these articles, not fish merely but all the productions of the dominion, can it be possible, I ask, that the administration is not willing to accept that much power, but must have the power also to prohibit intercourse between the people of the United States and the people of Canada?

I do not know of any act of legislation or any act of diplomacy or any other governmental act that can be named which is just as near the border line of belligerency as that of prohibiting intercourse and communication between the people of the two countries. How long, let me ask the honorable Senator from Tennessee, would he expect to be able to maintain a proclamation of that sort in this country? Proclaim non-intercourse between father and son, mother and daughter, families, friends, merchants, traders, railroad owners, railroad officers and employés, between the Dominion of Canada and the United States as a measure of retaliation because of injury done to our fisheries or to anything else, and how long can you, with the approval of your own people, sustain a position so strenuous, so dangerous, and so belligerent as that? Your own people would desert you. You could not put into the hands of Great Britain a greater or a higher power than merely to make a proclamation in this country that the best means to prevent aggressions upon our shipping interests or upon our fishing interests would be to proclaim absolute non-intercourse, personal non-intercourse, between the people of Canada and the people of the United States. You could not sustain it three months; I doubt if you could sustain it three weeks, in the absence of actual hostilities, upon your mere proclamation.

If we would give the President just that power and no more, let me ask you, is there a man on the floor of the Senate who would be willing to see the President of the United States issue a proclamation declaring non-intercourse between the people of Canada and the people of the United States, and would he expect the President to be sustained for three months at a time in the endeavor to maintain a situation of that kind?

If the honorable Senator from Tennessee does in fact represent the administration upon this question, let me say to him that he is very far in front of any ground that I have taken or can take.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will my friend from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I spoke from my own impulses. I represent no one. I have no idea what are the views of the administration, but as an American citizen I said that whatever were our rights, whatever were our just demands, we should present them with a united front and not with any partisan differences to our adversaries. In that view I jealously regarded the report of the Senate conferees, inasmuch as if we accepted it it was a criticism upon the action of the immediate representatives of the people of this country. I may say to my friend from Alabama that wherever the interest or the honor of any portion of our Government is involved, I am in favor of presenting a united front. Believing as I do, from what I have seen, that this administration is jealous to preserve the rights of each section and each individual of this country, I have been willing to support its endeavors.

Mr. MORGAN. If a plain, fair, honest, sincere presentation of the facts constituting the difference between the committees of the two Houses is a criticism upon the House of Representatives, then the House deserve it; but it was intended in no such spirit, and there is not one word of criticism in this report. There is an analysis of the House bill, not going as far as we might have gone if we had chosen to do so, to the effect of presenting the points of difference between the two conference committees. That is as far as this report goes.

So far as the House of Representatives are concerned, as claiming for themselves, or so far as it is claimed for them by anybody else, that they are the more immediate representatives of the people of this country than the Senate, I deny it. They are not so in heart or in sentiment. They are not so in any other respect. The Constitution of this country makes the Senate of the United States in every respect as clearly the guardian of the rights of all the people and as immediately intrusted with that guardianship as the House of Representatives. So I deny that "soft impeachment," and inasmuch as it is brought here for the purpose, it seems to me, of muzzling the free action of a committee of conference of this body, I deny the right of the House of Representatives or of anybody to prevent a conference committee of this Senate from bringing forward the facts concerning the conference and presenting them for the information of this body.

The Senator from Tennessee says he is not the representative of the administration. I am very glad to know that. He says he spoke from his own impulses. Mr. President, this is not a time to speak from impulse; it is a time to speak from reason, from judgment, from facts. Whatever impulses the honorable Senator might have been moved by, it appears to me were rather those of partisanship than of statesmanship. I will not abate my claim to be as strong a Democrat as he is. I have been educated in the doctrines of the Democratic party, and I would not look over my little record here as a Senator on this floor or elsewhere in my adherence to the principles of the Democratic party with any regret; but I am not its slave. It is true I wear no man's collar; and oftentimes I find myself compelled to differ from the action of what are called Democrats in these modern times. I do not claim that I am a representative of the Democratic party by any means, or of an administration that is a Democratic administration; but I claim that I have that regard for the people of this country which leads me always in every political act of my life, in every act of legislation, to regard the people of this country, individually and collectively, as under the guardianship of the men who are to enact its laws whether in the Senate or in the House of Representatives.

Now, I put the question again, would the Senators who stickle so much, it appears, for giving power to the President of the United States to proclaim non-intercourse between this country and Canada, so that no man, woman, or child, without committing treason, if you please, or violating the criminal laws of the land, should travel back and forth across that border—would these Senators be willing to strike out of the bill passed by the Senate the words which I will read:

> And also to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States.

And insert in lieu thereof a provision that the President shall be authorized to proclaim that there shall be non-intercourse between the people of Canada and the people of the United States? The Senate has felt that it has gone as far as was necessary to give the President power on this occasion. It has kept itself within the limitations of this subject. It has adapted its legislation to the peculiar character of the grievances of which it complained and which we have only the opportunity of meeting by countervailing legislation. That is all that we have done. The House of Representatives agrees with us as far as we have gone, and says substantially: "We will not do what you have done, and what we agree was right to be done, unless you go further and give us more power."

If the power that we give to the President of the United States is inadequate, it will be quite easy to get Congress together on any emergency and give him more power. But the power that is demanded here as the one supreme thing which it appears is not to be given up, is the power to proceed to the very last line of friendly action towards Great Britain, the power next to which only can come the loading of your guns and the array of your men under arms.

I have not engaged in this debate for the purpose of bragging or of bully-ragging any country or any people. I have gone step by step upon serious conviction, in which, according to the published utterances and dispatches of our minister abroad to Great Britain and of the State Department here, we have all been sustained. The emergency has been placed upon the country as one that was urgent, yes, emergent, for legislation, not rash legislation, not harsh or belligerent legislation, but that sort of law-making which concerns the rights of the people of the United States, as we must do, as it is left to us to do, because we have no treaty engagements to regulate these rights with the Dominion of Canada. In all that I have had to do with this I have considered only the necessity of placing in the hands of the President of the United States power enough to meet the occasion and the emergency, and if more than that is demanded I shall question the motives of the demand, and I will not vote it.

MAILING OF LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the matter before the Senate is the bill in regard to lottery advertisements.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 260) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same, is pending before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] to the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I desire that that may be reported again.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I am satisfied that this bill can not become a law, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. Then I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that a modification be accepted which I propose, that the fine for each offense shall be not more than $1,000 and imprisonment not more than one year, striking out the minimum.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. While I can not accept that on behalf of the committee, as I am representing their report, still I have no personal objection to it. Notwithstanding both minimum and maximum penalties are provided in the legislation of which this is to be promotive, I will not resist the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 18 of section 1, after the word "not," it is proposed to strike out "less than two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "more than one thousand;" and in line 19, after the word "not," to strike out "less than thirty days nor;" so as to read:

> Any person engaged in publishing a newspaper, as owner or part owner, proprietor, general manager, or superintending agent, president, or other officer connected therewith, and any person engaged in conducting a lottery, as owner or part owner, and any person connected therewith as superintendent, manager, agent, or in any other capacity, violating the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine for each offense of not more than $1,000, with costs of prosecution, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senate will allow this bill to be disposed of.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We can get a vote on the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I withdraw the motion for the present

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HOAR. Has the amendment proposed in the second section, inserting the word "knowingly," been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was previously adopted, and it has now been concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I understand he is in favor of this bill. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no doubt he would vote "yea," I will say to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], but I learn from his colleague that he would vote "yea" if present, and, as I would vote "yea" if I were not paired, I cast my vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] for the rest of the evening. I withdraw my vote. I do not know how he would vote if present.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—38.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] reported back to-day from the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia. I am authorized by the committee to submit a few additional sections to the bill, and I ask that they be received and printed with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 1, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 28, 1887.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

I nominate James M. Adams, of Yakima, Wash., to be register of the land office at Spokane Falls, Wash., vice James M. Armstrong, resigned.

I withdraw the nomination of James M. Adams for said office, which was sent to the Senate December 13, 1886, reading "vice James M. Armstrong, suspended."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 28, 1887.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE SUPREME COURT NEW MEXICO.

Reuben A. Reeves, of Palestine, Tex., to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico, under a law of Congress providing an additional judge for said Territory, approved February 28, 1887.

RECORDER OF DEEDS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

James M. Trotter, of Massachusetts, to be recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia, vice Frederick Douglass, resigned, James C. Matthews having been heretofore nominated to said office and rejected by the Senate.

THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Henry R. Harris, of Georgia, to be Third Assistant Postmaster-General, vice Abraham D. Hazen, resigned, and whose resignation has been accepted to take effect on the 31st day of March, 1887.

MILITARY PROMOTIONS.

Ninth Regiment of Cavalry.

Second Lieut. John F. McBlain, to be first lieutenant, February 11, 1887, vice Conline, promoted.

This nomination is accompanied by a statement from the Secretary of War, the findings of a court-martial before which the said John F. McBlain was tried, showing the disapproval by the department commander of the sentence of said court, and also by an opinion of the Acting Judge-Advocate-General, showing the present position of the said McBlain as related to said trial and sentence.

He has been once rejected by the Senate upon his nomination for promotion; but a vacancy having again occurred in the rank next above him, and he still retaining a rank in his company which, notwithstanding such court-martial and previous rejection, apparently makes it my duty, under the law and Army regulations, to nominate him for such vacancy, his name is again submitted to the Senate for its action.

Second Regiment of Infantry.

First Lieut. Luther S. Ames, to be captain, February 27, 1887, vice Cook, promoted to the Thirteenth Infantry.

Second Lieut. Abner Pickering, to be first lieutenant February 27, 1887, vice Amos, promoted.

Thirteenth Regiment of Infantry.

Capt. Henry C. Cook, Second Infantry, to be major, February 27, 1887, vice Vance, deceased.

Thomas S. Murphy, to be postmaster at Zanesville, in the county of Muskingum and State of Ohio, in the place of William S. Harlan, whose commission expires February 28, 1887.

William H. Krautz, to be postmaster at Honesdale, in the county of Wayne and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Henry J. Tarble, whose commission expires March 2, 1887.

Connally T. Litchfield, to be postmaster at Abingdon, in the county of Washington and State of Virginia, in the place of Jackson M. Rose, whose commission expires March 2, 1887.

Frank L. Clark, to be postmaster at Augusta, in the county of Eau Claire and State of Wisconsin, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President from and after October 1, 1886, Joseph B. Button, who was confirmed December 20, 1886, not having been commissioned.

William J. Brewster, to be postmaster at Groton, in the county of Brown and Territory of Dakota, in the place of Daniel B. Johns, resigned.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate February 28, 1887.

POSTMASTER.

William W. Armstrong, to be postmaster at Cleveland, in the county of Cuyahoga and State of Ohio.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 28, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remaining portion of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading, and the Journal was then approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill 6976, entitled "An act to erect a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio."

It is represented in support of this bill that Portsmouth by its last census had a population of 11,321, and that it contains at present not less than 15,000 inhabitants; that it is a place of considerable manufacturing and commercial importance, and that there is no public building for the transaction of the business of the General Government nearer than Columbus or Cincinnati, both about 100 miles distant.

It is further stated in a communication from the promoter of this bill that "there is not a Federal public building in the State of Ohio east of the line drawn on the accompanying map from Cleveland through Columbus to Cincinnati; and when wealth and population and the needs of the public service are considered, the distribution of public buildings in the State is an unfair one."

Here is disclosed a theory of expenditure for public buildings which I can hardly think should be adopted. If an application for the erection of such a building is to be determined by the distance between its proposed location and another public building, or upon the allegation that a certain division of a State is without a Government building, or that the distribution of these buildings in a particular State is unfair, we shall rapidly be led to an entire disregard of the considerations of necessity and public need which it seems to me should alone justify the expenditure of public funds for such a purpose.

The care and protection which the Government owes to the people do not embrace the grant of public buildings to decorate thriving and prosperous cities and villages, nor should such buildings be erected upon any principle of fair distribution among localities.

The Government is not an almoner of gifts among the people, but an instrumentality by which the people's affairs should be conducted upon business principles, regulated by the public needs.

Applying these principles to the case embraced in the bill under consideration we find that at Portsmouth there is a post-office and an internal-revenue collector's office, for which the Government should provide.

It is represented that the quarters now furnished for these offices are inadequate and that more spacious rooms are desirable. In the post-office there are six employés, and the collector of internal revenue has five assistants. The annual rent paid for both these offices is $600.

Upon these facts the proposition is to expend $60,000 for a building to accommodate these offices, entailing after its completion quite a large sum annually for its care and superintendence.

Though the sum of $60,000 is the limit fixed for the cost of this building, if it should be completed for this sum it would be an exception to the rule in such cases; and if it is absolutely impossible to do the public business in the quarters now occupied by these offices, which does not appear to be claimed, there can be no difficulty in securing in this enterprising city adequate accommodations at a rent not largely in excess of that at present paid.

Upon the whole it does not appear as a business proposition that the building proposed should be undertaken.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 26, 1887.

SITTING BULL'S BAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior, of an appropriation for the subsistence of the remainder of Sitting Bull's band of Indians for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES FOR PLATES AND DRAWINGS, PATENT OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to an inquiry by the House of Representatives, a letter from the Commissioner of Patents in relation to expenditures and contracts for plates and copies of drawings published by the Bureau of Patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 26, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 11th instant, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives what sums have been annually paid for the past five years, and to whom, for photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Patent Office Official Gazette, and for photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies; if contracts have been made therefore or advertised to be let to the lowest bidder; also, whether bids have been invited from or permitted to parties for such work outside the city of Washington; also, whether any part of said work has ever been done outside of the city of Washington, and if any parties either in or outside of the city of Washington have ever undertaken or contracted to execute any part of said work and failed to fulfill their undertakings; and if there ever have been such failing contractors, who they are, and the cause of such failure; and whether there are good and sufficient reasons for confining the performance of said work to the city of Washington, and, if so, state what those reasons are."

In response thereto, I transmit a letter from the Commissioner of Patents to this Department, under date of the 23d instant, containing the desired information.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, February 23, 1887.

SIR: In response to your reference of the 14th instant to me of House Resolution No. 100, relating to the photolithographic work of this office, I respectfully submit the following statement:

First. The sums "annually paid for the past five years," and the persons to whom so paid "for photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Patent Office Official Gazette," are respectively as follows:

For the first half of the calendar year 1882, to J. R. Osgood & Co., of Boston, Mass., edition of 5,000 copies, $6.75 per page, the sum of $12,541.50.

For the months of July and August, 1882, to the same parties, an edition of 6,000 copies, at $8.10 per page, the sum of $5,783.40.

From the 1st day of September, 1882, to the 1st day of January, 1883, to Norris Peters, of Washington, D. C., edition of 6,000 copies, at $7.25 per page, the sum of $9,889.

Whole amount so paid J. R. Osgood & Co., during the year 1882, $18,324.90.

Whole amount so paid Norris Peters, during the year 1882, $9,889.

Aggregate amount paid for this work during the year 1882 (during which the number of patents and reissues was 19,267), $28,213.90.

For the calendar year 1883, paid Norris Peters, of Washington, D. C., for edition of 6,000 copies, at $7.25 per page, the sum of $34,220. (Number of patents and reissues during the year 1883, 22,383.)

For the first half of the calendar year 1884, paid Norris Peters, of Washington, D. C., edition of 6,000 copies, at $7.25 per page, the sum of $17,008.50.

For the last half of the calendar year 1884, to same party, edition of 6,500 copies, at $7.86 per page, the sum of $17,512.08.

Whole amount so paid for this work for the calendar year 1884, $34,520.58. (Number of patents and reissues during 1884, 20,413.)

For the first half of the calendar 1885, paid Norris Peters, of Washington, D. C., for edition of 6,500 copies, at $7.86 per page, the sum of $22,102.32.

For the last half of calendar year 1885, paid to same party, same number of copies, at $7.45 per page, the sum of $22,731.10.

Whole amount paid during calendar year 1885, $44,833.40. (Number of patents and reissues during 1885, 24,233.)

For calendar year 1886, paid Norris Peters, of Washington, D. C., for edition of 6,500 copies, at $7.45 per page, the sum of $41,898.70. (Number of patents and reissues during 1886, 22,508.)

Second. The sums "annually paid for the past five years," and the persons to whom so paid, for "photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies," are respectively as follows:

For the calendar year 1882, paid Norris Peters, of Washington, D. C., for 3 copies of each sheet on Whatman's paper, 3 cents each; 152 copies plain paper, 1 cent each; for designs, $1 for 12 copies; for exhausted copies, 1 cent per sheet; for library edition, 14½ mills per page; the total sum of $54,453.91.

For the calendar year 1883, paid the same party at the same rates, $66,731.96.

For the calendar year 1884, paid the same party at the same rates, $75,602.56.

For the first half of the calendar year 1885, paid Norris Peters, at the same rates, $39,434.96.

For one issue first week in July, 1885, paid Bell Brothers, of Washington, D. C., at same rates, $1,232.99.

For the last half of the calendar year 1885, paid Norris Peters, at the same rates, except for the library edition, for which was paid 14 instead of 14½ mills per page, $44,629.

Total sum paid Mr. Peters during such calendar year 1885, $84,063.96.

Aggregate sum paid during such calendar year 1885, $85,296.95.

For the calendar year 1886, paid Norris Peters, of Washington, D. C., at same rates as were paid during the last half of 1885, $86,786.75.

Third. All the foregoing work has been done upon and in pursuance of contracts which "have been made therefor."

Fourth. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, the following bids for preparing plates for the Official Gazette were received from parties outside of this city:

The Graphic Company of New York, $10.08 per page.

The American Photolithographic Company of New York, $9.50 or $8.75 per page, according to paper used.

The Heliotype Printing Company of Boston, Mass., $7.15 per page.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882:

The Graphic Company of New York, $9.13.

The American Photolithographic Company of New York, $8.50.

J. R. Osgood & Co., of Boston, Mass., $6.75.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883:

The Heliographic Art Publishing Company of New York, $11.50.

The Graphic Company of New York, $9.50.

The American Photolithographic Company of New York, $7.75.

J. R. Osgood & Co., of Boston, $7.45.

I am not advised of any other formal bids having been made by parties outside of Washington.

Fifth. Toward the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, the present Commissioner invited informal propositions relating to the production of all this work from three different firms in the city of New York.

Sixth. The Official Gazette has been reproduced "outside of the city of Washington," as follows:

From January 1, 1872, to June 30, 1874, by the American Photolithographic Company of New York.

From July 1, 1874, to June 30, 1876, by J. R. Osgood & Co., of Boston, Mass.

From July 1, 1876, to June 30, 1880, by the Graphic Company of New York.

From July 1, 1880, to September 1, 1882, by the Heliotype Company of Boston, Mass.

Seventh. The current issues have been reproduced "outside the city of Washington," as follows:

From July 1, 1871, to June 30, 1874, by the American Photolithographic Company of New York.

From July 1, 1874, to June 30, 1875, by the Graphic Company of New York.

From October 3, 1876, to November 29, 1876, by Osgood & Co., of Boston, Mass.

From November 29, 1876, to January 1, 1877, by the Graphic Company of New York.

Eighth. In relation to the inquiry as to whether "any parties either in or outside of the city of Washington have ever undertaken or contracted to execute any part of said work and failed to fulfill their undertaking, and, if so, who they are and the cause of such failure," I invite attention to the following: On the 9th day of May, 1879, a letter was referred by the Secretary of the Interior to the Commissioner of Patents, of which letter the following is a copy:

"COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS, UNITED STATES SENATE,
"Washington, D. C., May 9, 1879.

"SIR: Will you please furnish, for use of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, as soon as practicable, such data as may be readily available upon the subject of photolithographing for the Patent Office, especially such as relates to former experiments in having the work done outside of this city, and the results of such experiments?

"Yours, truly,

"THOMAS P. CLEAVES, Clerk.

"Hon. CARL SCHURZ,
"Secretary of the Interior."

On the following day the Commissioner of Patents reported to the Secretary of the Interior as follows:

"In response to your request of the 9th instant, the following data is submitted, giving some of the reasons why the work of photolithographing the weekly issues of patents should be done in the city of Washington:

"First. The drawings of the weekly issues of patents are numbered, dated, &c., prior to to their date, in anticipation of issuance, to enable the office to receive and examine proofs of drawings and specifications, print copies, correct errors, print Official Gazette, &c., so that on the date of a patent the same are ready for sale and delivery.

"Second. The drawings from which reproductions are made (as delivered to contractors) are passed cases only; therefore are pending applications and not patents. The rules of the office are imperative that no information relative thereto shall be given to unauthorized parties. Evidently if the work were performed outside of the city great facilities would be afforded for obtaining such information as would imperil the interest of inventors.

"Third. The necessity of accessibility for reference at any moment and at all times is imperative for the reconsideration of examiners' actions and comparisons with proofs of specifications.

"Fourth. A serious objection is that correction of errors, as suggested on rejected proofs of drawings, can not be made without comparison with the original drawings.

"Fifth. These drawings should not leave the city, as they are the only official record, until reproduced, in existence, and if damaged or destroyed could not be replaced without great loss to inventors and the office.

"Sixth. That in the limited time (namely, one and one-half days from the delivery of drawings to contractors) for the receipt of proof-sheet, it would be impossible to perform the work elsewhere.

"Seventh. That the original drawings from which examinations for patents are made would have to be retained from their proper folios at least one month after the date of the patents for the reproduction of the quarto-page or library edition, thus rendering the issuing of defective patents possible.

"Eighth. In order to issue the Official Gazette with even date of issue of patents, it is imperative that the proofs of drawings should be available within the specified time, as the Gazette is reproduced from said proof-sheets.

"The experiment has been twice tried of having this class of work done in other places since September, 1876, and in both cases the delay in receipt of copies andretarding of the office work necessitated the annulling of the contracts. It caused endless annoyance and loss to inventors, attorneys, and the office, and a corresponding decrease in money receipts for copies by the office.

"The photolithographic reproduction of drawings of weekly issues of patents has been performed in this city ever since 1869, with the exception of two years and three months, when the negatives were made here. The office furnished a room free of cost, constructed skylights, &c., for the use of the contractors.

"The American Photolithograph Company of New York was the first company outside of Washington that received a contract for this class of work. A brief synopsis of a memorandum relative thereto, dated September 18, 1876, is submitted:

"'The greatest delay occurred in the retention of the drawings for the quarto-page edition, the contractors failing in time. In some instances the drawings were retained from the office folios for two or three months after the issuance of the patents, thus endangering the interests of inventors by the liability of the office granting defective patents.'

"Complaints naturally arose of the delay in the general work of the office by such retention, and especially in the withholding of patents from issue, many being held for weeks after their regular date of issue, awaiting correct copies of the drawings, which had to be sent from New York.

"The second attempt to let this work outside the city was in September, 1876, a contract having been made with Osgood & Co., of Boston, Mass.

"On the 17th of October, 1876, the following report was furnished relative to their work:

"PATENT OFFICE, October 17, 1876.

"SIR: We have the honor, respectfully, to report in regard to the current drawings under the Osgood contract.

"Out of 251 cases in issue of October 10, 1876, embracing about the same number of drawings proofs of 129 sheets of drawings have been received. These proofs came in 4 lots. Of the first 3 lots, making 90 drawings, but 2 were accepted by the proof-readers. Of the last lot of 38 drawings, 21 are accepted and 17 rejected.

"The last lot of drawings above referred to was accompanied by a letter from Osgood & Co. The drawings were thus evidently prepared with care after knowledge of former rejections.

"Under the contract the office had a right to demand the full number of 150 printed copies of the drawings before this date, though it is fair to say that this part of the contract has never been very rigidly insisted on. The advance proof, however, is imperatively required, and, averaging the time, has all been due four days, instead of which we have proof in but little more than half the cases, and only twenty-three cases are accepted, less than 10 per cent. of the whole issue. The work of October 17 should have been in hand five days ago, but was stopped owing to the unsatisfactory character of the drawings of October 10.

"The work of Osgood & Co. is very inferior, as will be seen by examination of the proofs submitted. There is a general tendency to rottenness or raggedness of lines. Some of the lines, it will be observed, thicken instead of reducing under the camera. Where the work is at all close there is a tendency to fill up, and shaded portions appear in blotches. The shading on cylindrical parts looks crowded. Many of the clearest lines are entirely broken.

"As a whole the work is much inferior to any which has been received by the office under former contracts, and in large proportion of cases the reproductions can not be certified to as true copies of the originals.

"Respectfully,

"A. A. YEATMAN.
"W. A. BARTLETT.

"Hon. R. H. DUELL,
"Commissioner of Patents.

"On the 29th of November, 1876, their contract was annulled, as see:

"PATENT OFFICE, November 29, 1876.

"It is hereby ordered that the contract for photolithographic work between James R. Osgood & Co., of the first part, and the United States, by R. H. Duell, of the second part, dated the 8th day of September, 1876, be annulled and considered of no effect from and after this date, said party of the first part having failed to comply with the terms of the contract as to quality of work and time of its delivery.

"R. H. DUELL, Commissioner.

"Approved.

"Z. CHANDLER.

"In view of above, the Graphic Company, being the next lowest bidders, were addressed as follows:

"NOVEMBER 29, 1876.

"GENTLEMEN: The firm of Osgood & Co. having failed to comply with the terms of their agreement in regard to time and delivery of their work, their contract for printing current and one-quarter page work has been annulled.

"If you can undertake to do the work at once on the usual conditions as set forth in office circular of August 15, your bid of August 31 will be accepted.

"MANAGERS OF THE GRAPHIC COMPANY.

"The said company failing in time and quality of work, their contract was also annulled, as see:

"DECEMBER 13, 1876.

"GENTLEMEN: As you were before notified, the Secretary of the Interior has decided that the contract for current work must be relet, and advertisements to that effect have been issued.

"I am informed that a large proportion of the cases on which you are at present at work are not satisfactory, and am directed to abrogate the agreement under which you are now working.

"MANAGERS OF THE GRAPHIC COMPANY.

"The failure in time, &c., necessitated reletting the work, and bids having been received, a contract was entered into with the resident contractor, who was to receive the work from January, 1877, with orders to complete the missing cases from and including the issue of October 10, 1876.

"The following summary of time of receipt of work under non-resident contractors is submitted:

| | Days. |
|---|---|
| "Osgood & Co., minimum time between receipt of first drawing and first proof | 6 |
| "Graphic Company, minimum time between receipt of first drawing and first proof | 5 |
| "Osgood & Co., maximum time | 48 |
| "Graphic Company, maximum time | 62 |

"The class of work referred to should not be confounded with the reproduction and publication of the Official Gazette, as its only connection with said Gazette is the necessity of furnishing on time the proofs from which the plates for the Gazette are printed.

"The work of the Official Gazette has always been done outside of Washington, as ample time is allowed for its reproduction, proof-sheets not being called for.

"In conclusion, I beg leave to state that in every attempt to perform this class of work in other cities the result has been endless annoyance and loss of money to inventors and the office. It also has given just cause of complaint, and must be in all respects considered a most vexatious, expensive experiment. The absolute failure of three companies of good standing and evident facilities to perform the work demonstrates the utter inexpediency of sending from this city this class of work, which demands the utmost promptness and attention in its execution.

"Very respectfully,

"F. A. SEELY, Chief Clerk.

"Respectfully forwarded to the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

"H. E. PAINE,
"Commissioner of Patents.

"Hon. C. SCHURZ,
"Secretary of the Interior."

On the same day such report was forwarded by the Secretary of the Interior to Senator Windom, chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, accompanied by a letter of which the following is a copy:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington May 10, 1879.

"SIR: In response to the communication of yesterday upon the subject of photolithographing for the Patent Office, I transmit herewith a statement upon the subject, from which it appears that former experiments of having the work done outside of this city have resulted in failure, annoyance, and loss to the Treasury.

"Very respectfully,

"C. SCHURZ, Secretary."

This correspondence seems to fully answer such part of the resolution, as to the time prior to Commissioner Paine's report to Secretary Schurz. At least I have no other information nor means of information upon this subject. There is nothing in the records of files or this office indicating any such failure prior to my incumbency.

At the time I assumed charge all the work was being done by Mr. Norris Peters, of this city. He has since continued to perform it, except the preparation of the current issue for the first week of July, 1885, which was done upon trial by Messrs. Bell Brothers, of this city.

I took care to assure myself and have no doubt that the work is now being "done at reasonable rates," and as to the quality of the materials furnished by the present contractor and as to the promptness, accuracy, and character of his work, each and all are highly satisfactory, so far as I know, to the office and to all its patrons. Instead of five days "minimum time between receipt of first drawing and first proof," such minimum time is now one-half of one day, and the maximum time one and one-half days.

Ninth. As to "whether there are good and sufficient reasons for confining the performance of said work to the city of Washington," and, if so, the reasons therefor, very little can be added to what was said by Secretary Schurz and Commissioner Paine, respectively, above quoted.

I am informed, and have no doubt, that the question of the propriety of permitting this work to be done in any city outside of Washington has been considered and found impracticable by respective Secretaries of the Interior, as well as respective Commissioners of Patents, for some years past.

It is important that if this work is to be done by a contractor he should be reliable, responsible, and prompt. The quantity of work is not uniform, week by week, but the contractor should always be prepared to furnish the maximum amount.

Finally, in the appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, after appropriating the necessary amount for the performance of this work, I find the following provision:

"The work * * to be done * * in the city of Washington if it can be there done at reasonable rates. (See Statutes at Large, vol. 19, page 314.)"

This same provision has been incorporated in each successive appropriation act for each fiscal year since that date.

"1880, see Statutes at Large, volume 20, page 200.
"1881, see Statutes at Large, volume 21, page 233.
"1882, see Statutes at Large, volume 21, page 409.
"1883, see Statutes at Large, volume 22, page 249.
"1884, see Statutes at Large, volume 22, page 557.
"1885, see Statutes at Large, volume 23, page 187.
"1886, see Statutes at Large, volume 23, page 418.

"In my last report to the Congress of the United States. after discussing at some length the reasons therefor, I expressed my views on this subject as follows:

"It is not absolutely impracticable that the work of preparing the Official Gazette be done elsewhere than in this city, provided the place be not too remote. This would undoubtedly be attended at times with serious inconvenience. For manifest reasons, however, the work of preparing the current issues of patents must be done in this city, and the proper reproduction elsewhere is simply impracticable, if not impossible."

Under the system which now obtains in this office the drawings of each issue of patents are commenced to be delivered to the contractor on Friday morning of each week for the issue of two weeks from the following Tuesday. Copies of that issue must be delivered to the Patent Office by the Friday following such commencement, in order to allow time for the dummy cards to be made up for use in the preparation of the Official Gazette, which issues on the same day each week of the issues of the patents. This allows but one week for the preparation and delivery "of the current-issue copies," and but a day or two more than a week for the manufacture of the Gazette copies.

In conclusion, I see no reason to change or modify the views which I expressed in such report to Congress. In my opinion there are "good and sufficient reasons" for confining the performance of said work (and especially the work of the current issues) to the city of Washington.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. V. MONTGOMERY, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and the amendments of the Senate thereto; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and the Senate amendments thereto; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

INVESTIGATION OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a conference is asked by the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments and agree to a conference.

Mr. STRAIT. I prefer that the joint resolution shall take the regular order.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, is not this matter privileged?

The SPEAKER. As there has been no action by the House upon the amendments of the Senate, no privilege attaches.

The joint resolution and the Senate amendments were referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

RIGHT OF WAY, FORT CRAWFORD MILITARY RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3342) granting the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad through the Fort Crawford Military Reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CREDITS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds; said bill having been returned from the Senate with a message that it disagreed to the amendment of the House thereto, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PALMER, Mr. CHENEY, and Mr. HARRIS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the conference will be agreed to, and the Chair will appoint the conference during the day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ALICE KELLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley; said bill having been returned from the Senate with a message that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House, asked a conference, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. CAMERON.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the conference asked by the Senate will be granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce during the day the conferees on the part of the House.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; said bill having been returned from the Senate with a message that the Senate futher insisted on its amendment disagreed to by the House, asked a further conference, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK.

The SPEAKER. This bill will lie on the table for the present.

REPORT OF FISH COMMISSIONER.

The Speaker also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1886 be printed, and that there be printed 11,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer under such regulations as the joint Committee on Printing may prescribe at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

RECALL OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House a concurrent resolution for the recall of a bill from the President. As the beneficiary named in the bill has died, the purpose in recalling the bill is to correct its phraseology so as to substitute the legal representatives of the person deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Mrs. Arlanta T. Taylor.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and adopted.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print remarks in the RECORD was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, on the bill regulating telegraph lines of land-grant railroads.

To Mr. THOMPSON, on the bill (H. R. 6976) to erect a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, for three days.

To Mr. BRAGG, indefinitely, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the cases of James Jones and William Dalton, no unfavorable report having been made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to, there being ayes 125, noes 10—more than two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, this being Monday, the States and Territories must, under the rule, be called for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference, unless some other arrangement be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that bills and joint resolutions be handed to the Clerk without formal presentation to the House.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I hope that leave will be granted, and that reports will be included.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the presentation of reports has been dispensed with. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that gentleman having bills, resolutions, or memorials to present be allowed to hand them to the Clerk during the day for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend so as to include reports.

The SPEAKER. This is not an amendable motion.

Mr. COBB. I insist that reports be included.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana object to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COBB. I object, unless the proposition includes reports from committees.

Several other members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by several gentlemen.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to suspend the rules so as to dispense with this call of States and Territories?

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the call will take but a short time.

The call of States and Territories for the presentation of bills, resolutions, &c., for reference was proceeded with.

COUNTERPOISE BATTERY.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 11239) to construct a counterpoise battery for the protection of cannon in coast defense; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 3114) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of the said company;

A bill (S. 3182) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburg, Va.; and

A bill (S. 3225) to authorize the Stillwater and Cooke City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian Reservation, and for other purposes.

FIDE BUECHEL.

Mr. BURNES (for Mr. GLOVER) also introduced a bill (H. R. 11247) granting a pension to Fide Buechel; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW—LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. JAMES submitted a resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, reciting that whereas but eight hours constitute a day's labor for Government employés, laborers, and mechanics, and the Attorney-General has decided that letter-carriers are neither mechanics nor laborers, and hence are not within the terms of the law, therefore that the Representatives of the State of New York be requested to support the Senate bill for the relief of letter-carriers.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be printed in full in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request at this time.

Mr. JAMES. Then I ask that it be read.

The resolution was read at length, and referred to the Committee on Labor.

RICHARD J. STONE.

Mr. GROSVENOR introduced a bill (H. R. 11248) granting a pension to Richard J. Stone; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH HEDGES.

Mr. GROSVENOR also introduced a bill (H. R. 11249) granting a pension to Sarah Hedges; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH RIHELDARFER.

Mr. GROSVENOR also introduced a bill (H. R. 11250) granting a pension to Sarah Riheldarfer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and order to be printed.

LETTER CARRIERS.

Mr. STAHLNECKER presented a joint resolution of the New York State Legislature favoring the letter carriers' bill and forbidding their employment for more than eight hours a day; which was referred to the Committee on Labor.

COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. STAHLNECKER also presented a joint resolution of the New York State Legislature favoring coast defenses and the rehabilitation of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made to these requests. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WORTHINGTON] desires to present a privileged report.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to make a privileged motion as to the agricultural appropriation bill, which came over from the Senate this morning with amendments by the Senate. I desire to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to a conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. I decline to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I understand my motion is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The motion would be privileged if the bill and amendments were reported back from the committee.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I desire to make a privileged report. I present a report of a conference committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

In line 16, page 1, strike out the word "three" and insert "one."

In line 11, page 2, strike out the word "three" and insert "one."

In line 18, page 2, strike out the word "three" and insert "one."

And that the House agree to the same.

N. E. WORTHINGTON,
W. C. MAYBURY,
Managers on the part of the House.
WM. MAHONE,
G. G. VEST,

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The bill as passed by the Senate fixed the limit of cost of site and building at $1,300,000. The House amended the Senate bill by reducing the limit to $1,025,000, a reduction of $275,000. By the report of the conference committee, it is recommended that the Senate recede from the amount fixed by it to the extent of $200,000, and that the House advance the limit fixed by it to the extent of $75,000. This would make the limit $1,100,000.

The sum fixed by the Senate is the estimate made by the officers of the Government. The sum recommended is less than that fixed or expended on many other cities of less present and prospective population and growth. In the judgment of the committee, after a full conference and examination of the facts in the case, it is not more than will be required to construct such a public building and procure the site, as is required for Government uses at Detroit.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I move the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not in order at this time to move to suspend the rules and to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills?

The SPEAKER. It is; but reports from committees of conference are privileged and must be received, even if a motion to adjourn is pending.

The report of the Committee of Conference was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to suspend the rules and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that even when that motion is pending if any gentleman rises and states that he desires to present a conference report, under the rules of the House it must be received.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration against the conference report.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Unless it is a report from a conference committee——

Mr. PAYSON. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, is not a motion to suspend the rules in order?

The SPEAKER. It is; but pending that, reports from conference committees are in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration against the conference report. I hope gentlemen will withhold these matters until we have disposed of the legislative bill, and then they can all come in.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill sent up by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and then the Chair will put the question.

Mr. PAYSON. I withdraw the report.

The SPEAKER. The conference report is withdrawn. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. By order of the House, all general debate upon this bill is limited to one hour and thirty minutes. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will occupy his time now.

Mr. CANNON. I prefer that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], in charge of the bill and representing the majority of this House, shall first give us some reason why this bill ought or ought not to pass and some explanation of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill is before the House, Mr. Chairman, and has been on the Calendar for nearly a month, and of course its provisions are well understood. Therefore I do not feel justified in occupying the time of the House unless some gentleman desires information upon some special point. I yield, however, ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON did not rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been before the House since the third day of the present month, accompanied by a very full and elaborate report, in which nearly every fact that has been mentioned in the debate up to this time is set forth, so that I do not desire to address the House, but will reserve my time.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to have him inform the committee whether the assertions made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] are true in whole or in part.

Mr. HOLMAN. I state that every fact mentioned by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], with the exception of what he stated in regard to the Mississippi River Commission, is mentioned in the report which was presented on the 3d of the present month. As to the Mississippi River Commission, the salaries of the members of that body have never been provided for in the legislative bill. Those officials did not and do not belong to one of the Departments of the Government, and therefore their salaries have never been provided for in this bill. The appropriation for them has heretofore been made in the sundry civil bill, and the expenses of the commission have been provided for in the river and harbor bill.

As to the increase of salaries mentioned by the gentleman, there are increases made by the bill to the amount of $4,100. The items are these: In the bureau of mints the examiner's salary has been increased $100 and the computer's salary $200. In the assistant treasurer's office at Chicago the salary has been put at $5,000, as now provided by law, that being the fourth most important of the subtreasuries. The salary of the subtreasurer at Philadelphia is fixed at $5,000, as now fixed by law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What was it before?

Mr. HOLMAN. Four thousand five hundred dollars by the current appropriation law; but $5,000 by law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Why do you increase it?

Mr. HOLMAN. For the reason I have mentioned, that this is one of the four most important subtreasuries in the country. The great subtreasuries are New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago. The salary at New York is fixed by law at $8,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do you not make this increase in violation of the rules of the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no. At the other three great subtreasuries I have named the salaries are fixed at $5,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is this salary fixed at by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Chicago? $5,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, do not you propose to increase this salary in violation of law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; it is fixed by law at $5,000. As to the salary of the Commissioner of the Land Office, that is increased from $4,000 to $4,500. It is the greatest of the bureaus.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is not that in violation of the rules of the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, it is an increase over the law. The salary of the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is now $3,000 by law, is fixed in this bill at $3,250. The salary of the chief clerk of the General Land Office is increased from $2,250 to $2,400, an increase of $150. The salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, like that of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, is put up to $4,500, being $500 above the amount named in the existing law. The salary of the Assistant Commissioner of Patents is fixed in the bill at $3,250, being an increase of $250. These provisions of increase, of course, are all subject to a point of order. In addition to these, the salary of the First Assistant Postmaster-General is increased from $4,000 to $4,500, the salary of the superintendent of free delivery, Post-Office Department, is increased $500; that of the disbursing clerk, Post-Office Department, is increased $150. All these are subject to a point of order. These increases amount to $4,100 in the aggregate.

Most of the numerous salaries named by the gentleman from Louisiana as being reduced were reduced ten years ago at the beginning of the Forty-fourth Congress, and in this bill the same sum is appropriated that has been provided for those salaries from that time up to the present. There are a large number of them.

These constitute the extraordinary body of items to which the gentleman from Louisiana has referred as subject to a point of order, the gentleman assuming that Congress is bound to appropriate full up to the amount named in the law. This of course is a mistake. In point of fact, as I have stated, the salaries just referred to were reduced ten years ago, and have remained ever since at the amount then fixed. We have not increased them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman let me ask another question?

Mr. HOLMAN. In one moment. In this bill there are of course a number of decreases of salary, reduced below the amounts named in the law of this year, and seventy-nine salaries are dispensed with.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is what I wanted to ask you about, whether you have not made up for the increase in the salaries of these officials by reducing the pay of the charwomen of the Treasury from $20 a month to 50 cents a day?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The bill so reads.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the contrary, there was an increase of the salary of the charwomen last year from $15 to $20 per month.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Two hundred and forty dollars was the amount fixed last year; and this bill appropriates $180 a year—50 cents a day.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is any such provision in this bill, it is simply a clerical error.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation made in this bill was intended to be the same as that made for the present year. In the appropriation bill of last session for the present year there was an increase of the salaries of the charwomen. We have continued the salaries at the increased rate.

I have the bill before me. This bill provides for eighty charwomen in the Treasury Department at $240 each. I would like to know how the gentleman from New Jersey has fallen into such an error as that implied in the remark just made. The gentleman's objection will be found to be just about as tangible as the objections made by the gentleman from Louisiana. Gentlemen assume that when a salary has once been fixed Congress is compelled under the rules of the House to appropriate clear up to the sum named in the provisions of existing law. That is a mistake.

Mr. BLANCHARD. You can not reduce a salary on an appropriation bill. That is my position.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, we have done that during the present session.

Mr. HEARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. I understand him to admit that these proposed increases are subject to a point of order, if there should be an opportunity of making the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Then I ask the gentleman whether this legislation which he now proposes to force down our throats is not exactly the kind of legislation that he objected to on the diplomatic and consular bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not proposing to "force anything down anybody's throat."

Mr. HEARD. Now, do you not——

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not yield further at this moment. The gentleman must understand that the Committee on Appropriations simply recommends certain provisions to the House. So far as this bill is concerned I am simply a representative of that committee, nothing more, nothing less.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not now. One word more and I shall have covered the whole ground gone over by the gentleman from Louisiana.

As to the salaries of the governor and the judge of Alaska, my friend became really pathetic in behalf of those distinguished officials, whose salaries we provide for at exactly the same amounts provided for the judges and governors of every other Territory. We make their salaries just the same as those of corresponding offices in other Territories. And instead of this gentleman occupying the inclement ice hills of Alaska, I believe that for many months past the distinguished official of that State, instead of being forced to bear the rigorous winters of the climate where his duties would seem to call him, has been enjoying the hospitalities of this city, both last winter and this, as I understand [laughter], and I think, perhaps, it is eminently proper that he should be here, because there is no reason whatever for his being out there, as there is nothing for him to do. [Laughter.] So, also, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the members of this Mississippi River Commission. They had no work to do.

Mr. BLANCHARD. They have had to disburse some two millions of dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. They have nothing to do, I repeat, of public interest, and there is no necessity for their being present at any field of duty, because there is no duty of any importance to perform. It will be remembered that in the appropriation bill for rivers and harbors we provided that this work should be done under the direction of the Secretary of War, not under the direction of this board of commissioners, and hence they have nothing to do.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I know the gentleman does not wish to misstate the facts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I repeat they have nothing to do. One of them lives in my own State, one in my friend's State——

Mr. BLANCHARD. As the gentleman will not yield for a correction I deny that it is true.

Mr. HOLMAN. And Congress refused to make an appropriation for them.

Mr. KING. Congress did not refuse; you refused.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House and the Senate refused, and hence the appropriation is omitted from this bill.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. BUCHANAN. With regard to the wages of charwomen, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to line 703 of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I can get the ear of the House for a moment I wish to add, in answer to the gentleman from New Jersey, that the mistake the gentleman has fallen into is with reference to an item which appears on page 29, and is here the first time appropriated for. There have been heretofore under that head no appropriations made for charwomen; but an estimate was sent in for two in that office at $180 each, and the Committee on Appropriations simply carried out the wishes of the head of that bureau and allowed the expenditure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I congratulate the committee for having risen measurably to the occasion.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad, at the expiration of fifteen minutes, to be notified by the Chair, as I desire to yield a part of my time to other gentlemen.

This bill was reported to the House on the 3d of February, nearly one month ago.

Mr. SYMES. When was it printed so that we could see it?

Mr. CANNON. Immediately after it was reported. It has been in Committee of the Whole from that time to this.

Now, within four days of the time of adjournment, it is to be taken up for consideration. It is a lengthy bill, carrying over $20,000,000, and covering 107 pages. There was much talk early in this session about the prompt work to be done in the various appropriation committees which prepared these bills. Before the holidays the sundry civil bill, the twin great bill to this, was reported and passed at a time before a large portion of the estimates had even been forwarded to Congress for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations on that bill. Ordinarily that great bill is one of the last to be reported. This bill now under consideration could well have been reported before the holidays and passed, because the estimates were substantially in at that time. The sundry civil bill was returned from the Senate with amendments adding between two and three million of dollars on the 3d day of February, and remained in the Committee on Appropriations and in the House together for nearly twenty days without consideration. It was then taken up and considered and returned to the Senate with almost universal non-concurrence in the amendments, and is now pending in conference.

The deficiency bill, another great bill covering the whole service, is now pending in this Committee of the Whole, reported, I believe, on Friday or Saturday last. So that, saying nothing of the passage of the naval bill on Saturday last, 26th instant, we are brought face to face with this proposition: Either that this great bill and the deficiency bill shall be hurried through under whip and spur, if considered under the five-minute rule in Committee of the Whole and the House, or else we are to have the rules suspended and pass the bills without consideration and hurried to the Senate, and the Senate is then asked, both in the Senate Committee on Appropriations and in the Senate itself, to do in less than four days what the House has not done in nearly three months.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is it possible, if we consider this bill in Committee of the Whole, to get it through before Thursday morning?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HISCOCK. How?

Mr. CANNON. If in good faith, without objection upon this side of the House or the other side of the House, we set down and commence reading this bill in my opinion it might be gotten through with some time to-morrow; and if intelligent consideration were given to the bill I think it would somewhat hasten consideration at the other end, in the Senate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having said this much about it, I want to say another word: that when this House came into existence it was organized with a Democratic majority of 45, and with a Democratic Executive at the other end of the Avenue new life was to permeate legislation, and the country was told that we were to have a new order of things. The Appropriations Committee was divided up into a half-dozen committees; its jurisdiction distributed to the Foreign Affairs, Naval Affairs, the Military Committee, the Post-Office Committee, and others, and these bills were to have prompt consideration. Instead of that we have been at sea, a great deal further at sea than any Congress preceding this has been, touching these bills.

In addition to that, with a majority of 45 upon the other side of the House, the "new broom that was to sweep clean" does not sweep at all. We were to have reform, revenue legislation, revision of the tariff, and reduction of taxation; and yet the other great committee of this body, the Committee on Ways and Means, has been at sea without a compass and without a rudder, quarreling among themselves and begetting only failure, resulting in disorder to the majority in the House and apprehension in the country. It is true that the majority of the House has been perfecting itself in letter-writing. Your leader from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has been hurling his epistles at the Speaker and the Speaker has answered, and back and forth have flown the paper balls. I wish that correspondence between the Speaker of the House and the leader of the majority, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], was spread upon the record—that wonderful correspondence. [Laughter.] Here we are within four days of the end of the session without revenue legislation, without reduction of taxation, without the appropriations for the service of the Government, with no chance to pass them unless the House shuts its eyes and votes multiplied millions without consideration or investigation.

Failing in passing these appropriation bills—taking them on trust—then we push by joint resolutions, provide for the service of next year by continuing a service similar to that of this year in bulk—a hazardous and extravagant experiment. Such action would damn the Republican party and ought to the Democratic party. Failing in this, there is nothing left but a special session of the Fiftieth Congress to provide for the ordinary expenses of the Government.

And now, Mr. Chairman, having said that much about the situation, I wish to say something about the bill.

Mr. HOUK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the distribution of the work through the various committees did not lessen the work of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. STRUBLE. Is it not understood the Committee on Appropriations met in November before the meeting of the session in order to get these bills ready and have them before the House in time?

Mr. CANNON. One at a time, if you please. Oh, certainly; but let me say to the gentleman that the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with one little chicken you know in the barn-yard, the diplomatic appropriation bill, held it back, and came in here at the the end of the session with its bill and occupied day after day with it. The Committee on Naval Affairs passed their one little chicken, the naval appropriation bill, through on last Saturday. [Laughter.]

I am not attacking any committee or defending the Committee on Appropriations. I say, Mr. Chairman, there is disorder, and disagreement, and confusion, and inefficiency on the majority side of this House just where there ought to be efficiency and strength. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs reported two bills, and both are laws at the present time.

Mr. HOUK. Why did not the Appropriations Committee press it before? Why did they press it for a couple of days and then abandon it?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Tennessee asks a question, in reply to which I say I know not the reason why the bill was withdrawn. This bill was reported to the House on the 3d of February, a month ago, and ought to have been pressed and passed. Why it was not I know not, unless there was something of more importance to the House, in its judgment.

Mr. HOUK. What is more important than making these appropriations? Was it for the purpose of keeping out a suspension of the rules and in order that other people might not get any legislation?

Mr. CANNON. Let me proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor and will proceed without interruption.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say, in justice to the Committee on Appropriations, that that committee is as good as the majority side of the House. [Laughter.] That is not very great praise for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Rather hard on the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, I wish to speak a little of this bill in detail. It is true that here and there they cut off a hundred dollars in a salary, and sometimes $200, and in another place $300; and here and there they have recommended an increase of salaries.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is not to be blamed for this kind of thing. It is impossible for the leopard to change its spots. [Laughter.] For a long time he with the other leaders on that side were in a minority. Their political capital then was all in cheese-paring. I recollect when in the Forty-fourth Congress there was a beginning of this sort of thing, and when statesmanship was made up of the reduction of $50 here and $100 there on a salary. It was the capital of the Democratic party under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. Now, when they have come into power on the other side you want them to stop. They do not know how to stop. They started out to fool the country, and want to keep it up in appearance. [Laughter.]

I do not mean in what I have said, in way of comment, that I think this is wise economy. In my judgment it is not wisdom to cut off $100 here and $100 there, and to increase a little here and a little there, a little in this place and a little in another place. It is cheese-paring, but they made their reputation in that way, and although they do not make substantial economies, nevertheless they must posture before the country in that position. If they wish to work real reform there is plenty of chance to do it. If this House wishes to legislate wisely in the reduction of public expenditures and in promotion of the efficiency of the public service, if they wish to save money an earnest and prompt investigation and legislation will do it. I can point the way and so can anybody else who studies these bills with a view to promote the public welfare, and with that desire alone. No such investigation has been given by the Committee on Appropriations, or any other committee having charge of appropriation bills in this Congress so far as I know.

For instance, I will tell you that there is a chance by proper legislation to save money. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] in his attack upon my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], last night, or the night before last, upbraided him for this cheese-paring policy, and then said, by way of criticism, he had voted to override the President's veto for the purpose of imposing a tax upon the people to the extent of $50,000,000 a year—for the purpose of granting useless pensions, referring to the dependent pension bill.

I do not agree with that statement. If I had been in the place of the gentleman from Louisiana under all the circumstances I would not have lugged it in just in that connection. But as he did and in that connection, I want to show the House of Representatives where the Committee on Appropriations and the House of Representatives can economize with great good to the people.

I hold in my hand the report of the Commissioner of Pensions. Turning to page 30 I find the following table:

Appropriations and expenditures for the Pension Office each year since 1862 properly chargeable to the expense of settling claims.

Mr. CANNON. I yield myself five minutes longer. I find that the appropriations for 1886 were $3,309,000 for this matter, as the Commissioner of Pensions says, of settling claims. What kind of claims? In the main of the late war. Why did they need settling at this enormous expense? Because under the rules of the Pension Office there are multiplied thousands of soldiers of the late war without hospital record who can not find the comrades or commissioned officers that can remember when the seeds of disease were sown that disabled them. Yet they are entitled to pensions. They were in fact as a rule the most meritorious soldiers, and should be placed on the pension-rolls by legislation. Yet the money the soldiers ought to get is being paid to men who are engaged in investigating those claims.

Intelligent legislation that would dispense with the most of that force in the Pension Office and pay the money to the soldiers would be good legislation. The President in his veto message makes a statement from which it appears that there are in round numbers 91,000 soldiers of the late war on the pension-roll that get $3,600,000 a year. Mind you, the aggregate of the pensions paid to those 91,000 pensioners is $3,600,000 a year—less, if you consider the force in the cognate offices to the Pension Office, than is paid to the Pension-Office force that settles the claims of the soldiers who ask the Government for payment of pensions in fact equitably due them.

This is a strange state of affairs. Why is it? It is because this Congress has failed to cut the Gordian knot and give these men the pension they ought to have; and they create a force in the Pension Office of able-bodied men in the main who work there and study, I sometimes think, how not to do it, if you please, that they may keep their places.

Let me go a step further. One hundred and seventy-eight thousand of these pensioners of the late war get $11,000,000 annually. That is all. Three-fifths of the men that are on the pension-roll get $11,000,000 of pension in the aggregate annually. Yet this enormous force in the Pension Office to settle claims is still continued. You ought to have legislation, and you ought to have had it before, and might have had it; and if this House had been true to its convictions we would have discharged the most of that force by passing the dependent-pension act over the President's veto.

Let me take another step. There are 47,000 applicants under the Mexican pension act. When they go on the roll they will cost $4,700,000 a year. Yet there are 91,000 men of the late war that are costing over a million of dollars less. There is your chance for legislation. There is your chance for reform. There are many other things I might say about this single bureau if I thought proper to do so, but I will now drop that bureau and content myself with saying that I have not time to pass through this bill step by step.

And, in conclusion, I make an appeal to this House, and especially to this side of it. Although we are within four days of adjournment, I hope we will let this bill be read; will in good faith make points of order where they can be properly made, offer amendments where they ought to be offered, and then, after proper discussion, vote. If we do that we will show a desire upon our part, notwithstanding their laches, to do everything that we can to conclude the public business in order.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that a bill which is subject to a hundred and fifty points of order can be considered in the time we have to devote to it?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it is not subject to so many as that.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman ask us to agree to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I have not asked you to do that, and I do not ask you to do that; but I say the choice is presented between passing the bill in the ordinary way or under a suspension of the rules, or letting the present appropriations be continued by resolution, or having an extra session.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the time we have at our disposal is too short for a detailed examination of this bill, but there are two or three features of it to which I think the attention of the House ought to be called. As we are well aware, this bill should simply carry appropriations to meet the requirements of existing law. We are not authorized to report a provision changing in any respect the law as we find it, and above all, we are not authorized by either the letter or the spirit of the rules by which we are governed, or by any obligation resting upon us as members of the Appropriation Committee to defeat or prevent the execution of any existing statute. Now, I think that in large part the criticisms upon the bill made by the honorable gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] are merited, so far as his own side of the House is concerned, but I insist that they stop at this central aisle; because in nothing have we sympathized with the system to which my honorable friend has referred, the system of cheese-paring in the name of economy, and seeking to defeat the practical working of a statute by indirection. That system, I say, has received no favor upon this side of the House. We have never sought or attempted to make political capital by any such means. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] upon the fact that while he uncovered the iniquity not of Ephraim but of William [laughter], the expression on his face was one of anguish, but not of surprise.

He was not surprised at the character of the bill which the majority of the Committee on Appropriations presented to this House. However much the inner man may have been disturbed touching the propriety and fitness of the course of the majority of that committee, he was not surprised at it, and palpably because he has witnessed the same thing over and over again, and it occurs to me that by this time he must have become satisfied that nothing better can come out of that Nazareth.

As the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has said, there are in this bill nearly one hundred and fifty items which are subject to the point of order. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I insist that in so far as the spirit of Rule XXI is concerned, we have no right, in the name of economy or in the name of common honesty, to reduce in this way the pay of A, B, C, and D, who are clerks or employés of the Government. The statute provides that those employés shall receive certain compensation, and the duty which devolves upon the Appropriations Committee is simply to provide for that compensation by proper appropriations. If those employés are entitled under the statute to $1,200 a year each, it is a subterfuge to say that we do not violate the plain spirit of the law, and the spirit of Rule XXI as well, by refusing to appropriate the amount necessary to pay the salaries as fixed by the statute. In other words, if we report a bill appropriating only $1,000 to pay a salary which the law has fixed at $1,200, we clearly evade, yes, violate the plain intendment of the rule prescribing our duties and defining our power.

I submit that the candor of this House can not tolerate such a subterfuge, and the House ought to insist that if the rates of compensation of employés of the Government are to be changed, the change shall be made in accordance with the rules which govern us, and that it shall be done only after fair consideration of the justice of such reduction.

I wish to say another thing. The Democratic party came into power by means of professed devotion to what is known as civil-service reform, by professed devotion to the virtues embodied in the civil-service law as it appears on the statute-book, and they now seek to hold power by practicing the very vices of administration which that law sought to abolish. This bill does not, indeed, attempt to abolish the Civil Service Commission directly, but it does attempt to abolish it indirectly by reducing the amount of appropriation, which is absolutely indispensable for the proper discharge of the duties which the law devolves upon the commission. This bill reduces the amount from four thousand, which was inadequate, to two thousand dollars.

They might as well have abolished the commission, and thus defeated the execution of the law.

A MEMBER. I wish they had; that is the best thing to be done.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Possibly it is; but if it is "the best thing to be done," why do you not say so to the country like men? Why do you not introduce a bill to destroy this ladder upon which you climbed into power? You do not dare to do it. No man representing an intelligent constituency dares to stand here and denounce the purpose and object of the civil-service law or defeat its enforcement by absolutely withholding appropriation needful to enable the Civil Service Commission to go on with its work.

I am aware that the experience of some gentlemen on that side of the House advocating civil service honestly and fearlessly has not been a happy one. Those who, with integrity of purpose, with a sincere devotion to the just principles embodied in the civil-service law, have sought to secure its enforcement in accordance with its true spirit and intent have been retired.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to disturb the gentleman in his remarks, but will he allow me to ask him a question touching the Civil Service Commission and its rules?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask whether you favor the continuation of the forty-five years provision.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do, in accordance with the rules promulgated by the commission. But if I desired to change it I would change it in an open, manly way.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the gentleman and I differ in the first place as to the necessity of the change, but I differ with him further when I say that I propose wherever I can, and in whatever way may be possible, to seek to break up the rule which prevents a citizen of the United States over forty-five years of age from being examined for appointment under civil-service regulations.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That has been recited on this floor over and over again, and demonstrates that while professing attachment to the act, the effort is made to destroy it, because, forsooth, the commissioners will not abrogate or modify a rule which, in the judgment of the President of the United States and of the commission, has been wisely adopted and which experience has approved.

Mr. RANDALL. Now will the gentleman do me the justice——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. More than that; I wish to say that there is nothing which prohibits the introduction of a bill which shall provide for the abrogation or modifications the gentleman seeks. So, if that is the object sought, the remedy is by bill and not by destroying the Civil Service Commission itself by withholding from it the means essential to enforce the law.

Mr. RANDALL. You will do me the justice to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, when a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House requesting the President to return to the House the bill (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Mrs. Arlanta T. Taylor.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me add that a bill which contemplated the modification of the civil-service law in the behalf suggested was reported back by a committee of this House, the report being against the adoption of any such measure. And I may add no bill repealing the civil-service law has or can find favor in this House. At least that is my judgment. However that may be, and whether it is wise or unwise to do the contemplated thing, this manner of doing it certainly ought not to commend itself to this body.

One thing more. Not only do we find here an attempt by indirection to strangle the civil-service law, but we observe also here and there employés, women, who have been for years in the employ of the Government, and whose efficiency is not questioned, mustered out in order that political mendicants whose wives are no longer able to provide for them [laughter] may obtain situations. We find that in the dead letter branch of the Post-Office Department there are four women to be mustered out—why? Because they are inefficient? No. This is simply one of the ways of dispensing with the services of a certain class of clerks in order that their places may be filled in that peculiar manner known to the modern manipulation of the civil-service law.

Mr. STEELE. As fifty-six were left out last year in the same Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will remember that the action he speaks of is recommended by the head of that bureau.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have no doubt it is; and I have no doubt he might under pressure feel constrained to recommend the wiping out of every clerk he has, with the view of filling their places with those who are clamorous to be provided with comfortable situations.

Mr. HOLMAN. But further——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend will have time of his own; I can not yield.

One other thing. I insist that where a man has left his business to accept an office which the President of the United States has tendered him, and to that office there is by law attached a given salary, as in the case of the subtreasurers at New Orleans, Chicago, Cincinnati, Baltimore, and other localities, it is not just for this House during the incumbency of the gentlemen who have accepted offices under such circumstances to reduce their salaries; and, above all, it should not be done in this irregular way.

The statute provides that the subtreasurer at Cincinnati shall receive, if you please, $4,500 a year. To my knowledge the present incumbent was a business man who was not anxious to obtain the position, a man of high character who consented to accept the appointment. This bill appropriates $4,000 as the salary of that officer, although the statute provides that there shall be appropriated $4,500 or $5,000. Now, if his salary is to be reduced, let it be done by a bill reviewing salaries and fixing them at what is just, but not in this way. I insist that it is not only unjust to the officer but is a clear violation of the rule of the House.

One word more, and I shall not detain the committee further. I want to say to my friend from Louisiana that I am not astonished that he was not surprised on scanning this bill to find that the rule of the House was violated on every page. I am not surprised that he was a little disconcerted to discover that in nothing has the orderly method of proceeding here been observed. He will find if he will study carefully the course of the political organization of which he is a conspicuous and influential member that they are consistent in nothing. They have no fixed policy. They have no well-defined policy upon the tariff, none upon the currency, none upon internal-revenue reform, none in regard to civil service, none in regard to coast defenses, none in regard to any other question with which this Congress has to do. Why, behold! They are equally at home on either side and at either end of the tariff question—with a resolution passed by their national convention, one end of which advocates protection, the other end suggests free trade; one gentleman upon the floor of this House, an acknowledged leader, pinning his faith to one end of that resolution, and another gentleman, an equally acknowledged leader, staking his political fortune on the soundness of the other end of the resolution—never working together; and the wings of the party which these gentlemen severally represent will never swing without attrition unless they can be attached by a toggle-joint, so as to work equally well either way and in all directions. [Laughter and applause.]

Now I submit, in view of what the country has witnessed, whether there is not possibly some reason for the earnest criticisms that were passed upon us in the assemblage which is known to the world as the convention of confederated labor. Why do they criticise this body? Because it is universally recognized that this House is becoming in a degree a mere cave of echoes [laughter], a mere sounding-board [renewed laughter], answering to every popular clamor. No longer does the House of Representatives in any important measure shape and control the current of healthful political thought and action as it might do in the interests of good government. But it achieves marked success in setting sails to catch the first breezy clamor that comes if it can in anywise tend to carry a district or locality into a desired political harbor.

It is nearly time in the history of our country when men charged with the responsible duty which devolves upon the representatives of the people upon this floor should act in accordance with their highest convictions of right rather than seek simply to be borne along by the political trade-winds of popular applause which may indeed be enjoyed to-day and may to-morrow bring curses to our hearthstones. [Applause.]

Mr. SOWDEN. On that issue do not the two sides of the House flop together? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. When it is a question of mere political demagogy there is indeed too much unanimity between the two sides.

Referring for a moment to the increase of some salaries.

Now, I am not one of those who believe in a niggardly salary, nor do I believe the people of the country are content with niggardly payment of public servants. I believe the increase of the salary of the Commissioner of Public Lands was well in itself. I think the Assistant Commissioner of Public Lands ought to have had his salary increased. I think the Assistant Commissioner of Patents ought to have had his salary increased.

Mr. STRUBLE. What is the demand for this now more than heretofore?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know that there was any greater necessity for Paul's conversion on the day he was converted than there was on the day before; but I can not conceive that that would have been a sufficient reason for postponing his conversion to a later day, or indefinitely. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this general debate is understood to be a prelude to a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. To take this course may become absolutely necessary within a day or two in order to prevent a special session of Congress. It will be a public scandal, nevertheless. It is something of a public scandal, at any time to pass one of the great annual appropriation bills under suspension of the rules, rules that have been adopted for the express purpose of securing due consideration of these bills.

The scandal becomes a greater one when it appears that the bill, instead of merely providing for the support of the Government according to existing law, contains provisions raising and lowering salaries, and omits altogether salaries for offices created by existing law. The scandal of the proceeding is not diminished by the fact that in one case at least, that of the Civil Service Commissioners, the payment of the salary is made to depend on the surrender by the commissioners of a discretion confided to them by existing law. The case is not improved when we consider that this discretion which the Civil Service Commissioners are thus required to surrender is one which the existing law requires them to exercise in entire subordination to the discretion of the President of the United States.

The rules framed by the Civil Service Board are not their rules. They are the rules of the President of the United States. The existing law on the subject is found in the civil-service law of 1883. The act provides among other things:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commissioners, first, to aid the President, as he may request, in preparing suitable rules for carrying this act into effect, and when said rules shall have been promulgated it shall be the duty of all officers of the United States in the Departments, and offices to which any such rules may relate to aid in all proper ways in carrying said rules and any modification thereof into effect.

Now, what does the pending bill provide? It provides that the commissioners shall not receive their salary during the next fiscal year till the civil-service rules shall have been changed in the manner indicated in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, suppose this proviso becomes law? The commissioners in order to secure their salary might be willing to comply with any conditions that Congress might impose. They resolve to secure the necessary change in the civil-service rules. First, however, they examine the law under which they act. They look to see how their duties are defined. They discover that the only authority which they possess is to aid the President as he may request in preparing suitable rules for carrying the civil-service law into effect. This is the extent of their power. The commissioners do not give force to the rules and regulations of the civil service. They simply aid the President in preparing them.

The President may adopt them or reject them as he sees fit. They are his rules and not the rules of the Commissioners. The Commissioners have no right under the law even to frame rules and submit them to the President for his approval until he asks them to do so. Their duty is in the words of the law to aid the President, "as he may request."

Accordingly the meaning of the pending proviso is that certain officers created by law shall not receive the salary fixed by law until the President of the United States shall have complied with a demand of Congress in reference to a matter which by the existing law is left to his discretion.

This is at least an ungracious way of making known to the President the wishes of this House. If any one member of this House, or all the members together, wish to secure a change in the civil-service rules the proper course is to ask the President to change them. We can do this in our individual capacity or by passing a resolution of the House. If the President can be persuaded that a change is necessary the change will be made at once. If he can not be so persuaded we ought not to try to coerce him into ordering a change to be made against his judgment by refusing an appropriation for the salaries of his advisers, advisers who have no legal power even to aid him in framing except upon his request. To endeavor to coerce him in this way into acting against his judgment is nothing less than voting a want of confidence in his administration.

As to the merits of the propositions that the rules of the civil service shall be so changed that applicants over forty-five years of age shall not be excluded from the examinations of the Civil Service Commission, there is something to be said. There are some Departments of the Government in which only young men should be appointed. There are others doubtless in which elderly men can do good service, and should not be excluded merely on account of age. If by the proviso in the pending bill all men, regardless of age, should be admitted to examinations, then if the law is obeyed and the appointment is made from among the four highest on the list the appointing officer may be required to appoint an elderly man to a place for which he is unfitted by age or else to evade the law by continually rejecting applicants one after the other, as has sometimes been done, according to popular rumor, under the present administration.

The pending bill, therefore, may afford only a mere show of relief to those for whom it appears to have been designed. If it has any effect at all it is a discreditable effort to coerce the President of the United States. It would be more manly by far to attach this proviso to the appropriation for the salary of the President. As it is it simply provides that unless the President shall call upon the Civil Service Commissioners to aid him in framing a change of the civil service rules, their salary, not his, shall be withheld.

In this connection I wish to have read a letter which I send to the Clerk's desk, from Mr. Oberly, of the Civil Service Commission, to the chairman of the House Committee on Reform in the Civil Service:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Treasury Regulation § 1031, which was in force before any attempt had been made to reform the civil service, provided that persons over forty-five years of age—every person over that age—should be kept out of every place the salary of which was less than $1,800.

The Curtis-Grant effort at reform adopted this rule. But under the civil service act the rule was modified by allowing every person, no matter how old, to compete for any place in the civil service, excepting the places of least importance as to duties, modifying the Treasury regulation that kept out of the Treasury Department and out of the customs service every person over forty-five years of age. The rules adopted under the civil service act admitted to appointment in the Treasury and the customs service as book-keepers, typewriters, stenographers, &c., persons without regard to age. And yet many people, because they are ignorant, probably, assert that what is called the civil service reform movement fixed forty-five years as the age at which the American citizen must cease from seeking office and be at rest.

It should also be remembered that before the adoption of the civil service rules the age limitation of letter-carriers was twenty-one to thirty years. By the present rules the age limitation of carriers is sixteen to thirty-five. And so on in other features of the service.

Thus it is demonstrated that they do not speak in truthfulness who say that the civil service act has operated to keep ability and experience linked to forty-five or thirty-five years out of the civil service. Ignorance should be taught that this act has liberalized the age rule, and falsehood rebuked by this important fact.

Truly yours,

JOHN H. OBERLY.

Hon. WILLIAM R. COX,
House of Representatives.

Considering the provisions of this bill, to which I have alluded, it is not a bill to pass under a suspension of the rules. Rather than vote upon it in that way, we ought to sit here day and night and consider it in order under the rules of this House. Even this, however, may be of no avail. To-morrow or next day we may be face to face with the question whether we shall submit to an extra session of Congress or pass this bill under a suspension of the rules. It will be assuming a large responsibility whichever we decide to do.

One thing is certain. There never was a time when the responsibility for the existing condition of things could be placed more accurately than now on the shoulders where it really belongs.

The responsibility will rest on the majority of the Appropriations Committee of this House.

When this Congress first met we changed the rules of this House for the express purpose of preventing the occurrence of such a state of things as now exist. We took away from the Appropriations Committee a large part of their jurisdiction. We left within their control only six appropriation bills, instead of the large number which they had previously controlled. The purpose was to enable this great committee to bring in their six bills early in the session, and thus prevent the crowding of necessary legislation into the closing weeks of the session.

Why have they not done so. They met in Washington, as we have repeatedly been reminded, before the session of Congress began. The fact was announced through all the newspapers of the country, with a great flourish of trumpets, as a sign of the efficiency and devotion to duty of the majority of this House. What did they do? They took up and promptly framed the sundry civil bill. They pressed it to its passage through the House before the Christmas holidays.

The legislative bill, however, was not even reported to the House till February, and was not seriously pressed till the beginning of the last week of the session.

The Appropriations Committee has done that which they might have left undone, and they have left undone that which they ought to have done. If the Appropriations Committee had given to the pending bill the same prompt attention which they gave to the sundry civil bill, and left the sundry civil bill to take the place now occupied by the pending bill, the situation would have been very different and very much better. The sundry civil bill might have failed to pass altogether, yet a special session would not have been necessary. If the legislative bill fails to pass the wheels of the Government must stop or the Fiftieth Congress must be called together before the end of the present fiscal year. What the Appropriations Committee have done, therefore, is to give their prompt attention to a bill the passage of which is not essential to the orderly working of the Government, and neglected the bill upon which the orderly existence of all departments of the Government during the next fiscal year must necessarily depend.

Therefore, their boasted promptness in framing and urging the passage of the sundry civil bill is simply additional evidence of delinquency. In the language of the streets, the Appropriations Committee has given itself away. It has shown by its treatment of the sundry civil bill what it could have done with the legislative bill had it been disposed to do.

It can not be said that the preparation of the legislative appropriation bill requires more time than that of the sundry civil bill. Indeed, it would require less if the committee were disposed to abide by the rules of this House and abandon their extravagant claim to usurp the legislative functions of this House. The sundry civil bill depends largely upon extraordinary estimates. It provides mainly for extraordinary expenditures. In fact, the sundry civil bill passed so early in this session, was passed with such precipitation, that the estimates for many items only came in after the bill had reached the Senate. The Senate amended it freely on that account.

Now, the legislative, executive, and judicial bill is not for extraordinary expenditures. Under the rules of this House it is for the ordinary and regular expenses of the Government as authorized by existing law. There is no one of the great appropriation bills which could have been more promptly prepared and urged to its passage through this House than the one now pending.

Any public inconvenience that may be caused either by its failure to pass or by its passage without due consideration must be laid at the doors of the controlling members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, the country will want to know why these leaders of the majority have acted as they have. What can their motive have been? There is only one logical answer to this question.

It will be remembered that when at the beginning of this Congress we proposed to change the rules of the House, the changes we proposed were stoutly resisted by certain leading members of the Appropriations Committee. These gentlemen fought for the retention of the old rules with the obstinacy of despair. They repeatedly tried to flank the proposed reform by changes in the wording of the rules. They yielded foot by foot and inch by inch, and surrendered only when they were overpowered. And why did they resist so strenuously a change in the rules which a great majority of the members of this House hailed as a genuine and valuable reform?

Let the debate show. It was distinctly stated on the floor by one of the most prominent among them that their motive was to retain in the hands of the Appropriations Committee the power to raise and lower salaries which they had theretofore exercised. It was urged, with an arrogance which would have been offensive if it had not been laughable, that the House could not be trusted to raise and lower salaries except under the tutelage of the Appropriations Committee and in an appropriation bill.

The new rules were adopted, and the gentlemen who had fought them so stoutly appeared to yield to the inevitable. One resource, however, was left to them. They could postpone the consideration of the great appropriation bill which covers the salaries of all the officials of the Government to such a late stage of the session that the House might be frightened into voting for it under a suspension of the rules to avoid a special session of Congress. I do not say that this is their motive. I say that the country will be likely to think so unless some better explanation is given than we have yet heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, during the ten years of my experience in this House I have observed that a hue and cry is always raised at the end of every short session of Congress that we shall inevitably have an extra session because of delay in bringing forward and disposing of appropriation bills. That has been the fear expressed in every session of Congress during the period mentioned.

Now, I am convinced that the principal cause for this condition results from the shortness of the session, which does not give sufficient opportunity for the proper consideration and disposition of appropriation bills and necessary important general legislation within the time fixed by the Constitution and the laws for the termination of the session. More than three months is actually needed for the preparation, proper consideration, and enactment of the general appropriation bills and other necessary legislation. Now, so far as the charge is made that these bills are backward, it does not more properly apply to this than to preceding short sessions of Congresses. I am satisfied that gentlemen of fair minds upon both sides of the House will bear me out in the declaration that more important general legislation outside of appropriation bills has been enacted into law during this session than during any other short session of Congress that has preceded it for twenty years.

I will merely mention the interstate-commerce law, the polygamy law, the creation of a department of agriculture, and the regulation of the Presidential count as a few of quite a number that I could enumerate. However, as my time is brief, I shall not now refer to others. But, sir, I want to say that this legislative, executive, and judicial bill is nearly as far advanced at this session of Congress as it is usually in the short sessions. Take, for instance, the condition of this bill in the Forty-seventh Congress, the only one in which the Republican party had a majority of the House since the beginning of the Forty-fourth Congress. They brought in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill on the 2d day of February of that year. When did we bring in this bill? On the 3d day of February, being only one day of the month later.

Mr. CUTCHEON. When was that bill considered?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, why is it that the legislative, &c., bill has not been disposed of before? It is because the majority of this House preferred to consider and dispose of other measures prior to calling up and considering this bill. The House chose to ignore this bill and consider the naval reorganization bill, the conference report on interstate-commerce bill, pleuro-pneumonia bill, diplomatic and consular bill, naval appropriation, and other measures.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Has that committee made any effort to take up this legislative bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir; the gentleman from Indiana made repeated efforts, but was voted down because this bill was antagonized by other propositions.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman please state in this connection when the first motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole and consider the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am not at this moment able to answer the gentleman's inquiry; but that bill was where any member on either side of the House could have called it up for consideration at any time he desired to do so. [Derisive cries on the Republican side.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is it the practice for any member except the leader of that committee or the man who reports the bill, to do that?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do not interrupt me now, my friend; my time is limited to a few minutes.

I am better prepared than many members to impartially judge the action of the Committee on Appropriations in the changes that have been made in this bill, for the reason that as a member of the committee I antagonized the majority in introducing most of the changes which were incorporated in the bill. But, sir, I am further compelled by truth to admit that I believe the gentlemen composing the majority were governed by conscientious convictions that whilst they were, by these changes, securing economy in expenditures they were doing so without detriment to the public service. I think they were mistaken in some of their views, but have no doubt of their good motives.

I differed with the majority in regard to the abolition of the offices of surveyors-general. I also differed with them because they did not provide a sufficient force in the Pension Office to speedily dispose of claims arising under the lately enacted Mexican pension act, as well as many other changes. Some gentlemen seem greatly surprised that this bill contains some one hundred and forty changes over the bill of last year. This is not unusual in a bill of this kind. If you examine the legislative bill of past sessions you will find there were nearly as many changes in them as in this bill. In the Forty-fourth Congress there were twice as many changes in the legislative bill as there are in the bill of this session.

It was supposed we would expedite business in this Congress by breaking up, under the new rules, to a large extent, the work of the Committee on Appropriations and dividing a portion of its labors among other committees; but, sir, the plan is a failure. The naval appropriation bill was given, accordingly, to the Naval Committee. That committee had but one bill, while the Committee on Appropriations had six bills. What was the result? Our committee has reported all its bills except one. The Naval Committee did not succeed in passing its one appropriation bill until three days ago. The Committee on Foreign Affairs did not pass the diplomatic and consular bill until a few days ago. The Post-Office appropriation bill from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is yet in conference, and so is the Indian bill. I have no time to enumerate further, but I will say that but one bill of this session that was given to a committee outside of the Committee on Appropriations has yet become a law.

Some gentlemen have made loud complaint here that the Committee on Appropriations have assailed the Civil Service Commission. I did not vote for that law. I believed then, and I believe now, in a sensible, honest civil-service reform, but I did not believe that the law which was brought forward and passed was of that character. I regarded it then as a sham, and I regarded a majority of the members who voted for it as hypocritical in their pretense of desire for reform. I will not name them, but I know of gentlemen on that side who, when they take the floor, make loud professions of love for civil-service reform and when they go back into the cloak-room bitterly denounce the law as a humbug and a sham. That bill was born in hypocrisy. During the continuance of the Republican party the administration of its enforcement was a sham and a farce.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How is it now?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The civil-service law has never received an honest, sincere enforcement until Grover Cleveland was elected and inaugurated President. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Why, then, do you go back upon him?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not agree with the committee in the reduction of the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission, but I do agree with it in removing the limitation of the forty-five years' restriction.

My colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] made some complaint about the large force in the Pension Office to-day. Why, sir, has he forgotten that on his own motion in the Forty-seventh Congress the force of that office was increased over eight hundred. The record shows that in that Congress the number of clerks and employés of the Executive Departments were increased over fourteen hundred. What does this bill do? This bill does not increase the force one single employé. In fact, this bill reduces the force ninety-six below what it was last year.

Mr. STEELE. Does it decrease any salaries?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It decreases some salaries and raises some few salaries.

I want to emphasize that statement that the animadversions of my colleague [Mr. CANNON] on the Committee on Appropriations with regard to the number of employés provided by this bill are not justifiable. I want to say further of the Pension Office: I am convinced that any fair man, be he Republican or Democrat, will admit that the present Commissioner of Pensions has been more liberal in his rulings in favor of soldiers and has allowed more pensions during each of the years he has occupied that position than any predecessor he has had. And it will be further admitted that this Democratic Congress and the last have passed more liberal legislation for the Union soldier than ever emanated from any Republican Congress. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side].

A MEMBER. And who vetoed that legislation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, in conclusion, as my time is about up, I wish to repeat that while I differed with the majority of my colleagues on the committee as to most of the changes they have made in this bill, I am convinced they were guided and governed by good motives; that they were not unmindful of the efficiency of the public service while seeking to promote economy wherever it might be accomplished with safety.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL].

Mr. CABELL withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, my disposition on this occasion would naturally be to seek to promote good feeling and harmony here, so that the legislation before the House might be properly and promptly considered, but there are a few facts which I think it desirable to state in this connection. For a long time past the Committee on Appropriations has been criticised as to the measures it has reported. It has grown to be the fashion for the friends of pending legislation which has failed to make a successful transit through the two Houses of Congress to charge its failure upon the Committee on Appropriations, and to say that that committee has done this, that, or the other improper thing, and a part of my time during this session of Congress has been taken up in answering the letters of gentlemen in different sections of the country, to whom some person or persons—of course I do not say any members of this House—have been kind enough to state that the reasons why their particular measures could not be passed was some action of the Committee on Appropriations. It is always very pleasant to have some one else to blame rather than oneself, but I propose to show the House that the members of the Committee on Appropriations do not deserve the criticism that has been made upon them.

Under an order of this House I invited members of that committee to meet here on the 22d of November last, with a view to having the appropriation bills ready in good time. I am not going to say whether gentlemen on the other side responded with alacrity to that invitation or not, but I will say that there were one or two exceptions that did stand out in bold relief. [Laughter.] The committee went to work and prepared the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it, and had it passed through this House on the 19th day of December, after nearly a week's discussion. Such a thing had not been done for years—certainly not during my period of service covering a quarter of a century. That bill went to the Senate. The Senate retained it for forty-six days, and sent it back here on the 3d day of February.

I sought immediately to have the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in, so that time might be saved and the bill go immediately to conference. But the other side objected and required the commitment of the bill to the Committee on Appropriations. When it came back from that committee I besought this House (and it agreed to the request) to take the bill up out of the order in which it appeared upon the Calendar, so that it might be returned promptly to the Senate. The House, however, refused to save time and consider it in the House. We have been in conference several times on that bill, the controversy between the two Houses being as to four millions of appropriations for various objects.

Next, as to the fortification bill. The fortification bill reported last year is now in conference; and when reported from the conference committee will be in such a shape, I hope, as to take the place of the bill for this year as well as last year. We have given diligent attention to this subject of armament; for you must know, Mr. Chairman, that there is no end to the schemes and plans in this connection; they are of every kind, and the amounts asked vary from $5,000,000 to $75,000,000.

The pension appropriation bill has been passed. It is true there is yet to be passed another pension bill—that providing for pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war—but it will be remembered that the bill calling for those pensions has only recently become a law.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill awaits final action in conference. The conferees are contending as to an enormous increase by the Senate, approaching one-half million of dollars in connection with the government of this District, most of this sum being for the laying out of suburban streets and avenues, intended to add value to the real estate of property holders. Such procedure will necessitate large additional appropriations. That is what the House conferees are contending against.

The Post-Office appropriation bill is in conference, there being a struggle between the two Houses as to a subsidy, or what some of us characterize as such.

As to the deficiency appropriation bill, that has been reported to this House as early as usual. Members understand that we have to delay the completion of this bill for the reason that we are in receipt almost daily of new estimates having application to that bill. The deficiency bill is not behind, and I hope it will find a speedy passage through this House, unless those people who want to secure appropriations in behalf of Pacific railroad claims and other claims of that character shall prevent its swift transit. We may be required to seek a suspension of the rules.

Let us see how matters stand as to this legislative appropriation bill now under consideration. It has been in this House, reported from the Committee on Appropriations, for nearly a month. Is it the fault of the committee that it has not been taken up? No, sir; it is the fault of this House. If the House had been willing it could have been taken up many days ago. The appeal has been frequently made to members of this House on all sides to take it up.

Mr. HISCOCK addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. RANDALL. One more point. An effort has been made to-day to belittle this House, and especially this side of the House, in connection with legislation. While there have been omissions of legislation in some directions, taken as a whole in its scope of legislation, this House stands in most favorable light as compared with past Congresses. It has placed upon the statute-books more useful legislation than I have ever known to be passed during any single session of Congress since I have been a member. [Applause.]

It will not do for the other side to undertake to cast odium upon this side of the House in that particular. This side is, in my judgment, to be commended by the people for its record in connection with straightforward, clean, useful legislation, looking to the promotion of the best interests of the American people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has two minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania when the first motion was made to take up the legislative bill in this House?

Mr. RANDALL. Why, sir, I passed from one side of this House to the other and begged from the very day the bill was reported that you would take it up.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman does not say when the first motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole and take it up.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated, this bill has been before the House since the third day of the present month. I will not state how often I have asked the House to take up the bill for consideration in Committee of the Whole; but I have certainly done so several times.

Mr. REED. When was the first time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not undertake to state at what particular times I made the request, for I have not the record before me; but I made that request several times before the naval appropriation bill was taken up. I have anticipated this trouble, because it has occurred at every short session for many years.

Mr. REED. When was the first time that the House was asked to take up this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I say that I have not the dates before me.

Mr. REED. And in antagonism to what?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not undertake to state.

Mr. REED. I wish you would.

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply state that on several occasions, and before the naval appropriation bill was taken up, I have asked the House to consider this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy but a moment upon another matter. Gentlemen have assumed that there is something unusual in this bill. The law for the present year reduced the appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government something over $700,000. This bill makes a reduction upon the law of the present year to the amount of $418,545.50. This reduction of more than $418,000 will no doubt be diminished somewhat before the bill is completed, even if the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations are accepted. I take it for granted, however, that this bill ought to pass with a reduction of about $400,000 upon the present law. The increases of salaries are twelve in number; the number of officers regularly dispensed with ninety-six; while, of course, a large number of salaries have been in a moderate degree reduced. But I am confident that no salary has been so reduced as to impair in any degree the efficiency of the public service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. By order of the House all general debate has exhausted. The Clerk will read the first section for debate under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to make a point of order on the words of the paragraph just read, commencing with the word "in," on line 5, and ending with the word "compensation," on line 5.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been read in full before, and it is therefore shown by the bill which has been read that the salary of the Commissioner of Customs is fixed in this bill at $3,600, whereas in the last legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which passed Congress the salary was there fixed at $4,000, and in the general law it is fixed at $4,500. If these words "in full compensation" therefore are permitted to remain in the bill, it changes existing law in that it deprives the Commissioner of Customs of the salary which is due him in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and which is being paid to him in the current fiscal year.

This point is not a new one, since it was raised on this very bill on these words by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration in the first session of this Congress; and it was there held, after elaborate debate, by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who sits on my right, as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, that these words, taken in connection with salaries fixed in the bill at amounts under what they are fixed in existing law, were a violation of that rule of the House, the third clause of Rule XXI, which provides "that there shall not be reported in any appropriation bill any provision changing existing law."

Referring, therefore, to the point of order made in that session and held to be good in that session, I make the point now that those words taken in connection with other provisions of the bill are a violation of the rules of the House in that they change existing law.

The point of order, made by the gentleman from Illinois in the last session of Congress, is to be found on page 5489 of volume 80 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the decision of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole in that session will be found on page 5533, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MORRISON. I make the point of order that the words "in full compensation for the service," &c., is new legislation changing existing law. I make this point now because in the bill there are certain salaries provided for, and the amount appropriated is sometimes less and sometimes more than the salary fixed by law, and therefore against the rules. I do not know whether the point of order is properly interposed here; but I desire to make it in time to save it. I want to insist and intend to insist on a compliance with the rules of the House, whether it takes in or leaves out civil-service changes or limitations which have just now been under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in considering this question of order is not permitted to inquire into the wisdom of legislation or importance of legislation, but simply to the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] whether or not it is in order to legislate on appropriation bills. It is conceded in the debate by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in the bill salaries have been reduced in amount from the general provision of law. The question, therefore, arises as to the construction of Rule XXI of the present House of Representatives. It is important we should go back to the Forty-fourth Congress and examine the rule there and the consequent changes, with a view of ascertaining what the purpose of Congress was in relation thereto.

On page 193 of Barclay's Digest the rule is:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures." (Rule 120.)

Complaint of the extraordinary exercises of power given to the Committee on Appropriations under this rule continued until the Forty-sixth Congress, when that rule was changed and the power of the committee mitigated, so as to read as follows:

"3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures."

Still there was complaint made of the extraordinary power given to the Committee on Appropriations by reason of this rule, and at that session of Congress the following was adopted in lieu thereof:

"3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto."

All the qualifications of the rule of the preceding Congresses—Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth, and subsequently the Forty-seventh—have been restricted, and the rule is left as I have read it.

During the consideration of this question an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as has already been stated, a part of which is as follows:

"Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order upon any general appropriation bill, or be received as an amendment thereto; but provisions or amendments for the direct reduction of the number, salary, and compensation of officers and employés of the United States shall be in order on a general appropriation bill if germane to the subject-matter of the bill."

On this proposition there was a yea-and-nay vote, as follows: Yeas 69, noes 205. I have, therefore, no difficulty in coming to a conclusion, in the light of the preceding rules and the action of the present House, that it is not in order to provide for the reduction of a salary on an appropriation bill where such salary has been fixed by law.

It was claimed by some gentlemen in the course of the debate that this is not a limitation upon a salary, but is a mere limitation upon the appropriation. The reduction of a salary in this way perhaps is a restriction as to what the word limitation upon an appropriation means. If so, it is quite easy to see what the present House of Representatives intended to do, to wit, to exclude what may be called limitations upon appropriation bills.

But it is argued by gentlemen that this does not repeal the law. The language of the rule is, "change existing law." Without this provision in this bill, under the operation of the general law fixing the salary during the fiscal year 1878, the officer would be entitled to the full amount of his salary; such would be the operation of law. He would be entitled to it by force of statute; but this provision amends it to that extent, and is, therefore, a change of existing law in the opinion of the Chair.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. What does the Chair rule out as being within the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the whole clause should be excluded, that is to say, the words "in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year," &c., because it is provided in a subsequent part of the bill, as conceded in the debate as well as ascertained by the Chair upon an examination, there is a reduction of salary as fixed by law.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not desire to detain the House with any further discussion of this point of order. It is clearly set forth in the decision which has been read, and further argument I deem to be useless.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be heard for a minute. There is no gentleman of the House for whose opinion as a parliamentarian I have higher respect than the gentleman from Georgia, who made the ruling referred to, and I am confident on a careful review of the subject the gentleman from Georgia himself will see the point is not well taken, and for two reasons. First, it is but a part of the text of the preliminary declaration of the purpose of the appropriations; and, secondly, it operates simply as a limitation of the expenditure of money, namely, this money shall be expended in payment of salaries.

I wish to call attention to the fact, if the point of order which has been made against that language, and which has been in the bill ever since the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, it is made also against the whole paragraph. If it is good against that language it is equally good against the words "shall be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," which are also in that paragraph. They all stand upon the same footing. If the construction of the gentleman from Georgia is followed out literally there is not a word in the whole of that paragraph which can stand, because they stand upon the same footing as the words "in full compensation."

But the second point is one I rely upon mainly, and that is it operates simply as a limitation of the money named in the bill, and it has never been held the House can not impose any limitation it thinks proper on the money it appropriates.

A single word further. The gentleman from Georgia will see if the words "in full compensation" are subject to the point of order the whole paragraph goes out; and I submit on such a question the terms of a good construction can not be overlooked.

So the gentleman from Louisiana can just as well make his point of order upon the whole language of the paragraph, every part of it, as upon this part of it, and it applies as well to the general proposition, to legislate by appropriations, as to this particular item. So, therefore, if the point of order was held to be good, there are no words appropriating money, or prescribing any appropriation in the bill, for every appropriation contained in it is subject to the same point.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Louisiana only makes the point of order on the language "in full compensation."

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but the gentleman will see that he could make it with the same propriety on any part of the same paragraph which provides for the appropriations at all.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is just what I do not see.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why?

Mr. BLOUNT. Because there is no legislation connected with the bill itself excepting that provision, as far as this paragraph goes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the declaration "shall be hereby appropriated" a declaration of legislation?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; but we are appropriating, as we do all the time, under the terms of existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. You have no law prescribing what shall be the terms of an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly we have, else we could not appropriate it at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law prescribing the exact terms of the appropriation bill itself.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see the force of the gentleman's argument. I think we have.

Mr. HENLEY. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman will remember, and perhaps many members of the House who were present will remember, that upon the debate which took place on the adoption of our present rules, the gentleman from Indiana himself proposed to incorporate a rule providing that there should be no legislation upon an appropriation bill except in the direction of economy. That was the substance of it. I thought it was a good thing, and voted with the gentleman from Indiana for the adoption of his amendment. In that debate—and that is what I want to call the gentleman's attention——

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, as to that I plead the statute of limitation. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENLEY. I want to quote the gentleman's language and see if he will stand by it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Many things are said hastily here that perhaps in maturer moments we would not care to stand by.

Mr. HENLEY. Permit me to finish the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HENLEY. In that debate the gentleman from Indiana stated with great vehemence—and I have his language here——

Mr. REED. Have you got his vehemence? [Laughter.]

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman stated that if his amendment was rejected—that is, if his amendment to the rule of the House to which I have referred was rejected by the House—it would thereby cut off every opportunity for reducing expenditures by the reduction of salaries.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing to admit if I did that I made a mistake. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman made a mistake, then?

Mr. HOLMAN. I must have done so in the haste of the moment.

Mr. HENLEY. Well, I have got the gentleman to admit his mistake. That is all I ask.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take it all back. [Laughter.] I would be very glad indeed if I was able to say that it was the only mistake I had ever made.

Mr. HENLEY. It simply shows, however, that if the gentleman made a mistake in one instance that he is not to be regarded as infallible.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not by any means.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, you have got him on record as to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, recurring to the question presented here as to whether there is a legislative provision in this portion of the bill, I repeat that if it be held there is, then the same question can be raised about all other portions of this first paragraph. If there be legislative provisions in the bill which are subject to the rule, this I claim not being, then that question can be raised when the question really comes up in the consideration of the bill. It may properly come up when we get to that portion of the bill where there is really a change of law.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the attention of the committee for a few moments for the purpose of sustaining the point of order made by the gentleman from Louisiana. I do not propose, sir, to cover, or attempt to cover, the whole field, but I would refer briefly to the language of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI before it was amended by the rules adopted by this Congress. Before the amendment was adopted the language of this rule was as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amount of money covered by the bill.

Now, that was the original provision of the bill. Let us see see how it stands at present under the change made in the rules by this Congress.

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or any amendment thereto.

Whether it increases or whether it reduces the salaries it amounts to the same thing. What was the idea in dropping the original language, if the language was to have any meaning, unless the purpose was on the part of the House to prohibit the consideration of any amendment upon an appropriation bill, whether in the way of an increase or a reduction, by making it obnoxious to the point of order under the rule.

Now, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] makes the point of order that when this act provides that the sums of money which are thereinafter appropriated to pay the salaries of the officers of the United States therein designated shall be "in full compensation" for their services; that wherever on an examination of existing law by comparing it with the provisions of this bill we find that a less sum has been provided by the bill than is provided by existing law then there has been a change in existing law which makes the provision subject to the point of order. Instead of giving these officers the full compensation which the law provides they shall have you give them less compensation.

Let me cite an instance. In the year 1866 the salary of the assistant treasurer of the United States at Baltimore was fixed at $5,000. That continued until the Forty-fifth Congress, in 1879, when that salary was reduced by the legislative appropriation bill of that year to $4,500. There it stands to-day. There is the law of to-day.

Now, what says the bill? That he shall receive not $4,500, but $4,000. Is he receiving full compensation for the work that he performs in accordance with existing law? If he is, then we have no law on the subject; but we have a law—we have a specific law—which provides that he shall receive a certain definite fixed sum. Your bill comes in and changes that law, and says he shall not receive that sum, but shall receive $500 less. Is not that a change of existing law? If not, why not? And if it is a change of existing law, is it not obnoxious to that provision of the other paragraph of the rule which says:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Is not this a general appropriation bill, and does not this provision in this bill change existing law upon this subject?

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that we are in a somewhat doubtful predicament at this late stage of the session. I take it for granted that no gentlemen here desire an extra session, and that it would be a great deal better for us to pass our appropriation bills and go home; and I take it for granted also that gentlemen are in earnest when they say that they are going to see that these rules are enforced and not violated.

I submit whether or not such a proposition as this might get us out of the difficulty; that is, that the bill itself, as it now stands, be accepted, except such parts of it as are subject to points of order, whether they reduce or increase salaries; and that as regards all such parts the Committee on Appropriations forthwith report a bill embodying provisions in consonance with existing law; in other words, that the committee back out of a position which is entirely untenable, out of a position in which, if they are sustained, we are forced into violating our rules, and that they come into the House with a new bill framed in accordance with the law of the land as it now stands. If they do not choose to do that or adopt some measure looking to an extension of the appropriation, so far as concerns these obnoxious provisions of the bill, till next December, or some similar measure, they will have to take the responsibility of an extra session, if an extra session comes.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Indiana in general debate in response to questions admitted there were a number of salaries reduced in amount in this bill. For the purpose of discussion it is not necessary to designate them, but that is a conceded proposition in the discussion of this question of order.

The gentleman from Indiana proposes by this language, "in full compensation," to provide for any deficiency that may arise by failure to appropriate the sum of money authorized by law by changing the law as to the salary in this regard for the fiscal year. My friend says he has a right to put a limitation on the appropriation of money. This phrase is an invention of my friend from Indiana. It is not known to the rules of the House. It is, I think, not understood by anybody else but my friend in the way he would have it to be understood. It means nothing else except to put on an appropriation bill a legislative provision reducing the amount of salary of an officer for the next fiscal year. If it is not that, what can it be? What is the purpose of my friend from Indiana in this language if it is not to reduce salaries? It is absurd, it is stupendous folly to insert it here unless it be for that purpose.

Mr. Chairman, you will understand, and no gentleman on this floor will do otherwise, that the object of my friend from Indiana is to reduce expenditure by reducing the amount of money to be paid to an officer. It is of course idle to recite the history of this rule to ascertain the purpose of the House. Prior to the Forty-fourth Congress you had under the clause for the contingencies of the Government a right to increase a salary. In the Forty-fourth Congress with a view to reducing expenses you could reduce salaries or have any general legislation provided it tended to retrench expenditure. In the Forty-sixth Congress you limited the power by providing that that might be done by reducing the number of persons to be employed or officers of the Government or the amount paid to them, and there was a continuation of legislation in reference to official salaries until this Congress provided that there should be no legislation on appropriation bills except in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, which words have never been held by anybody to relate to salaries.

The purpose of the change of the rule was comprehended at the time by the gentleman from Indiana. For, as has been quoted already by the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY], he protested against what would be the consequence of it, to wit, that you could not reduce a salary; and when confronted at this moment with the position he then took, my friend feels the force of it, and admits that he made a mistake. He did not say when he made it, but he is making the mistake now. When he made that argument it was fair and legitimate and the House understood the force of it, and the House understands the gentleman now, and understands that his mistake is in making his argument here to-day after the passage of the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will find that the discussion to which he refers was as to legislation on an appropriation bill. I had no occasion then to discuss the question which is raised here to-day. The question here is whether you can put a limitation upon expenditures?

Mr. BLOUNT. What does the gentleman mean by a limitation? Reducing a salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. A limitation on the amount appropriated.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not the gentleman mean that he can put into the bill an amount to pay an officer less than the amount of the salary prescribed by law for that officer?

Mr. HOLMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is what is meant by the gentleman's "limitation," and that is how everybody understood it, and the gentleman's words have misled nobody but himself.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Supreme Court have decided, in the case of the United States vs. Fisher, in 109 Supreme Court Reports, that such a provision as this is only a limitation.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Court of Claims have held, and the Supreme Court has held, that it is a change of law pro tanto; and nobody knows that better than the gentleman from Indiana, for I handed him the decision and know that he read it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman, of course, does not desire to misrepresent me. The decision to which I have referred is in the case of the United States vs. Fisher.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think anybody needs any Supreme Court decisions to settle this point, and therefore I will not accompany my friend in his search for decisions.

Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, a "limitation" in this case means nothing else except to cut down somebody's salary in this bill. And, further, let me say that if any particular person was in the mind of the House in changing its rule, it was my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], with his persistent purpose to do this very thing, and if the rule had named him nobody would have understood it better than it was understood by the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a plain, simple, legal proposition as to which there is neither room nor occasion for excitement or tumult. I ask my learned friend from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY], and also my learned friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], what law is repealed or changed by the words now under consideration. These words "in full compensation" change no law under the third section of Rule XXI. These words change no law. The law remains the same after they are used as it was before.

Mr. ROGERS. Why not strike them out, then?

Mr. BURNES. I am not now talking about that question. I am talking of the legal effect of these words where they stand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If you take the words "in full compensation" in the first section, then take the provision in the third section, that "all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed," and then all the changes in the bill which decrease salaries, do not these provisions taken together pro tanto repeal all laws fixing the salaries which are decreased by the bill?

Mr. BURNES. In answer to my learned friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], I beg to say to him that I can not pretend that there are not provisions in this bill changing existing law, but I am speaking now of the provision under consideration against which the point of order has been made. These words "in full compensation" are merely words of propriety, words of sufficiency. It may be very appropriate, and we all like to have the words "in full" when we take a receipt. In like manner, these words "in full compensation" are here used as words of propriety. They may be voted out, but they can not go out by virtue of the point of order raised under the third paragraph of Rule XXI.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I again ask these gentlemen to point to the statute which these words repeal, alter, or change.

I understand it has been decided in the courts of the country that, so far as concerns the repeal or change of any existing law, gentlemen whose salaries are reduced below the figure authorized by law can go into the Court of Claims and recover by an action at law.

Now, as a legal proposition this question to my mind is as clear as the light that comes from heaven.

A MEMBER. Does the light here come from heaven?

Mr. BURNES. There is no heat necessary on this subject; there is no question of consistency with regard to my friend from Indiana. There is no question as to where the light comes from, as suggested by my esteemed friend here. He thinks perhaps that the light of this House comes from the infernal regions instead of the throne of the blessed God.

I rose to say that as a mere legal proposition it is incumbent that gentlemen insisting on this point of order should point out the law that is changed or altered.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], I will simply read a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States vs. Langston, which reviews the case referred to by the gentleman from Indiana—the case of Fisher—and in which the Supreme Court holds that the use of the language "in full compensation" amounts to a suspension during the year of the general law fixing the salary.

In the case of Langston it was maintained by the Attorney-General representing the United States that as Congress has failed for several years to appropriate the full amount allowed by the statute the failure was tantamount to a declaration that Congress intended that the salary affixed to the position occupied by that gentleman should be the amount appropriated and no more. In response to that position the court held that as the words "in full compensation" or words of similar import and effect did not appear in the act the mere failure to make the necessary appropriation neither repealed nor suspended the general law fixing the salary.

This case—

Says the court—

is distinguishable from the United States vs. Fisher, (U. S. 143, 146)—

The case cited by the gentleman from Indiana—and United States vs. Mitchell (Id., 146, 149). In Fisher's case it was held that the clause in the Revised Statutes fixing the salary of the chief-justice and associate justice of Wyoming at $3,000 per annum was suspended by the provision in each of the appropriation acts for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879 and 1880, which declared that the sums therein specified—among which was $2,600 each to the governor, chief-justice, and two associate judges of Wyoming—were appropriated "in full compensation" for the service of those years. The claim of Fisher for compensation on the basis fixed by the Revised Statutes was consequently rejected.

It will thus be seen that the claim of Fisher was rejected because the words "in full compensation" appeared in the appropriation act for that year.

This court said: "We can not adopt the view of the appellee unless we eliminate from the statute the words 'in full compensation,' which Congress, abandoning the long-used form of the appropriation acts, has ex industria inserted. Out duty is to give them effect. When Congress has said that the sum appropriated shall be in full compensation of the services of the appellee, we can not say that it shall not be in full compensation, and allow him a greater sum."

* * * * * * *

The case before us does not come within the principle that controlled the determination of the other cases. The salary of the minister to Hayti was originally fixed at the sum of $7,500. Neither of the acts appropriating $5,000 for his benefit, during the fiscal year in question, contains any language to the effect that such sum shall be "in full compensation" for those years; now, was there in either of them an appropriation of money "for additional pay," from which it might be inferred that Congress intended to repeal the act fixing his annual salary at $7,500?

While the case is not free from difficulty the court is of opinion that according to the settled rules of interpretation a statute fixing the annual salary of a public officer at a named sum, without limitation as to time, should not be deemed abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments which merely appropriated a less amount for the services of that officer for particular fiscal years, and which contained no words that expressly or by clear implication modified or repealed the previous law.

Now, it seems to me from the decision of the court in that case, and from the review of the decision in the case which the gentleman from Indiana has cited, not only to-day but frequently heretofore, that the use of the language "in full compensation" means not that the original appropriation act is repealed in the sense spoken of by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], but that it is suspended during the time that this appropriation act is law, namely, till the end of the fiscal year, after which the original salary as provided in the Revised Statutes is the property of the individual who fills the office, unless Congress should again, by the insertion of the language "in full compensation" suspend for the time being—that is, for the year during which the appropriation act is law—the original provision in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. Chairman, if such is not the legal effect, why does the gentleman from Indiana put this language in the bill? If this is not the legal effect and import of the words "in full compensation," these words may be rejected as surplusage. Why does the gentleman contend so strenuously and argue so vehemently for the retention of that language if it means nothing? Why consume the valuable time of this House during the closing days of the session in idle argument, in vapid declamation, in discussing a matter which is of no importance? Why does the gentleman, I ask again, contend so vigorously for the retention of this language if it has no meaning? Much as I respect the gentleman's legal opinion, much as I admire his economical notions, I can not refrain from saying that I prefer to follow, in my vote, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on this question.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this point of order is not well taken. I base my view upon the fact that the words in this first paragraph against which the point of order is taken do not of themselves repeal or affect any existing law. They must be united in their operation with some subsequent clause or section before there can be any change of existing law. If, as has been suggested, there are subsequent clauses of this bill which increase or reduce the salaries of officers, it is those clauses themselves which, taken in connection with these words, "in full compensation," may have the effect of changing existing law. But not having reached those paragraphs, the present words are not liable to the point of order.

The rules of this House, as I apprehend, contemplate that when this "bill for an act" shall have become an act, its appropriations of salary shall then be in full compensation for all services. The rules of the House are that in a bill of this kind there shall be no proposition either to reduce or to increase any salary or compensation as fixed by law; and it ought to be and is presumed that when by a proper application of the rules this House shall have perfected the bill, it will be a bill in full compensation for the services of public officers.

A question of order is a very different thing from a motion to amend, to add, or to strike out. If the House in perfecting this bill should see fit to change any salaries, it would then be entirely proper, by motion, to strike out these words, because they would cease truthfully to have application. But if the words should now be struck out on a point of order, the House would be precluded from framing a bill that should be in full compensation of any of the salaries; it would deny to itself the right to declare that the compensation allowed to a single one of the officers mentioned in the bill is full compensation.

Now, while distinguished gentlemen here have stated as a matter of fact that this bill as reported does, in effect, change existing law, I say that so far as concerns the power of the House to reach a question of that kind by a point of order, the House does not know what is in this bill beyond the point thus far reached in its consideration.

We are taking it paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Has not this bill been read before the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HALL. Yes; it has.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And its provisions are known to the members?

Mr. HALL. They are.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Every one read to the House and pending before it.

Mr. HALL. They are known for the purpose of amendments, for the purpose of adding to and striking out; but they are not known to questions of order until the several paragraphs are reached in their order.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALL. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. This bill makes appropriations for less amounts than existing law provides as salaries of certain officers. If the words "in full compensation" were not in the bill, could not these officers recover the balance due them, or the difference between the amount appropriated and the amount fixed by law?

Mr. HALL. I will answer the gentleman. The words against which the point of order is made, in so far as they have any legal consequence, are to be taken in connection with the paragraphs which follow.

Mr. MILLS. If these words were not in the bill could not the officer recover the full amount of his salary fixed by law?

Mr. HALL. I presume he could.

Mr. MILLS. If these words did not preclude him from doing that then there seems to be change of law.

Mr. HALL. I will answer the gentleman from Texas in this way. Mr. Chairman, several paragraphs in this bill declare the compensation for each officer shall be less or greater. Those are the paragraphs which change the law and the paragraphs against which the point is now made. As I have already stated, if the rules of the House were properly carried out that this bill shall not contain any change of existing law, even when the committee came to the separate paragraphs they would find no change of law against which to make any such point of order. But if there are such changes of existing law as each paragraph is reached the point of order can be made against it, and it will have to go out. That would be acting legally and logically in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. HENLEY. If this point of order is sustained the effect of it is this must go out. What then is the difference?

Mr. HALL. The bill is not amended.

Mr. HENLEY. It is.

Mr. HALL. It is changed, but it is not amended by any order of the House.

Mr. HENLEY. That is as fine spun as some of your other propositions.

Mr. HALL. I thank the gentleman for his classical compliment.

Mr. BLAND. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Suppose the paragraph remains in the bill and these provisions which fail to appropriate did not go out of the bill, would not the effect be to change existing laws? In other words, would not these officers fail to recover, although if these words were not there they might recover under the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. HALL. I understand the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLAND. Would they not be prevented from recovering by keeping in these words?

Mr. HALL. If these words are allowed to remain in the paragraph when you reach those paragraphs which do change the law, and you change them to conform to the law, what harm is done?

Mr. BLAND. But suppose you do not change them?

Mr. HALL. If the House will not enforce its own rules, but will act in defiance of them, what will be gained by this point of order?

Mr. BLAND. But suppose the House does not change these paragraphs, then they become existing law.

Mr. HALL. Then so far as the point is concerned the House has had the opportunity to act for itself, and can say whether they shall remain as they are or not. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is not on the words "in full compensation" simply, but on those words in connection with such words of the act as fixed the appropriation at a less amount than the salary provided by law. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL] these words may remain in the bill, and when we reach any paragraph containing a lower amount than that fixed by law it would be obnoxious to the point of order. If you strike out these words the paragraphs will be in order in every case where amounts reported are less than those fixed by law. If you strike these words out, then, under the decision of the Supreme Court, in a case of that kind, the law is neither suspended nor changed, but it is merely a failure to appropriate, and the balance is recoverable in the Court of Claims.

Suppose instead of the words "in full compensation" the words had been "in partial compensation," that would not change existing law as to such appropriations as are reported at less than the compensation allowed by law, but would change existing law in those instances where the committee has reported an appropriation of the full salary allowed by law.

Now, I have no sympathy with the effort made in this bill to bring into the House new legislation, unjust to the employés of the Government in some instances, and showing undue preferences to them in others. But I do submit, Mr. Chairman, that the way to reach that difficulty, and the only way, is to observe and call attention to each place and instance where the violation is proposed.

It is not in these words "in full compensation." The rule of the House requires that they shall bring in an appropriation bill in full compensation. That is what we want them to do. We direct them virtually under that rule to bring in a bill in full compensation. A violation of the rule, to which the point of order applies, is where they have failed to do what the rule requires, and that is in each individual appropriation itself.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. DIBBLE. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the gentleman to state that with this provision out of the bill they may report an amount less than the amount fixed by law for the salary, and that the difference can be recovered in the Court of Claims. I ask my friend if the rule which requires that they shall report only such appropriations as were authorized by existing law is conformed to when they report a different sum, whether more or less, than the law provides.

Mr. RYAN. Can we not have a decision on the point of order?

Mr. DIBBLE. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Georgia, I will simply say that the rule only prohibits appropriations "for any expenditure not previously authorized by law;" and if the whole of it is authorized by law, certainly any part of it is; and therefore it would not be obnoxious to the point of order if those words were eliminated from the bill, because it might be an appropriation for nine months or ten months of the time, leaving the balance to be appropriated in a deficiency or some other bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to know if it is possible in any way for the committee to get a ruling upon this question of order without consuming so much time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the debate will probably run but a few moments longer, as but one or two gentlemen desire to be heard.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, the point of order which is now made is directed to the words "in full compensation" in the first paragraph of the bill. I presume the purpose of making the point on that is to reach all of the changes, or all of those which are supposed to be changes, in existing law throughout the bill; and therefore the point is manifestly prematurely made. It is directed towards only a part of that which is objectionable, because, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL], these words standing alone are not objectionable. They do not affect anybody; they do not affect any officer's salary either by increase or diminution.

You must take these words and connect them with some subsequent paragraph in the bill in order that the point of order may have anything to operate upon.

Now I wish to show, for I think I can, that the point of order can not be made in this way to operate upon all the supposed changes of existing law in the bill. They are not all alike. They stand upon different bases. It is true that the Supreme Court has held that where the amount appropriated is less than that fixed by statute, the officer, if he take the amount appropriated, and the language in the bill under which he is paid provides that the sum which he thus takes "shall be in full compensation," that under those circumstances he can not recover the excess allowed by the statute. That is based by the court upon the ground of the suspension of the law during the fiscal year while this language in the appropriation bill is in force. It seems to me it would have been better, perhaps, to have based it upon the ground of estoppel; by accepting the smaller amount that he would be estopped from recovering the over-plus, but the court places it upon the ground of conflict:

> Not only do the words of the statute make the intentions of Congress manifest, but that intention is plainly repugnant to the former statute which fixes the salary of the chief justice at $3,000. It is impossible that both acts should stand. No ingenuity can reconcile them. The later act must therefore prevail, and the earlier act must for the time covered by the appropriation before referred to be considered as suspended.

Then, Mr. Chairman, when you reach a point in the appropriation bill which fixes the salary at a less amount than some existing law provides shall be the salary, the point of order does lie that it changes existing law, because although only a suspension it is a change. The language of the rule is broad and plain. It says "any change of existing law." Well, a suspension is a change of existing law as well as a repeal.

Now, the additional reason: We find in the appropriation bill of last year in its third section and in the same words employed in this bill:

> All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Now, in the progress of the committee in the consideration of this bill no doubt a change will be reached of this character. Where an existing law fixes the amount of the salary, and for the first time the appropriation is less than the amount fixed there, because of the change by suspension the point of order is good. But suppose it is a case where some existing law, some permanent statute, fixes the salary of an officer prior to the last appropriation bill at $4,000 per annum and in the last appropriation bill $3,000 only was appropriated for that officer. It went on, and that officer accepted it. The decison of the court in the Langston case is that an officer for whom a less sum is appropriated may decline to take it with the expiration of the period of the appropriation; that is, on the principle that to recover his whole salary he must wait until the whole salary is due before he goes into the Court of Claims to sue for the whole amount, declining to take the less amount appropriated. But, Mr. Chairman, you see the marked difference. If in the case that I have put an officer has his salary fixed at $4,000 prior to the passage of the last annual appropriation bill and that annual appropriation fixes it at $3,000 it becomes a law by virtue of the third section in the last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. And is then permanent law, too.

Mr. OATES. I will deal with that in a moment. I read from this bill because the language is the same as in that of last year. The third section is that something is "repealed"—not suspended but repealed. There can not be any mistake about these words or the meaning of them:

> All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act.

That is the language used in the last annual appropriation bill. Then, sir, the words "inconsistent or in conflict with" are not words limited in their operation merely for the period of appropriation, for the year, like the words used in the first paragraph, against which this point of order is directed. They are words of designation. Something is repealed, and these words preceding designate what it is that is repealed.

If by the decision of the court the appropriation of a less amount suspends the existing law because it is in conflict with it, in the language of the court, utterly inconsistent with it, then there can be no doubt what is repealed when the act says:

> That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

We have in this bill some cases where for the first time a smaller amount is appropriated than that allowed by the law fixing the salary. There when it is reached the point of order can be made and is good against that change.

But when you reach one where the salary was changed in the last appropriation bill, the law fixing or attempting to fix the salary permanently was by that act absolutely repealed, and there is no law now fixing the amount of that salary; and it is in the discretion of Congress to appropriate whatever amount they see proper.

Mr. Chairman, as to the merits of it I have nothing at all to say, whether it was wise to make these changes or not. I am dealing with this as a legal question, and I am perfectly satisfied that there are two different classes of changes in this bill, and the point of order being now made against these words can not apply to and reach those classes. This demonstrates that it is prematurely made and that gentlemen should withhold their points until they reach the paragraphs in the bill that are objectionable to them. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to take only a single moment of the time of the committee. The single question before us is whether the three words under consideration, "in full compensation," change existing law in any respect. If they do, then they are out of order. I understand it to be admitted by the gentleman in charge of the bill that there are paragraphs in the bill which reduce the compensation of certain officials as fixed by existing statute.

Mr. STEELE. And some paragraphs which raise other salaries.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; and some paragraphs which raise the salaries above the compensation allowed by statute. The latter case perhaps would not be affected by the words.

I undertake to say the difficulty is not that the Appropriations Committee undertook in the appropriation bill to reduce salaries. The difficulty is it changes the rights of these officers in regard to their remedies if they undertake so to reduce them. For instance, I find on page 8 of this bill an appropriation for the salaries of members of this House and Delegates, and the amount carried is $1,695,000, which allows each Member and Delegate $5,000 according to the statute. Supposing the committee had appropriated only sufficient to pay each Member and Delegate $4,000, then each Member and Delegate who received that compensation, without the paragraph or section in dispute, would, under the statute, have a right to go into the Court of Claims and collect the other $1,000. If the committee have not undertaken to change the law which fixes that compensation but have simply underappropriated, if these words remain in, that right or power of going into the Court of Claims to collect the balance of compensatian as fixed by prior law is waived or dispensed with. In other words, every gentleman who would accept $4,000 as his compensation would be obliged to accept it as full compensation, and thereby his right of remedy to collect the balance of the $5,000 is lost.

Without those three words he would have that right under the law. With those three words he has no such right under the law. In other words, the law is changed by these words as to the right of the party to collect the balance of his compensation as fixed by existing law. It is said that the point of order is premature, and that it should be made upon each paragraph or section of the bill. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is not premature, because in the absence of these words "in full compensation" there remains, according to the decision of the Supreme Court, a right to collect the balance of the compensation due, but with those three words there is no such right. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I recollect the old proverb that a multitude of words darken counsel, and I shall not occupy more than half a minute. I merely want to say that it occurs to me that this whole matter has been foreclosed by a decision and acquiescence during this Congress. The occupant of the chair [Mr. SPRINGER] is a good parliamentarian, and I do not think he needs much instruction, but there seems to me to be strong evidence in this whole matter of an intention upon the other side of the House to so conduct the public business as to force an extra session.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman——

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order, but will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I arise to say that I agree with the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] that these words "in full compensation" should be stricken out. That this bill does change the requirements of existing law every member on this floor knows, for we heard every word of the bill read on Saturday night. Now, sir, if it is conceded that the bill does change existing law and does put in jeopardy the rights of employés of the Government, why not strike out this provision? Why not put the matter beyond question?

The gentleman from Alabama says that we can take up and amend the various provisions of the bill step by step, but I regard this provision which stands here in the very fore-front of the bill as an agreement and contract on the part of the House that what follows shall be considered in the light of what has been already discussed and agreed to. At the very outset we ought to do what is right and wise, and not trust to a haphazard of future votes upon other portions of the bill. Mr. Chairman, I know the old saying which has come down to us from our English ancestors:

> I hear a lion in the lobby roar;
> Say, Mr. Speaker, shall we shut the door
> And keep him there, or shall we let him in,
> To try if we can turn him out again?

Now is the right time to do the right thing by sustaining the point of order made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. And now, Mr. Chairman, having said my say, I take my seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] makes the point of order that the words "in full compensation" in this clause of the bill are obnoxious to the rule of the House, which prohibits the incorporation in an appropriation bill of any provision changing existing law. It will be observed by reference to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill passed at the last session that those words appear in that law, notwithstanding the fact that they were stricken out on the point of order.

In addition, the third section of the bill provides that "all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed;" so that it would seem to the present occupant of the chair that if these words had been theretofore in conflict with any existing law, they would not have been so after the bill had passed, because all provisions of law inconsistent with them were repealed. The making of the point of order at this time, whether the provision remains in or is stricken out by a vote of the committee, will of course affect subsequent clauses in the bill. Wherever it may appear hereafter in the consideration of this bill that any salary has been increased beyond the amount fixed by a permanent law which has not been repealed, the point of order against such change must be sustained upon the ground that the change is in conflict with existing law. If, however, the appropriation proposed in the bill should be less than the amount prescribed in the existing law, then, if the provision now in question remained in the bill, it would be in conflict with the existing law to make the reduction and make the reduced appropriation "in full compensation."

But if those words, "in full compensation," were stricken out, the Chair would not hold that an appropriation of a less amount than that prescribed by law was in conflict with the law, because it is not to be assumed that the Chair could insist that the committee or the House should appropriate the full amount prescribed by the statute. It is for the committee and the House to determine whether they will appropriate the full amount or not. The courts have held that Congress may appropriate for the partial payment of a salary, and that the party may thereafter recover the balance. The opinion of the present occupant of the Chair is that the point of order, in so far as it is designed to reach subsequent clauses of the bill, is prematurely made, and that this provision is not obnoxious to the point of order.

But this question was submitted to the Committee of the Whole at the last session of Congress, and the words were then held to be obnoxious to the rule; and, in deference to the opinion then expressed and not appealed from, the Chair will not now decide the question, but will submit it to the committee. The question, therefore, is whether the committee will sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD.]

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 164, noes 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the words are stricken from the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

"That, for the purpose of providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the first half of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888—that is to say, from the 1st day of July, 1887, to the 31st day of December, 1887, inclusive, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one-half the sums of money and for the like purposes, and continuing the same provisions relating thereto, as were appropriated for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, by the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June, 1887, and for other purposes,' approved July 31, 1886, subject to all the limitations and conditions in respect to the disbursement of the appropriations hereby made that were imposed by said act and the other laws of the United States upon or in respect to the appropriations made by that act."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order upon that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that the proposition is out of order—first, because it is new legislation; secondly, because this being offered as a substitute for the entire bill, the bill must first be read for the purpose of amendment; so that the substitute can, in no event, be considered until the several paragraphs of the bill have been read and considered. But my first point of order is that the amendment is new legislation—a change of existing law. The existing law makes specific appropriations of money for each of the several Departments of the Government. I submit that this is a change of the law in that respect; for some of these appropriations are made under limitations which have already expired. Notably, there is the appropriation for the current year of a large sum of money for the support of the special examiners appointed under the Pension Bureau. They are appointed for a single year, and their term of service under the present law terminates on the 30th day of next June. By the operation of the provision just read they would be continued in service for another year. Similar provisions apply to a great many other portions of the appropriation act for the current fiscal year, as the Chair will discover on examination. So that it is clear that this provision changes existing law, inasmuch as it extends the terms of offices which by law will expire on the 30th day of June next. This of itself would be sufficient to require that the point of order be sustained.

But my second point is that this proposition, being offered in the nature of a substitute, it can not be considered until the bill has been read through and considered by paragraphs.

Mr. REED. It can be offered, to be pending.

Mr. BURROWS. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] will pardon me a moment. Not long since a substitute was offered for a very large bill like this, and by that means the bill was gotten back into the House and then the House voted down the substitute and put through the original bill. Now we want some distinct understanding this time that that is not to be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope this discussion will be confined to the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly conscious, and I was so when I asked for the reading of this amendment, that the proper time for this question to be voted on is after the bill has been read through. I concede that broadly; but I offer the proposition now and desire to have it pending.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have just a few further observations to make. I listened this morning with some attention to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL]. It is the first time in my experience here——

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. ROGERS. I trust the gentleman from Indiana will not interrupt me again. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word of the pending provision.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that the question of order is pending. All I insist upon is that my friend shall confine himself to that question.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have admitted broadly that this point of order is correctly made so far as it is contended that the vote on my proposition must be postponed until we have gone through with the bill by paragraphs. I now move to strike out the last words of the pending paragraph——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in his opinion this substitute may now be offered, but it can not be voted upon until the Committee of the Whole has exhausted its right to amend the text of the bill. To that extent the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is sustained.

Mr. HOLMAN. The real point has not been decided—whether it is in order or not on the ground of objection that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair could not determine whether it is new legislation or not without comparing it with the text of the bill after it has been gone through with. The Chair merely recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] to move his amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Arkansas introduces his amendment now, but it is not to be voted on until it is reached in order after the committee has gone through with the text of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. That is the reason why I offered it.

Mr. HOLMAN. But what has become of the other point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The other point of order will be postponed in like manner until the proposition is reached for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is considered the point of order is still pending to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is still pending and will go over with the proposition until it is reached.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a word to say, and I think I have the floor for that purpose, and I hope I will not be interrupted. I repeat what I was about to say. I listened with unusual interest to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was a statement complimentary to the House, and as such I accept it. But I do not accept it as reflecting any sort of compliment on the Committee on Appropriations.

Sir, this bill was reported on the 3d day of February, and I am conscious of the fact that two or three staggers [laughter] have been made here to get it up, and very recently as my friend states [laughter], but it has never been done except when it antagonized some appropriation bill. In addition, if it be true that it has been offered at some time when an appropriation bill has not antagonized it, it is the first time I have seen the great premier on this side come into this House and confess that with the right of way wide open for appropriation bills, and this House refuse him the right to go forward.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not present.

Mr. PETTIBONE. He ought to be here.

Mr. HOLMAN. He is on a conference committee with the Senate.

Mr. ROGERS. That does not matter. It is not personal; it is public.

Let me say one thing right here. I serve notice on the Appropriations Committee now that they are not going to pass this bill without consideration of its provisions. [Cries of "Good!" and applause.]

I will state another fact, and it is this: That they shall never pass another bill under a suspension of the rules, if one objection will cause it to be read.

My appeal, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Indiana is this, that here, in the closing hours of the session, lest the country fix the responsibility of an extra session where it belongs, that they recede from their bill and adopt the measure I offered and let it go to the Senate, that they may have time for some consideration of it. I express the opinion, and that is my belief and judgment, that the precipitation of an appropriation bill of $20,000,000 upon the House at this time is a reflection on the integrity as well as on the intelligence of this House, and besides it is an indecency to the Senate as well as a great outrage on the President of the United States, who has to sign it without reasonable opportunity to read it. [Applause.]

One of two things, Mr. Chairman, stares us in the face: we have either to compel the Appropriations Committee to abide by the rules of the House, or we have to surrender our power in this House and bow down before them. When we sought to change these rules then the struggle came while we were curtailing the powers of the Appropriations Committee. We were told then by the gentleman from Indiana that if that rule was established we could not reduce salaries. Then, like all persons who unsurp power, they were seen struggling to hold on to the power they had usurped. But we cut off their power to legislate in appropriation bills, and now the struggle is the other way. They are seen in a struggle to usurp the same power this House has taken from them by its rules. For one, I am for enforcing the rules of the House on the committee from this time forward.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his formal amendment, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper: For Sergeant-at-Arms, $4,320; horse and wagon for his use, $600; for clerk to Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,000; assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; acting assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; one messenger, acting as assistant doorkeeper, $1,800; one messenger, acting as assistant doorkeeper, $1,600; assistant messenger on the floor of the Senate, $1,200; upholsterer and locksmith, $1,440; postmaster to the Senate, $2,250; assistant postmaster and mail-carrrier, $2,088; one clerk in the post-office, $1,800; five mail-carriers, at $1,200 each; four riding pages, at $912.50 each; superintendentof the document-room (Amzi Smith), $2,592; two assistants in document-room, at $1,440 each; one clerk to the superintendent of the document-room, $1,440; one page in the document-room, $720; superintendent of the folding-room, $2,160; one assistant in the folding-room, $1,200; one clerk in the folding-room, $1,000; one foreman in the folding-room, $1,200; six folders, at $3 per day while actually employed, $6,588; twenty-seven messengers, at $1,440 each; messenger in charge of store-room, $1,200; messenger to the Official Reporters' room, $1,440; chief engineer, $2,160; three assistant engineers, at $1,440 each; conductor of elevator, $1,200; two firemen, at$1,095 each; three laborers in the engineer's department, at $720 each; one laborer in charge of the private passage, $840; female attendant in charge of the ladies' retiring-room, $720; one telephone operator, $720; eight skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; twelve laborers, at $720 each; two janitors, at $900 each; twelve laborers, during the session, at the rate of $720 each per annum; for fifteen pages for the Senate Chamber, including one telephone page, at the rate of $2.50 per day each during the session; in all, $141,017.42.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I make the point of order on the words "Amzi Smith," in line 97. I know of no warrant of law, no permanent law, which gives to Amzi Smith a salary, and I know of no warrant for the Committee on Appropriations appointing anybody in a regular appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained,

The Clerk read as follows:

For twenty-five clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $31,950.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendments I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $6 a day during the session, $40,896.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that proposition, that it is new legislation, and there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. CANNON. A word upon the point of order.

The paragraph which has just been read provides for twenty-five clerks to committees at $6 a day each during the session. There is no law in the Revised Statutes or elsewhere except in the appropriation bills for the employment of these clerks. In the next item of the bill provision is made for contingent expenses of the Senate for newspapers, stationery, and various other items, and there is no law for that, if you go to the statutes and ask for an act affirmatively authorizing it. Yet there is a law which authorizes the organization of the Senate and the House, and whatever is necessary to perfect that organization is within the terms of the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point of order and call for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; the point of order being withdrawn, now a word on the merits.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I renew the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. All right; I will shift back and discuss the point of order again. [Laughter.]

I say under the Constitution of the United States the Senate and House are authorized to be organized; and all things necessary to accomplish that purpose, and for the transaction of their business, is in order by way of a provision upon an appropriation bill.

In that same connection a word upon the merits of this matter, as it affects the merits of the point of order. Let me say that while I am not in favor of this proposition as an original one, that for four years this House has opposed the appropriation of the Senate for clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, and finally yielded and passed the appropriation, and no doubt we will do it again. We did it the last time against my vote on motion of the gentleman from Indiana himself, and that side of the House knows it. Now, in good faith, to get this bill through in a fair time, so far as we have time between now and the 4th of March, I offer this amendment, so that we can come directly to a vote on a proposition which will be necessary to be adopted before the bill is passed; and I offer it in good faith, and hope the House will not consume time in tomfoolery, marching up the hill that we may march down again, as has been the case heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 80.

Mr. BRADY. No quorum has voted.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that point.

Mr. BRADY. I will not.

Mr. BRADY and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Speaker: For private secretary to the Speaker, $1,800; and for clerk to the Speaker's table, $1,800; in all, $3,600.

For Chaplain of the House, $900.

Mr. BURNES. I move to strike out eighteen hundred where it occurs in this paragraph in each place and insert $2,102.40, that being the precise amount of salary allowed by law to each of these clerks. I beg to say in support of the amendment only this, that I can bring to the committee the testimony of two of the most eminent gentlemen who have ever presided over this House, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the present Speaker, in support of the proposition that the clerk at the Speaker's table holds one of the most responsible positions in the service of the House; and the secretary, I need only say, is doing all the clerical work of the Speaker. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to ask my colleague a question. I see that the clerk to the Speaker is left out of this bill. Is that intentional?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was left out upon the suggestion of the Speaker. There is no objection to it.

I will also add that that officer is provided for by law until the 1st of December next.

I suggest that the Clerk correct the total footing of the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will be directed in future, without the action of the committee, to correct the footings of the different paragraphs where changes have been made, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask to have the paragraph read as amended.

The amended paragraph was again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Clerk: For Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $4,500; and for hire of horses and wagons and cartage for the use of the Clerk's office, $1,200; clerk to prepare the general index to the Journals of Congress, under resolution of June 18, 1878, $2,500; for chief clerk, journal clerk, and two reading clerks, at $3,000 each, and for the journal clerk for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000 per annum; for printing and bill clerk and tally clerk, at $2,500 each; for disbursing clerk, file clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $2,250 each; for assistant disbursing clerk, assistant enrolling clerk, resolution and petition clerk, index clerk, superintendent of document-room, and librarian, at $2,000 each; for distributing clerk and stationery clerk, at $1,800 each; for one book-keeper and seven clerks, including three clerks to index private claims, at $1,600 each; for document clerk, locksmith, and two assistant librarians, at $1,440 each; for newspaper clerk, $1,400; two messengers in the House library, at $1,314 each; one telegraph operator, one assistant to the file clerk, and two laborers in Clerk's document-room, at $900 each; one page, one laborer in the bath-room, and four laborers, at $720 each; one assistant journal clerk, at $6 per day during the session, $1,278; one assistant index clerk, during the session and three months after its close, three hundred and three days, at $6 per day, $1,818; one messenger-boy in chief clerk's room, $300; in all, $82,454.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to make the point of order on lines 204 and 205 "for printing and bill clerk and tally clerk at $2,500 each." The tally clerk's salary is fixed by the Revised Statutes of the United States, section 53, at $3,000. As that sum has been appropriated for that official every year from 1878 down to the present time, including the appropriation bill of the last session of this Congress, I make the point of order that this is a provision changing existing law, and therefore obnoxious to Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The amount appropriated here is less than the amount, as stated by the gentleman from Louisiana, fixed by the general law for this purpose. The Chair is of opinion, further, that the words "in full compensation" having been stricken from the bill, that it is not a change of existing law for Congress to appropriate a less amount than that fixed by the general law. But the Court of Claims would hold that the other part could be recovered as in any other case. The point of order is therefore not sustained.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I respectfully appeal from that decision.

Mr. FINDLAY. If the ruling of the Chair is sustained will not the effect of it be to force every claimant for a salary under this bill into the Court of Claims under the decisions which have been read in the House to-day? In other words, if I understand the ruling of the Chair, it is that because the words "in full compensation" have been stricken from the bill there may now be provided by the bill a less sum as salary for any of the officers of the Government than that which is provided by the existing law; that the obnoxious part of the first clause was that it provided that the sums appropriated should be "in full compensation;" that inasmuch as those words have been stricken out and the amendments provided by this bill are not to be "in full compensation" for the services rendered, the Chair holds the provision is not obnoxious to a point of order.

The point I am making is this: If that ruling be sustained, whether under the decision in the Langston case, which was read in the House to-day, and in the light of other decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the person who is entitled to the salary by existing law, where it is greater than the sum which is appropriated by this bill, can not go into the Court of Claims and recover the difference. And a further question I have to ask is this: Whether this House is prepared to force every man who is allowed a less salary by this bill than he is entitled to by existing law—to force him into the Court of Claims to get the difference? That amounts to a great deal, and I submit the Chair has nothing to do with that; this committee has a great deal to do with it; and this committee, I think, will overrule the Chair, if it comes to the conclusion that under his ruling these officials will be forced into the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLANCHARD. To save time I withdraw my appeal and yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAYBURY] to offer an amendment.

Mr. FELTON. I renew the appeal. I do not know that the decision of the Chair is fully understood. I should like to have the Chair repeat it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation that the committee may understand it. The Clerk had read a clause in the bill which, as stated by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], appropriated a smaller amount of salary than was fixed by a general law, and he thereupon made the point of order that that appropriation was in conflict with existing law. The Chair stated that the words in the first part of the bill "in full compensation" having been stricken out a provision in a subsequent part of the bill appropriating a smaller amount than that fixed by the general law was not obnoxious to the rule, because the committee might appropriate a less amount than the law had fixed to be the salary if the committee had so determined, and that that was a question to be submitted to the committee and not to be decided by the Chair.

Mr. FELTON. If in order, with all due respect to the Chair, I would like the opinion of the Committee of the Whole on that ruling, and I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is too late now to appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the appeal.

Mr. MAYBURY. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON] has appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FELTON. I think that taking that course will save considerable time.

Mr. REED. I desire to make an observation or two in connection with this appeal.

The House, in making a change of its rules, carefully considered the proposition which the Chair has now embodied in his ruling. The gentleman from Indiana made to the House a proposition that he or any member of the House should be allowed to make an amendment lessening the amount of salary. The House squarely voted that down. Now that proposition, set aside by a decision of the House, made carefully upon deliberation after argument, has been attempted to be foisted upon the House by the decision of the Chair. In other words, what the House refused to do the gentleman from Illinois, sitting in the Chair, grants.

I say it is inconsistent alike with the dignity of the House and with common sense that this ruling should be sustained; and I hope the House will adhere to its original proposition, which was that these appropriation bills should be limited to appropriations in accordance with law.

Look at the effect of it, as men of sense. Here you go through the forms of appropriation and appropriate $4,000 where the law says the officer shall have $5,000. You can not deprive him of that $1,000 without a change of law, because it is his right by law and under law. What do you do? You tell him that the regular accounting officers of the Government shall not pay him, but that he must have recourse to the courts of law and bring a lawsuit. I say such action as that is unworthy of the House, and I will not believe, until I listen to the actual vote, that the House will permit itself to do this thing and sanction this evasion of its own deliberate, carefully considered decisions.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman from Maine permit me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Could not the House in the same way abolish an office by refusing to appropriate the salary?

Mr. REED. Certainly, it might do so; but it would be an unworthy transaction.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose this House has the right to refuse to appropriate anything under existing law, how would the sustaining of the point of order affect that? And how could sustaining the point of order against the appropriation of $2,500 put $3,000 in the bill? Does it not take a motion to do that?

Mr. REED. You can make your motion afterwards.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DUNN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announcing that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 2929) to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and to divide the eastern and western districts thereof into divisions, establish district and circuit courts of the United States therein, and provide for the times and places for holding such courts, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 9642) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico;

An act (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 215) to provide for printing the third annual report of the bureau of animal industry; and

An act (H. R. 4308) to regulate steam-engineering in the District of Columbia.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, whether this is a correct way of doing this business is not now a question. The sole question here is, has the Chair ruled correctly on the point of order? and I am astonished that any two gentlemen could differ upon that proposition. Because the House, when these rules were made, declared that it should not be in order to report in an appropriation bill or any amendment thereto a proposition decreasing a salary, it does not follow that, because the Appropriations Committee reports in a bill an appropriation less than the salary fixed by law, therefore a point of order lies against the appropriation. The result of the point of order, if sustained, is what?

Mr. REED. To strike out the amendment, and then we propose to insert the proper amount.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then, that means that the chairman shall strike out the smaller amount, which can only be done by the committee.

Mr. REED. That is the result of the bad action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAMMOND. No; it is the result of your bad logic.

Mr. REED. It is the bad result of the committee's disobeying the rules of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. Not at all. There is no rule declaring that the whole amount due as salary to any person shall be appropriated. For the sake of argument I grant that it ought to be done. I grant that this Committee of the Whole can immediately vote that it shall be done. But suppose it were true that we did not have enough money in the Treasury to pay all the salaries as fixed by law, then, by the bad logic of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], we could not appropriate any amount for the payment of those salaries unless we appropriated more money than we had in the Treasury. The ruling of the Chair is clearly right, and ought to be sustained.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I understand this to be simply a question of order, namely, the question whether or not, because the salary of a certain officer is fixed by law at a certain sum and the appropriation bill carries for the payment of that salary a less sum, the Chair can properly hold that the appropriation changes existing law. I do not think that that question has been seriously raised upon this floor. I take it that the power of Congress to appropriate a less sum than the sum authorized by law to be paid can not be doubted for a moment. But, Mr. Chairman, upon this particular question, why is this reduction put into this bill? Is it intended thus by indirection—for it is admitted that it can not be done by direct action—is it intended that this House shall in this indirect manner repudiate the honest debt which the Government owes to this officer?

Mr. FELTON. Of course it is. That is the only thing it can mean.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not delayed this proceeding at any time, but I want the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] having charge of this bill, to stand condemned in the estimation of the country for attempting to commit this House to such an attitude, or else to explain what they have done this for. Does the gentleman intend to commit this House to a process of repudiation through the action of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole? I deny that the chairman has any power to do that, and I am glad to say that I do not believe that he has any purpose to do it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the Senate, and Mr. RICHARDSON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5541) to prevent the employment of convict labor and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of materials for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor;

A bill (H. R. 7479) to provide for the speedy settlement of controversies and differences between common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportion of property and passengers, and their employers; and

A bill (H. R. 10731) for the erection of a public building in the city of Binghamton, N. Y.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 176) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College.

It further announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing and directing the Public Printer to deliver to the Commissioner of Education 1,000 copies of the Report on Education in Alaska, printed in compliance with a concurrent resolution of August 2, 1886.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill presented a proposition to reduce certain salaries; and in order to make that change of law it used the words "in full compensation," which have now been ruled out of the bill, leaving the amounts appropriated for those salaries less than the amounts prescribed by law. The question is whether it is competent for the Committee on Appropriations in presenting a bill providing for salaries of officers of this Government to report appropriations for any other sums than those authorized by law, whether in any case the committee may present appropriations for a greater or for a less sum than that fixed by law, or whether it was the intention of the House that that committee should simply ascertain what the legal provision was as to each salary fixed by law and report their appropriations accordingly.

The language of the rule is that they shall not report any appropriation not previously authorized by law. The Chair will not give that language a narrow construction. It simply meant that the Committee on Appropriations was intended to be what its name implies, a committee to report appropriations in pursuance and in conformity to law. Therefore, if that is the true intent of the rule, the Committee on Appropriations have no more right to report a less sum than they have to report a greater sum than that provided by law. They have no legislative power whatever; they have no right to introduce a single appropriation in any of these bills except in pursuance of what the law directs. In my judgment, sir, it is proper for us, in examining this question, to consider what was the intention of the House. We will not rest upon words; we will not trifle with technicalities. There was a meaning and a spirit in this rule when it was adopted, and I trust that we shall now give it an interpretation, and such an interpretation as may guide us in saving, if nothing else, a vast amount of valuable time, by putting a stop to attempts to make reductions in this way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are ninety-six salaries provided for in the law for the current fiscal year which are not provided for in the pending bill. How does the gentleman propose to reach them?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know that I understand the gentleman. Does he mean to say that in ninety-six cases the committee have failed to provide for the salaries required by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the case of ninety-six officers provided in the law of the current year, no appropriation is made at all in this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, we have not reached that question. The gentleman has omitted those provisions, and perhaps he has improperly omitted them. The question now is whether having undertaken to provide for the salaries of officers of the Government you can report any other amount than that ascertained in the terms of the statute as the salary of the officer. That is the whole question. As this matter is now here for decision, I trust that we shall pass upon it, and let our action be an admonition for all time to come.

Mr. HOLMAN. So my friend thinks the power of this House over the Treasury is gone, by virtue of its rules.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Indiana by just such forms of speech has attempted all the while to suppress the will of this House and override its rules. [Applause.] For one I wish to say to him that I do not in the matter of honorable conduct, or in the matter of expenditures, distrust myself or distrust the patriotism of the House. Therefore, I heed not such suggestions.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me the position can not in any sense be sustained that for the Committee on Appropriations to report as the compensation of a particular officer of the Government a less sum than is allowed by existing law is a violation or abrogation of the law. The absurdity of such a proposition would be demonstrated if the chairman of the Committee of the Whole should sustain the point of order and thus leave out of the bill altogether an appropriation for the particular officer. In that case, unless some member of the committee should see fit to rise in his place and offer an amendment that the amount contemplated by existing law be placed in the bill, the official would go without any appropriation for his services to the Government. That case shows, I think, that it would be absurd for the Chair to sustain the position that because an appropriation reported in a bill of this kind is not equal to the amount required by existing law, therefore the appropriation is liable to a point of order.

But, sir, on this subject we are not without authority, and authority which is higher than the ruling of the Chair. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States vs. Langston have decided that an appropriation to pay an officer of the Government a less sum than that contemplated by existing law as his salary does not abrogate the existing law. If that be the case, such an appropriation must be in order. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the concluding sentence of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case to which I have just referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the case is not free from difficulty, the court is of opinion that, according to the settled rules of interpretation, a statute fixing the annual salary of a public officer at a named sum, without limitation as to time, should not be deemed abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments which merely appropriated a less amount for the services of that officer for particular fiscal years, and which contained no words that, expressly or by clear implication, modified or repealed the previous law.

Mr. BRUMM. That does not touch this question at all.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, if, as decided by the Supreme Court, it is not an abrogation of existing law to appropriate a less sum than that allowed by existing law, I ask what law is violated by the report of the Committee on Appropriations? I defy any gentleman here to point out in our system of rules a single provision or proposition which requires the Committee on Appropriations to report the full amount named in the existing statutes as the pay of the officers of the Government. No line in the rules of our House makes it mandatory upon the Committee on Appropriations to report as the salary of any single officer the amount named in existing law. No man here can point out any such proposition. If then, as the Supreme Court have decided, it is not an abrogation of existing law to appropriate any given sum for these salaries, and if, as I contend, there is nothing in the rules requiring the Committee on Appropriations to report in these bills the whole sum contemplated as the salary of an officer, what point of order can possibly be raised against the several propositions in the bill before us appropriating for salaries of officers less amounts than those named in the existing statutes?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, but for the heated expressions of opinion on the part of gentlemen about what they consider flagrant violations of the rules of this House in other connections, it would not be necessary, in my opinion, to occupy much time in elucidating what is involved in the question now before us.

There is, Mr. Chairman, a clear and a fundamental difference between an appropriation that exceeds what is authorized by law and one which does not fully comply with what is authorized by law as to its amount. If the appropriation for a salary exceeds what the law authorizes, it is that much beyond a particle of authorityin law; hence is unauthorized by existing law, and the case is too clear for further discussion.

But as to the part where it may fall short of what the law authorizes: Within the limits of the law all things may be lawful but they may not be expedient; and there the sovereign power of the House of Representatives over the purse-strings of the country comes in to be exercised. They can appropriate in part, or they can appropriate in full, or not at all, according to their discretion as to what the best interests of the public require.

Why, sir, gentlemen are here arguing on the idea that there is a clause in the early part of the bill which, for it is still in the bill, though it will be eliminated in the engrossment, would make all such appropriations under it amenable to the rules. But that clause has been stricken from the bill.

The words were:

That these appropriations shall be in full compensation.

These words have been stricken out, and therefore we do not construe what is provided in the bill in connection with the words stricken out. If we had passed favorably upon those words, then it is perfectly clear that that amount, "in full compensation," would be a change of the law which authorizes a larger compensation. But that is all stricken out, and therefore suppose this House in its sovereign discretion should say we will only appropriate so much of the officer's salary, what would be the result? There is not a gentleman here but knows—and this question goes a little wider than parliamentary rules generally do—that the claimant could go to the Court of Claims and at once get a decision in his favor for the difference. Why? Because he is still entitled to it under the law.

Mr. CRAIN. If the point of order is well taken could he do that?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of course not; because the fact of his being able to do so would prove the point of order to be not well taken.

Mr. CRAIN. That is the answer to the whole question in a nutshell.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And that shows conclusively to every gentleman's mind that the law is still unchanged, though Congress in its discretion has not chosen to appropriate all the law would allow. The Supreme Court has clearly settled this in U. S. vs. Fisher (U. S. Reports, p. 143.)

Mr. BRUMM. Let me ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat. As I understand, if the words "in full compensation" were in the bill, the point of order would be well taken?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think so.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, are there not other words in that very bill which are equivalent to the words "in full compensation" in this, that these are appropriations for the full year?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It does not say that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If it did say that it would not be equivalent to the words stricken out.

Mr. BRUMM. Why not? This includes the salaries of certain officers for a certain period of time, beginning at a certain period. Now, if that compensation is to be received by them for that period of time, less than the amount fixed by the law, is it not a change of law, and does this bill not make compensation for that period under the words I have quoted, though not the full compensation fixed by law?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That only refers to the appropriations. It does not fix the amount of the salary.

Mr. BRUMM. We do not agree upon that point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The words the gentleman quotes would not affect the right of any officer to recover his full salary, if any part of it was withheld.

Mr. BRUMM. But does not that language make the compensation in full for the time for which the appropriation runs?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It does as far as this appropriation is concerned. But that is all. The right of recovery remains.

Mr. FELTON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the last paragraph in this bill:

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Is that not a legislative provision fixing all salaries covered by the bill at the amount herein appropriated?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. You can hardly construe the paragraph under consideration in connection with another part of the bill not yet reached.

Mr. FELTON. But it is the preliminary step to reaching that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And that paragraph itself would be amenable to your point of order, and besides, we have now made negative the former part of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, more than once during this debate it has been alleged that the Committee on Appropriations have been endeavoring to absorb certain powers not granted to it by the rules of the House; and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], as I am informed, with more particularity than any of the rest, has, if I understand it, charged the committee, and charged me, in fact, with this attempt.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. My colleague is not speaking to the point of order. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I think I know enough of the Committee on Appropriations to say, after a long service on that committee, that I have never been able to discover on the part of any member of the committee any such purpose; and so far as I am involved in such a charge I want to add that if it is alleged I had such a motive or purpose, or that I have ever by any act of mine attempted to usurp anything in connection with legislation in this country, that it is without warrant and without the semblance of justification.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a single word touching this proposition. In the first place, the rule creating the Appropriations Committee charges it with certain duties. What are they? Not to legislate, nor in anywise to change, annul, or modify the law, but to report appropriations in pursuance of and in accordance with existing law. Clause 3 of Rule XI provides that the Committee on Appropriations shall have jurisdiction to report—

Appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as hereinafter provided, namely: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, &c., and for all deficiencies.

Turning to Rule XXI we find it provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, &c.

Now, what is the clear intention of the regulation fixing the jurisdiction and defining the duties of the Appropriations Committee. It is this, that where the law distinctly declares the amount to be appropriated, as, for instance, where the statute provides that the judge of a certain judicial district shall receive $5,000 a year as his salary, the Appropriations Committee shall in the bill they report to this House make the appropriation to pay that salary in conformity with that law. I insist that the plain intendment of the rule is that the appropriations reported here shall be responsive to the plain requirement of the statute. If Rule XXI does not mean that it is absurd.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In a moment. See what an absurdity it would lead to if that were not the intention. No lawyer, nor any other sane man, will pretend that we may do indirectly what we may not do directly. The language of that rule is plain, clear, and direct. It provides for making appropriations in conformity to law.

The rule has for its obvious intent and purpose to limit the authority and confine the duty of the committee to ascertaining the amounts required by law to defray the expenses of conducting the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of the Government, and to prepare a bill in response to those requirements, making appropriations for no more, no less than the law prescribes.

Now suppose the Appropriations Committee concluded by indirect means to abolish ten offices; suppose, in fact and by existing law, there was required an appropriation for the conduct of the business of those offices of $10,000, and notwithstanding this plain requirement of the statute, we should report a bill carrying only $5 for that purpose. Would the Chair hold, would any one else hold, that we had not violated the plain intent and spirit of the rule which requires us to make appropriations or rather to report appropriations in conformity to law?

Mr. CANNON. How are you going to remedy it?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Why, that has nothing to do with the case. I am not urging that we are violating the letter of the statute, but are violating the plain and palpable intent and spirit of the rule, which, on its face and in the light of the circumstances which attended its adoption, requires that our bill shall meet and conform to the requirements of existing law. Suppose we report a salary $1,000 above the law, what is the remedy? An objection strikes it out, and the remedy is to insert the right amount by motion in this House. I insist that any other construction of the rule is paltering in a double sense, "keeping the word of promise to the ear" by this rule and "breaking it to the hope" by reducing salaries in the teeth of the law. If we can reduce we can increase. To reduce is a violation of the law, because, I repeat, the plain intendment of the law is that we shall respond to its requirements in the matter of making appropriations.

Mr. REED. I ask the House to indulge me just a moment. It is the business of this House to interpret its rules, and if there is anything conclusive upon such a matter it is the contemporaneous interpretation which has been made by the House itself, the understanding which every member had when the rule was adopted, and that ought not to be overcome by any technical adherence to mere language, when we all know what the intention was.

Now, we intended to confine the Committee on Appropriations to the plain, simple, and clerical duty of bringing before the House the salaries established by law. We provided that they should not increase them, and the gentleman from Indiana proposed an amendment allowing the committee to decrease them. That, after full consideration, was voted down by the House. That is an interpretation of the meaning of the rule. It is an interpretation which everybody understood, and which, all through the last session of Congress, was acquiesced in.

Now, then, the Committee on Appropriations has failed of its duty and has endeavored to accomplish by its own action, in defiance of the rule of the House, that which the House by its solemn vote said they should not accomplish. It is for the House to interpret the meaning of the rule. I am frank to admit, for I always endeavor to address the House with as much frankness as I am capable of, that there is great force in what is urged by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], basing himself solely on the technical words which he quotes. But I say to him that this bill provides on its face for the whole fiscal year, and it seems to me that it changes existing law, if in no other respect at least, in the fact—and we must make our interpretation accordingly, a matter which the Supreme Court could not take into consideration—that at least it drives the officer from the accounting officer to the Court of Claims; and that is a substantial change of the law.

In addition to that this bill contains still in it a provision for the repeal of all acts which are inconsistent with it; and we are bound to take the whole bill together, the end of it as well as the commencement; and taking all that into account, we ought to bring the interpretation of the rule in accordance with our own declared vote and in accordance with what is honest and fair dealing.

For my part, I am perfectly willing to consent in any future Congress to a change of rules that will give the House complete control both to raise and to lower salaries. But I do say this method of bringing it in results in an unfair advantage on the part of those who desire a certain mode of action and an unfair treatment of those who desire the other course of action. I appeal to the House to give this rule, doubtful in its language, that construction which everybody understood the rule to have and which it would still have had if it had not been for the violation of the spirit of the rule on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, dictated by a desire to accomplish by indirection what they were unable to accomplish by direction.

Mr. HERBERT rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope we will have a vote. I think there ought to be some time when debate on an appeal should cease.

Mr. HERBERT. I simply desire to say that the decision sent up and read at the desk at the instance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania decides this question specifically. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] admits that the whole question depends on whether or not this appropriation if made would change existing law. The appropriation upon which the Supreme Court decided was like this: It was for a less sum than the law provided for that salary; and the Supreme Court says it did not have the effect of changing existing law. That is the precise question that has been decided by that opinion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we will now have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question to the committee. The Clerk will report the pending clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and bill clerk and tally clerk at $2,500.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the decision sent up by my colleague [Mr. BAYNE] read again. There is certainly a misunderstanding of the scope of that decision, because it never touched this question, but simply decided that by reducing the appropriation you did not vacate the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question before the committee. The clause under consideration appropriates a less amount than the law fixes for this salary, and the point of order is made that the appropriation proposed by the committee is out of order and must be suppressed by the Chair, because it is not the amount fixed by law. The Chair held that the words "in full compensation" having been stricken out of the bill, this was merely an appropriation of a portion of the salary, and did not change the existing law, under the ruling of the Supreme Court in the Langston case, which was to the effect that the law had not been repealed, and the court in that case entered a judgment against the United States for the full amount of the salary as fixed by law, upon the theory that the law had not been changed. In harmony with that opinion of the court, the Chair holds that the general law is not changed by this appropriation; in other words, that the clause in the bill now under consideration is not a change of the existing law. From that opinion the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON] appeals. The question now is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 118, noes 87.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. FELTON and Mr. HOLMAN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 122, noes 66.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. MAYBURY. I move to amend, by adding, in line 202, after the words "Journal Clerk," the word "tally clerk," and striking out the words "and tally clerk," in line 205. That will restore the salary of the tally clerk to the amount fixed by law.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will adopt that amendment, and I do not think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], in charge of this bill, is in a position to ask the House not to adopt it. I hold in my hand the record of the debates on the legislative bill in the first session of this Congress, and I ask the attention of the House to the following language uttered by the gentleman from Indiana in that debate, which I think will preclude him from opposing this amendment. I read:

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of course, if the language "in full compensation" is to be omitted from this bill, Congress should at once appropriate the whole amount of these various salaries, for otherwise the Government will be subjected to the expense of suits in which recovery by the officers is absolutely inevitable.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. The statement made by me on the occasion referred to, and which the gentleman has just read, was, of course, correct; but, happily, the words "in full compensation" were restored to the bill.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment because it is not in accordance with existing law. Let the gentlemen who have been preaching to us all this morning about "existing law" now accept the result of their own doctrine. This amendment, I say, can not be entertained if the law is regarded. It is true that in the Revised Statutes of date 1878 there is a recital (at section 52) in these words: "the following persons" are employed in the House of Representatives, but that section directly refers to the appropriation law of 1872. By that act of 1872 the salary of six clerks, including, it may be, the tally clerk, was placed at $2,592 each.

Mr. BLOUNT. Was there not legislation providing for a change in the law, in accordance with this amendment?

Mr. CABELL. No, sir; only in appropriation bills, as I will show.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; but did not you——

Mr. CABELL. I hope the gentleman will not take up what little time I have.

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly not.

Mr. CABELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say the salaries of these six clerks, including the tally clerk, were placed at $2,592. The act of March 3, 1873, known as the "salary-grab" act, placed the salaries of six clerks at $3,000 each. The act of January 20, 1874—I am speaking of current appropriation bills—repealed many of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, and in effect provided that so much of the last-named act as increased salaries, except as to the President and the judges of the Supreme Court, should no longer exist, and that all salaries should remain as they were prior to said act of 1873. The act, therefore, of 1874 had the effect of placing the salary of the tally clerk at $2,592, as it had been before. In 1875, on an appropriation bill, the salary was raised to $3,000, and so remained during 1875 and 1876 and until 1877, when on the appropriation bill of that year it was reduced to $2,500. In 1881, by the appropriation bill, it was again put at $3,000, and has so remained until now.

All this, I say, was done upon appropriation bills, and there is nothing in the statute law of the land fixing this salary at $3,000.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why this salary should be fixed at that amount. No mention is made in the statute cited which of the six clerks named should receive $3,000; and the Clerk of the next House may select either the tally clerk or some other clerk to receive that compensation.

Now, as a matter of fact, gentlemen, it is our duty to economize wherever we can. Here is a place at which it can properly be done. Let us see whether it can not. The reading clerks receive $3,000 each, and the Journal Clerk receives $3,000. The tally clerk, no matter who he may be—and I am not even acquainted with the gentleman who holds that position now—should not be placed on the same footing as the Journal or the reading clerks, because his duties are neither as onerous nor as responsible, and because I believe that any well-informed youth of sixteen years of age could readily perform the duties of that position, and would be glad to receive for the service $100 per month.

We promised the people, and they expect us to retrench expenditures. Instead of expending money in lavish style, we should use at least some little economy. In this way only can we keep our skirts clear. If this business can be well performed at a much less salary, is it not proper to have it done in that way? If we allow the tally clerk a salary of $3,000, what is the result? For the short sessions of Congress, for three months, he would be paid at the rate of $1,000 a month. Gentlemen may say that the Journal Clerk and the reading clerks each get that amount. They well deserve it; not so with the tally clerk, no matter who may hold the position.

Mr. CABELL. I move to amend the amendment so as to provide that this salary be placed at $2,592.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to understand what the pending amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the words "two reading clerks," in line 202, the words "and tally clerk."
Strike out in line 205 the words "and tally clerk."

Mr. CABELL. That amendment I move to amend so as to provide that the tally clerk receive $2,592.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I know of no law, and I here state there is no law, fixing the salary of the tally clerk or any clerk at that desk. There was such a law in what was known as the "salary-grab" act, but that law was repealed; and from that time to this the salaries of officers of this House are found designated only in the appropriation bills. You may make the appropriation for these salaries more or less. You can pay the tally clerk $2,500 or $10,000 a year, just as you may be disposed. If this consideration had been kept in view, much time could have been saved on points of order. I have no objection to your paying that tally clerk $3,000, or $2,500, or $2,000; you may pay him $1,500 if you please. It is a mere question as to what you think he is worth. You gentlemen on the other side of the House have the burden of responsibility. I have seen the time when, under the leadership of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], a proposition was made to cut down salaries of these clerks and of others, and you followed him as a young bloodhound pursues its victim when it is anxious to secure its first taste of blood. But now you are in the saddle. These are your employés. Make the salaries much or little, just as you please, so far as I am concerned. So I said in the committee; so I say here.

Mr. MAYBURY. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the position taken by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL], I desire to call attention to the fact that section 53 of the Revised Statutes provides that there shall be six assistant clerks of this House at a salary of $3,000 each per annum. The tally clerk is one of those assistant clerks. The division of these clerks into Journal Clerk, reading clerks, &c., is the merest matter of convenience. The tally clerk is an assistant clerk of this House. Provision is made in section 53, Revised Statutes, this salary shall be $3,000. It has been that.

Mr. CANNON. I beg your pardon; here is the repeal of it.

Mr. MAYBURY. In 1878 it was first made $3,000. In 1881 there was a general reduction, and it has since continued at $3,000. It was at that rate last year.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is referring to the salary-grab act. That was repealed. There is no salary that is not in the appropriation bill. Under the power of organization of the House you can pay more or less.

Mr. MAYBURY. Since 1878 it has been $3,000. The gentleman may be right about the repeal of the act. But I will not take up the time of the House unnecessarily.

The duty of the tally clerk is not only to take the roll-call. He has to indorse the bills and resolutions introduced here, to see they are properly filed, to receive all reports to the House, and send them to the proper committees, to see they are properly placed on the Calendar, to prepare the Calendar twice a week, to read the proof, and to see the Calendar is placed on the desk of each member. But these are not all the duties of the tally-clerk. He is required to compare the roll-call and to read the proof for the printer and have it ready for the Journal every morning. Nine-tenths of his work is done out of the House, when Congress is not in session. I say it would be rank injustice to make a difference between the tally clerk and any other clerk sitting at that desk.

The question recurred on Mr. CABELL'S amendment to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 114.

Mr. BRADY. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. BRADY and Mr. MAYBURY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 3——

Mr. CABELL. It is evident my amendment will not prevail, and we are simply taking up the time of the House, and I therefore withdraw it.

Mr. BRADY. Has the gentleman the right to withdraw it?

Mr. CABELL. I have the right to withdraw it.

Mr. BRADY. I renew it.

The tellers resumed their places; and reported—ayes 14, noes 151.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. MAYBURY'S amendment.

Mr. BRADY demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 177, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same.

A bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent that the session this evening be continued after 9 o'clock for public business.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. REED. I hope no man on this side will object.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. REED. The gentleman does not object for this side.

Mr. BRADY. I speak for myself.

Mr. REED. I am glad the gentleman is by himself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit the following resolution and move the rules be suspended for its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following resolution, adopted on the 26th instant namely: "Resolved, That on Monday, February 28, the House take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. to 7.30 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of resolutions relating to the Hon. William H. Cole, deceased, late a Representative from the State of Maryland," be continued so that at 8.30 p. m. the House shall resume its legislative business.

Mr. BRADY. On that I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 164, noes not counted.

So there was a second.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 248, nays 5, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—248.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. HOLMES.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

And then (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the Speaker declared the House in recess until 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., in pursuance of the special order.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) was called to order by Mr. MATSON, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 28, 1887.

I hereby designate Hon. C. C. MATSON to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the opening of the session to-night.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM H. COLE.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of this House be suspended that proper honors may be paid to the memory of Hon. William H. Cole, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Cole the country has sustained the loss of a patriotic citizen and a most faithful public servant.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

REMARKS OF MR. COMPTON.

Mr. COMPTON. It is meet and right, Mr. Speaker, that we should pause and desist from the performance of the regular routine of duties here long enough to ponder the lesson of warning to be learned at the grave of a dead brother. The exacting demands of modern busy life are such that we all run the risk of losing sight of the momentous consideration that life is but an atom in the wastes of time, while the future, after life, is an endless and inevitable certainty. I have no elaborate eulogy to deliver upon my late colleague, to whose memory we are devoting the present hour. No thoughts couched in "measured phrase" or words set "in metrical array." Naught we can say, can help or harm him. It is in vain to attempt to lift the veil or to explore "the undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns." He is beyond the reach of the concerns of time or space; he can not hear our lamentations, however loud, or our wailings, however plaintive; he is at rest in the bosom of his God.

The life of William H. Cole was a busy and not uneventful one, his death untimely and more than ordinarily sad. In the outset of his manhood he seemed to lack fixedness of purpose though this was not characteristic of him. He devoted himself first to the study and practice of the law, and soon thereafter to that of the medical profession. Soon the blast of war was sounded in the land. He promptly decided for himself in conformity with his principles and his sympathies, and leaving the State of his birth, he crossed the broad waters of the Potomac and ranged himself under the confederate flag. He remained on that side of the lines of battle until the drums had ceased to throb and the flag was furled. In the discharge of his duty in the line of his profession he ministered faithfully to the sufferings of the sick, wounded, and dying, as faithfully and steadily with the red glare of battle around him as in the quiet wards of the secluded hospital. When peace was proclaimed he sought a residence in the great State of Texas, and there for the first time associated himself with the press.

Returning to the State of Maryland, he resumed his residence in the city of Baltimore, the place of his nativity, and, becoming associated with the Democratic press of that city, devoted his best energies to the duties of his calling through the remainder of his life to the date of his election to a seat in this House. He came here well equipped for a place upon this floor, having held the position for more than one term as reading clerk in the city council, and for five successive sessions as reading clerk of the house of delegates of Maryland; he was made familiar with the routine of legislative business and the rules of order governing legislative bodies. While not to be ranked as among the great men of his day, and not endowed with exceptional powers of intellectual vigor he had a well-balanced and well-stored mind. He possessed in a pre-eminent degree those two traits which tend the one to win friends and the other to win success, unselfish kindness of heart and indomitable energy.

Few men attached more closely to them their intimate associates the people among whom they move than did Dr. Cole. Seldom has a more signal triumph been won than that achieved by him through his own personal efforts which made him the nominee of his party for a seat in Congress. This was the acme of his ambition. He won it worthily and prized it highly, and no man ever exerted himself more diligently in the discharge of every duty and obligation imposed by the position. The paralyzing influences of a mortal malady bore heavily upon him almost from the day of his election. His unyielding will alone sustained him, but this was sufficient until the final collapse. No call of duty was too insignificant, no claim upon his time and attention too exacting, and no constituent too humble to receive his careful and impartial consideration.

Called myself perhaps as frequently as any one of the 325 members composing this body to visit, in my official capacity, the various Departments of the Government, I seldom failed to meet my colleague, and more than once I have abandoned the mission I was on that I might tempt him to rest and recreation which he seemed to need so sadly.

Perhaps, sir, no more striking illustration of unselfish devotion to duty was ever displayed in this Hall than when he, feeble and faint, tottered to his seat that he might record his vote for the proposition when first made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MORRISON, for consideration of the bill for traiff reform. Few could have endured as much. None could have risked more than he did upon this occasion. It was the last vote he ever cast. This occurred on the 17th of June; on the 8th of July he breathed his last. The immense concourse which gathered at his funeral and the solemnity which pervaded the subdued throng attested unmistakably the esteem in which he was held at home and the sincere regret felt by a grateful constituency at the loss of so faithful a representative.

When he died the State lost a worthy and valuable citizen, his party an intelligent and ardent adherent, his neighbors a generous and steadfast friend, his bereaved wife a kind, considerate, and devoted husband.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSTON, OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Dr. Cole dates from the opening of the Forty-ninth Congress, when we were assigned to adjoining seats in this House and appointed by the Speaker to a membership of the same committee.

The social and business intercourse which these two circumstances occasioned soon grew into a friendship which I shall always cherish as one of the many pleasant and agreeable episodes in my Congressional life.

The warm and genial temperament of Dr. Cole, his confiding nature, and the generous impulses of his heart soon won my sincere admiration and esteem.

Every soldier knows how thorough and unaffected is the sympathy, and how deep and ardent becomes the friendship which the joint participation in a common danger or hardship begets. And every one on either side of the late struggle can testify to the immediate ripening into the sincerest friendship of the slightest acquaintance, even between strangers, which the discovery of this fact always produces.

It was not long after we met in this Hall that I learned from Dr. Cole that he had cast his lot with my people, and shared with them their sufferings in the dark period of their history, when they were heroically enduring the many privations and hardships incident to the great and unfortunate war in which our country was involved.

These facts, sir, in the former history of our deceased colleague, whose death we now mourn and whose virtues we now commemorate, became the common bond that served to warm our social and business relations with each other into close intimacy.

Dr. Cole was permitted to occupy his seat in this body for a few months only. It was but shortly after the organization of the House that the germs of the insidious disease which caused his death began to develop, and soon he was unable to be with us in the discharge of his public duties; but as long as he had strength to take part in the deliberations of this Congress, I bear testimony that his every act seemed to be inspired by a patriotic zeal for the welfare of our common country and a sincere desire to do his full duty and prove himself worthy of the great trust reposed in him by his constituents.

The highest encomium that can be pronounced upon any man is to testify to his fidelity to duty. This I do for my departed friend, and I therefore deem it unnecessary for me to say more on this occasion.

The history of his life, his patriotism, his virtues will be fitly eulogized by those who have known him longest and best.

I offer these reflections as a sincere personal tribute to the worth and character of our lamented colleague, whose public career was so soon cut short by the great Reaper who has garnered so many of our number in the past two years and before whose unerring sickle we must all sooner or later fall.

When he comes to us may we each be prepared to leave behind us a record as pure and unsullied as that of W. H. Cole.

REMARKS OF MR. DIBBLE.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, while grief is the tribute of affection to the memory of the departed, awe and reverence are the acknowledgment of that mysterious after-land to which death is the portal. It is this intuition of our immortality that clothes an occasion like the present with impressive solemnity, and compels us to reflect that the path of human life, glorious or inglorious, leads but to the grave, whence begins, for each disembodied spirit, its own eternity.

In the contemplation of our existence on earth under these conditions, how insignificant are worldly matters and incidents in comparison with man's hereafter. It is well for us, therefore, to pause amid business transactions, amid affairs of state, great or little, amid the contentions of faction and party in these legislative halls, and to spend a season in considering life's uncertainty and the certainty of death. For the marble walls which environ us are ineffective ramparts against the assault of our last enemy; these guarded doors with their double sentinels do not avail to exclude the grim visitor who claims the privileges of the floor at his own option, despite our rules. Silently and resistlessly he enters and marks his victim; and the strong mind ceases to evolve its logic, the ready disputant no longer joins in high debate, the brilliant orator no more converts the tumult of the House into attentive admiration; but we behold the vacant chair, and the desk draped in mourning, and our country's work is for a time laid aside, while we acknowledge the presence of death.

So came the summons to our comrade and friend, William H. Cole, on the 8th day of July last. Elected by the suffrages of an appreciative constituency to represent upon this floor the interests of an important community, and, with his colleagues, to speak the voice of the grand old State of Maryland; in the very prime of his years; serving for his first term as a representative of the people in Congress, and yet gaining rapidly by his genial manners, his close attention to public duty and his assiduous study of the questions arising in legislation, the influence of a veteran member, there opened before him the prospect of a long and honorable career in this field of political life.

Such was the anticipation of his friends here and at home; such, no doubt, were the laudable aspirations of his own heart; such were the hopes of a fond mother and a loving wife. And yet, an inscrutable decree of Providence decided otherwise; and it was my sad privilege, Mr. Speaker, to stand beside his bier, and behold his mortal remains consigned to the dust, in the consecrated soil of the cemetery near by his native city of Baltimore. And I will never forget the peculiar sadness which pervaded the immense throng of his fellow-citizens who attended his body to the tomb. It was no formal mummery of woe, but the real, earnest manifestation of a people's sorrow at his death, and of sympathy with the disconsolate wife mourning the loss of him she so much loved.

And it is with appropriate respect, Mr. Speaker, that I speak here of the touching incident which attended upon the funeral of our departed friend. His aged mother, to whom her son was the fond pride of her heart, and in whose bosom welled up that unquenchable spring of affection—a mother's love—refused to be comforted. With tottering frame, feeble with age, and racked with the sorrow of this bereavement, she took her last look upon the lifeless body of her son, ere we bore it away from home for burial, and it was her last look also at things of earth; for we had not returned from the sad offices of the interment, ere that bereaved mother had ceased to be, dying of a broken heart.

When we contemplate an occurrence like this, Mr. Speaker, how inadequate we feel to the duty of fitly speaking of the virtues of the departed. We saw his nature in its outer crust, and can but give a superficial cast, like the mould taken by the sculptor after death. But in the crushed spirit of that mother there is a eulogy of that devoted son which dwells not in words of friends, however fitly spoken. She mourned him most who knew him best.

And in this comparison the thought is suggested, how often we miscalculate in estimating our fellows. We would look at one's external career, in the world's bustle and turmoil, and yet fail to know or read the character which shows its choicest, noblest traits in the pure atmosphere of home. Which is the higher sphere of life—the public hall, or the hearthstone? Where are the noblest traits of humanity developed—in public, or in private? And in this utilitarian age do we not err in placing those practical successes which we call "progress" above the three great ennobling virtues of mankind—faith, hope, and charity? And how should we rightly measure ourselves and our achievements in this comparison. Let the poet apply the fit expressions to characterize our daily labors:

A good, that never satisfies the mind,
A beauty, fading like the April flowers,
A sweet, with floods of gall that runs combined,
A pleasure, passing ere in thought made ours,
An honor, that more fickle is than wind,
A glory, at opinion's frown that lowers,
A treasury, which bankrupt time devours,
A knowledge, than grave ignorance more blind,
A vain delight our equals to command,
A style of greatness—in effect, a dream,
A swelling thought of holding sea and land,
A servile lot, decked with a pompous name,
Are the strange ends we toil for here below,
Till wisest death make us our errors know.

And yet, by a strange paradox, out of this insignificant life of ours are evolved two immortalities. The one, an eternity of future existence in the transmigration of the soul, not from animal to animal, according to the fancy of Pythagoras, but, as we read in Holy Writ, from the natural or terrestrial to the spiritual and celestial. Upon this has the soul of our fellow member entered, and, we trust, to realize the bliss eternal.

The other immortality is found in the imperishable products of man, which he leaves as a legacy to those who survive him, whether treasured in memory and perpetuated by tradition or fixed in monuments of genius; whether it be his own creations, committed to written or printed pages, or the recital of his life work by historian, poet, or eulogist. It is this latter kind of immortality of which Horace writes, when, Epicurean as he was, he refers to his poems as follows:

"Non omnis morior; multaque pars mei vitabit Libitinam!" "I shall not entirely die; the better part of me shall escape the funeral rites."

This life work of man, which does not die with his body, but survives in the impressions and influences which he has made upon his times and leaves for those who survive him, can not be accurately estimated, but still exists as a factor of human progress. And it is by what one thus accomplishes and not by mere longevity that one's place in current history is to be measured. William H. Cole did not complete the term of three score years and ten, specified as the ordinary period of human existence, but in his very prime of manhood was called away; and yet, in a life of less than five decades, he performed the labors and achieved the purposes which usually occupy the full complement of days from childhood to old age.

In many a sphere of public life he had been an arduous and willing worker and had earned and obtained the encomiums of his fellow-citizens. As deputy registrar of Baltimore, then chief clerk of the first branch of the city council, then for over ten years reading clerk of the Maryland house of delegates, he discharged all duties of those several positions with efficiency and diligence, so that in the general election of 1884 he was chosen to occupy a seat in this body, and he took his place as one of our number at the organization of this House in December, 1885.

It was not my privilege to know him until the last year of his life. I met him here as a member of the present Congress and of its Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Well do I remember that on the first occasion of our meeting each other he tendered me a favor, which, small in itself, was enhanced by the genial warmth of the manner in which it was offered. In the sessions of the committee he was frank in expression, open-hearted and liberal in action, punctual in attendance as long as his health permitted, and unremitting in the discharge of every duty, where duty was frequently arduous and exacting. And in association with him in the committee-room, and in the House, one could not fail to realize those sterling traits of character which had secured him the confidence and support of his large and intelligent constituency, and had elevated him to the high trust of representing their rights and interests in the Halls of Congress.

Some spend their days traveling along the level plain of commonplace, with a contracted horizon as the boundary of their vision and of their desires, and are content. Another seeks ever to rise above his surroundings and to climb to mountain heights, be they ever so rugged, even though it be simply to find his tomb among the cliffs, far above the wandering multitude below. It was the lot of our departed friend to aspire, and by dint of deserving honors to obtain them. And in the roll of the representative men of his native city the name of William H. Cole will be remembered as that of a servant of the people, who has left behind, in a brief Congressional career of only a few months, the record of faithful and efficient service according to his opportunity, a service creditable both to himself and to his fellow-citizens. And what more can be said of any one? It is the tide taken at the flood that leads on to fortune; but, alas! the ebb-tide came to him in the midst of his voyage, and swept him out into the great sea of eternity.

As I sat in the crowded church and listened to his pastor, who had ministered to him in holy things in his last hours, and when I heard the recital of his religious life, and that he had died, as he had lived, in the Christian faith, expressing unfaltering trust in God, and enjoying the solemn ordinances of His church, I felt that, far above all earthly honors attained by our lamented friend, was the enjoyment of a blissful hereafter, of which his life and death gave promise and hope. This immortality of the soul is well illustrated in the expressive language of the saintly prelate when he exclaims:

O listen, man!
A voice within us speaks the startling word,
"Man, thou shalt never die!" Celestial voices
Hymn it around our souls: according harps
By angel fingers touched, when the mild stars
Of morning sang together, sound forth still
The song of our great immortality.
* * * * *
The dying hear it; and as sounds of earth
Grow dull and distant, wake their passing souls
To mingle in this heavenly harmony.

And while the ashes of William H. Cole rest in peace, we trust his soul is happy with the immortals.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAW.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, my deceased colleague, Hon. William H. Cole, was born at Baltimore, Md., on the 11th of January, 1837. He early in life adopted the law as a profession, and was enrolled as an attorney at the immature age of twenty. He went to Kansas shortly after, and was chosen a member of its Territorial Legislature. He graduated in medicines at the University of Louisiana in the year 1860, and in 1861 entered the confederate army as a private, but was soon promoted to be an assistant surgeon, and was assigned to duty with the Eighth Georgia Regiment. He served in all the campaigns of the war until the battle of Gettysburg, when he was left in charge of the wounded of Longstreet's corps.

When the war closed he returned to the city of his nativity, where he secured a position on the reportorial staff of several daily papers. He was reading clerk of the Maryland house of delegates four successive terms. In 1884 he was elected a member of this House for the Forty-ninth Congress. My acquaintance with him may be said to have commenced with the early days of its first session. Occupying, as I did, a seat by his side, I necessarily learned to know him well. He was an invalid when first we met, having been stricken with the disease which caused his death some time before he became a member of this body.

Though a martyr to pain and continuous suffering he was seldom absent from the sessions of this House until disease had so wasted his strength as to make it impossible for him to be here. His last appearance on this floor was to support the consideration of a measure which he regarded as of vital importance to the industrial prosperity of his country. Sick almost unto death, he would be carried from his carriage into this Hall to discharge what he believed to be an imperative duty. Duty with him was inexorable. When well nigh exhausted by the ravages of a prolonged and fatal malady he laid his enfeebled body under tribute to this despot of his own making, until hopelessly bankrupt in strength its drafts could no longer be honored.

No man ever strove harder or labored more incessantly to serve his constituents than he who is the subject of these remarks. He was always ready to aid the weak and the friendless, and ever on the alert for an opportunity to do a kindly act.

His chief ambition was to perfect a measure to lighten the burden that rests so heavily upon the bended shoulders of honest toil. Nor was this desire inspired by the arts of the demagogue, but rather by a sincere and earnest wish to benefit his fellow-men.

Himself of Celtic origin, the complaint of the Irish people appealed strongly to his sympathy and made him long to see Ireland numbered among the free and independent nations of the world. Any movement contemplating such a result found in him a zealous advocate and a generous friend.

Whilst I never knew a more genial, kindly nature, he was the special friend of no one, but evinced a like devotion to the welfare of all, and loved his neighbor as himself.

I do not mean to say the deceased was a faultless man—perfection is not an attribute of our nature—and though he doubtless had his frailties, it will profit us only to recall and emulate his virtues, unmindful of whatever imperfections he may have had.

Of his domestic relations I am not informed and cannot tell, yet may we not infer that one who possessed so much kindness of heart must have made a happy home? But there is a supreme sorrow which even the imagination should respect, and I will not lift the veil which hides from the public gaze wounded and bleeding hearts.

Mr. Speaker, this occasion should admonish us of our mortality, and we do well to heed the admonition, remembering that whilst man may dominate the earth it was given to One alone to conquer death. Let us, then, undisturbed by the skepticism of the age, put our trust in Him who has said, "I am the resurrection and the life."

REMARKS OF MR. WADE.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, there are many customs that make the world brighter and life better worth the living. That of the children of a family, after many years of separation, gathering at the old homestead to celebrate the golden anniversary of the marriage of their parents is one, and he who may be an honored guest upon such an occasion, seeing the affection of the children for their parents and an expression upon the old father and mother's faces, indicating hearts overflowing with love for the children, will go away from that home with a better appreciation of life and its possibilities, a more exalted love for the Creator and His purposes.

Strewing flowers on the graves of loved ones is another. The flowers are emblematical of the now pure spirit life of the departed. They speak in silent though eloquent language the affection in which the memory of the dead is held, and from a channel through which the holy influences of the better land may reach our hearts, drive from them improper affections, and leave in their stead an influence that shall lead us when life's trials are ended to an eternal association with the pure and good.

The custom of the members of this House meeting to do honor to the character of a dead colleague and to pay a tribute of respect to his achievements and virtues is of like character. Through our representative character fifty million people are here and a nation stands with heads uncovered to do honor to the memory of Dr. Cole. We are speaking to this great assembly; the young men of this country hear us; the words of praise and commendation spoken of our dead friend will inspire them, give an impetus to their ambition, impart a desire to be like him—honored because worthy, trusted because tried and not found wanting.

My acquaintance with Dr. Cole began when the committees of this Congress were appointed, and ended a few months later, when his failing health took him from the active duties of a member upon this floor. But, sir, it does not take years to learn the motives which inspire men's actions, to form an estimate of their character, to determine if they be worthy our confidence, entitled to our respect, fit objects of our love.

A single act, a few words spoken, even a look, often as clearly determine the character of men as great deeds done or volumes written in praise of their virtues. It was the way in which Dr. Cole did little acts of kindness to others and myself that attracted me to him, led me to a careful study of his character, the purpose he had in view and the motives that governed his actions. I learned that he was ambitious, but that his ambition was of that character that seeks to benefit others while it elevated him; he was earnest in his labors to accomplish that which directly interested the people of his district, but he was equally as earnest in his efforts for the general good. In all his acts he seemed governed by a desire to deal fairly by others, to ask only what under the same circumstances he would be willing to give.

I was told by one of his personal friends that the ambition of the doctor's life was to represent his State in Congress. By the same person I was informed that he was a poor and friendless boy and owed to himself whatever he had of education, influence, or position.

Sir, if you will point me to a man who, starting in life poor but with a laudable ambition, and who has achieved the full measure of that ambition, I am always willing to stand uncovered in that man's presence, even though that man's ambition had been to own only a cottage and ten acres.

Dr. Cole represented his district in Congress, and to me that was enough to entitle him to my respect, and I honor his memory and sincerely regret that Providence removed him from a position he honored and if he had lived I am sure his constituents would have demanded he should continue to occupy.

Dr. Cole loved Maryland and her people and his devotion to both could no more fittingly be expressed than by quoting the language of the daughter of Moab:

"Entreat me not to leave thee, for whither thou goest I will go; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest will I die and there will be buried."

REMARKS OF MR. GIBSON, OF MARYLAND.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, while the arrows of death which have flown so thick and fast amid the ranks of the Forty-ninth Congress have robbed the council of our country of many from other States with whom it was our happy fortune to meet, those of us from the State which I have the honor in part to represent are called upon to mourn the loss of a personal friend and colleague.

I knew William H. Cole well. He was my friend and "his adoption tried." Of his early life I knew but little. My association with him has been since the war, when I first met him in the discharge of important trusts devolving upon him in the legislative body of his State.

Later, I knew him better in the pursuit of his chosen profession of journalism. He was an honored member of this honored profession. In this avocation, in addition to the faithful discharge of the duties devolving upon him, he found time to contribute much to a subject which, next to his devotion to the interests of his State and his own country, lay close to his heart, the cause of Ireland. Although born and reared on the soil of his honored Maryland, as his fathers were before him, he was a devoted friend of Ireland.

He was an enthusiast on the subject and was always to be found where the woes of Ireland were said or sung, and was ever ready with his voice to defend and his purse to alleviate the wrongs of the people whose cause he espoused.

He attended as a delegate all of the conventions, and was the secretary of the National Land League.

The first leisure time he could secure he went abroad for several months and spent the most of his time in Ireland, visiting every section of it, mingling familiarly with her people, studying her institutions and imbibing her traditions.

This to him was indeed a labor of love.

He wanted to ascertain for himself what wrongs there were to be righted, and how best he could lift up the down-trodden, succor the poor, the feeble, and the oppressed, and secure as far as he might be able on his return to his own country the blessings of law, of liberty, and of order to the people toward whom his heart had gone out. In the death of William H. Cole the friends of "home rule in Ireland" have lost a valuable ally, a fearless defender, and a faithful friend.

He was an indefatigable worker. "What his hands found to do he did with all his might."

Those who knew our friend best knew how he was impelled by the very genius of work. That for him there was not "A time to get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away," but rather, his work claimed all seasons for its own. It was his highest ambition to come to Congress—to represent that portion of Baltimore city comprising his district, where he was born and lived, and where had been born and had lived his father and his father's father.

This was no recent aim of his life. It had been his boyhood's dream. It had long been his high and manly ambition to try his fortunes in this House, and when his people commended the chalice of exultant satisfaction to his lips, he was instant in season and out of season to show them he was worthy of them and of the honor they had done to him.

Time would fail me to recount his daily and nightly labors in and out of this House to advance the interests of his district. His presence in the House was of short duration, from March until May. His experience had not grown full-orbed as yet to measure himself with those of rounded experience in national matters.

But looking to this House as the forum of his efforts and its honorable commendation as the goal of his ambition, it might well be said of him that "the zeal of Thine house hath consumed me."

When the steed of opportunity came thundering down the avenue of time he was found booted and spurred, and vaulted into the saddle; but hardly had he time to know his courser's mettle "when dark-browed Care leaped up behind." For weary weeks did he bear with silent solicitude and noble reticence the consciousness of a painful and fatal malady; and all the while he sought to have those about him infer that his eye had not grown dim and that neither was his natural force abated.

Aye, Mr. Speaker, even when his weary feet could no longer measure their accustomed pace across these Halls, he was still fired with that indomitable spirit which thought it had accomplished nothing so long as anything remained to be accomplished. And so it was that, when he learned that a vote was to be taken on a measure of vital interest to the people of his district as well as to the nation, he caused himself to be carried to his seat in the House, although he knew the act might cause his death. He voted with his party on that occasion; it was his last act for his constituents!

Tender hands conveyed him to his carriage, and I tried to speak words of hope and encouragement that my heart did not feel—of brighter days to come. "No, my friend! Farewell; my last work here is done!" And so it was. Ere a week passed by he was dead. And so with his high chivalric sense of duty he died—"with all his harness on!"

Of his personal traits of character it were small worth to speak among those who knew him closely.

Kindly and courteous to all; at once dignified and unostentatious; slow to take offense and ready to forgive; too much the gentleman to be otherwise than gentle; with delicacy of regard for the feelings of others; as sensitive as instinct, he moved on to the discharge of his obligations to his fellow man, as absolutely the impersonation of "Charity for all, malice towards none," as it has ever come within the scope of my observation of mankind to discover. May our labors in the vineyard bear kindred fruit.

When we, too, have borne the heat and burden of the day may we, like him, have somewhat of that—

Wherewith the reaper filleth his arms, and he that gathereth sheaves, his bosom.

And so that for us, too, in the eventide there shall be light! And as we lay our burdens down, as our garments, may our "Nunc Dimittis" be chanted with the same calm trust, the same assured hope of immortality, which brought rest and peace to the well-spent life of William H. Cole.

REMARKS OF MR. M'COMAS.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with my deceased colleague, Hon. William H. Cole, commenced after his election to this Congress, and I am admonished that in this brief hour, in the closing days of this session, when all here are pressed with anxiety and harassed with cares of legislation, whatever I may say of him must needs be brief.

Sprung from a race which for centuries has been wrongfully deprived of rule in its own country, and yet has had so large a part in the rule of ours, my colleague was by instinct fond of politics, its activity, its discussions, its excitement, and its varying fortunes in the controversy of elections; and when I recall that in less than a half century of life-time he had been a practitioner of law, student of medicine, had spent years under arms on the side he espoused in the late conflict in our country, had filled several offices in the city of Baltimore and in the house of delegates at Annapolis, and finally reached the goal of his ambition—a seat in Congress—I can not but regret that when he came here he was in feeble health, inadequate to perform the works which his generous and kindly nature suggested for the care of the individual wants of his constituents.

When I met him yonder on the other side of the House at the opening session of this now dying Congress the look of death was already on his face; and in the few months he was here the time only sufficed to give us knowledge of his kindly temperament.

What part he might have borne on this field there is no need now to speculate upon. Many months ago I, with others commissioned by this House to attend the funeral, followed his remains at the close of a July day to the beautiful cemetery where he rests; and looking back now I am confident that there remains for those who are near and dear to him, and for those who sent him to this Hall, a consciousness that the long procession of friends who gathered there in the church and on the highways of that great city, and crowded that cemetery, the great concourse of the plain people, who were attached to him and who followed him to do honor at his burial, made for him the best of eulogies.

When, on an important division in this Chamber upon the Morrison tariff bill, which excited great national interest, my colleague came here in defiance of the admonitions of his physicians and cast the last vote he ever cast, impelled to come by a sense of public duty, and then returned to his bed, whence he was carried to his grave, my colleague performed his last public act, and it was an honorable close to his brief career in Congress so untimely closed.

REMARKS OF MR. HERMANN.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, it is not Maryland alone, sir, that mourns the death of her distinguished son and our late associate in this House. From that State on the extreme western confines of the Republic, three thousand miles away,

Where rolls the Oregon, and hears no sound
Save his own dashings,

I bring the sprig of acacia to plant upon the grave of William H. Cole. From and for that far distant State, the home of my adoption, I ask the sad privilege to unite in doing homage to the memory of one so lately the honored Representative of my own native State.

When entering this Chamber for the first time I early sought his acquaintance, and at once became the recipient of his cordial welcome, the beneficiary of his ever-ready aid, and the gainer of valuable counsel as to the legislative routine of this body.

As our acquaintance ripened into intimacy, I became the confident of much of his lifework. The early assurances of his aid and influence I soon realized in the earnest attention which he bestowed on all matters of legislation which involved the advancement and prosperity of the great Pacific Northwest. In reviewing together the arduous labors of this body, with its cares and responsibilities, I can now recall many cheering words, many practical suggestions, and many precepts of wisdom and admonition uttered from those lips now forever immovable and listless.

I well remember his devoted attachment to the interests of his own constituents; how faithfully he worked and how fondly he talked for the commercial advantages of his State, the improvement of her water ways, the shortening and cheapening of transportation to her markets, and for the removal of every discrimination against the least cost of her industries. That he might add even a tithe to the aggrandizement of that grand old Monumental City—the place of his birth, and the home he loved so well—he was ready to forego his own happiness and his health.

No constituency, no people ever had a more faithful toiler, a more jealous representative of popular rights, or a more sleepless sentinel on the watch-towers of the Republic. He assigned himself a task, and assumed a work far exceeding the ability of any one person to accomplish. Ambitious for the approval of his constituents he labored with unceasing energy to consummate his colossal plans. He encountered the usual vexatious delays incident in Congressional legislation.

At length his system could no longer comply with the demand upon it, and as day by day he hurriedly passed through these aisles his pallid face told of the conflict with pain and disease. Soon the measured tread, the haggard and despondent look admonished us all that our comrade's legislative career was rapidly nearing its close.

A little later on his seat was vacant, his presence was gone, and he responded no more to the roll-call of this House.

In his rooms, surrounded by his family, and like a soldier with his mantle wrapped around him, he patiently and without a murmur tarried to respond to that other roll-call in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. The crape upon the door, the flags at half-mast from the top of this Capitol, announced the sad story; and our companion was gone. His birth, his ancestry, his ambition, and the history of his life have been eloquently and well narrated by the voices of Maryland's Representatives here to-day.

As my own poor offering in tribute to the memory of my departed friend, I can not speak more fittingly than to refer to the one single element in his character—his kindness for his fellow-men. Though once a soldier in the confederate ranks and a participant in some of the most sanguinary and long-contested engagements of the late war, his biographer can write long and truly of the numerous kind deeds at his hands for the suffering friend as well as foe on the field of battle.

Ardent and unflinching as a partisan, grateful and true to his political friends, he had a boundary beyond which he would not go even in answer to these obligations; he would not wrong a needy fellow. He was once earnestly entreated to aid in removing from office in my State the Republican incumbent, a lady and the widow of a Union soldier. A relative was an applicant for the position. He at once expressed his earnest and feeling disapproval of the effort, saying that he could never bring either his judgment or his heart to sanction the possible injury to the widow of a soldier. Of him it may be said as is said of Ben Adhem in those enduring lines:

I pray thee, then,
Write me as one that loves his fellow-men.
The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again with a great wakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blessed,
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

And as the angel in the Book of Gold wrote Ben Adhem's name, so let the records of his country write that of William H. Cole—"he loved his fellow-men."

That he was a profound statesman or a great man in the usual acceptation his brief service in these halls did not disclose. And yet we know that he was a great man. It was that great and good jurist, Sir William Jones, who once said:

If I am asked who is the greatest man, I answer, the best; and if I am required to say who is the best, I answer, he that has deserved most of his fellow creatures.

In this respect our departed comrade was indeed a truly great man. His unwearied, persistent, and continuous labors in this Congress for the advancement of his State, his kind and uncomplaining attendance upon the incessant demands of soliciting friends and constituents, his generous and philanthropic nature, his ever ready and open hand to the poor and the distressed, the widow and the orphan, and his devoted life as a son as well as a husband all attest the high qualities of the social man and the official representative.

If I were required to indicate what I conceived to be his greatest virtue I should answer—his devotion and fidelity in friendship. This would seem to follow from the inherent qualities of his heart and mind.

To thine ownself be true;
And it must follow as the night, the day,
Thou can'st not then be false to any man."

Of all men William H. Cole was true to himself. He was greatest to those who knew him best. He believed that one who could betray a friend could prove false to his country, his family, and his God.

And when his epitaph shall be written may this crowning virtue be commemorated, may it be engraved in marble, and perpetuated in letters of gold. And thus it is, sir, that in the State he loved and served so well they mourn for him.

Mr. McMILLIN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

REMARKS OF MR. RUSK.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, in July, 1884, it was my privilege in the Congressional nominating convention of the district I now represent to place in nomination my predecessor, Hon. William H. Cole, referring to him as a man of experience and ability, who had been for many years a prominent figure in our political organization. Flushed with pride at the gratification of a long-cherished wish, he appeared before that convention in apparent health and full of manly vigor, giving promise of a long and useful public career.

But, sir, how frail are the ties that bind us to life; how futile our wishes and desires, and how dim our perception of the future, for hardly had his election been assured and his life-long hope gratified, than the strong, active man was stricken with disease. And that although the strong mind and resolute will literally enabled him "to hold death at arm's length" and to remain at the post of duty until almost tottering on the verge of the grave his days were numbered, his career was nearing its close, hastened no doubt by his assiduous devotion to what he considered his duty to his constituency.

And, sir, in less than two years from the time I placed him in nomination it was my sad duty as a personal friend and representative of our political organization, to attend in company with a great concourse of our citizens the obsequies of our late friend and representative. With saddened hearts we bore all that was mortal of William H. Cole out among the beautiful hills that surround our city, and as the summer sunset touched their summits with its parting rays of promise of another day, in beautiful "Bonnie Brae" we laid him to rest.

It seemed to us, limited as our perceptions are to our environment, that it was inexpressibly sad for this strong good man to be taken from our midst—his career of honor and usefulness cut short—taken away from that hearthstone now cheerless from his absence, away from the fulfillment of those laudable ambitions which filled his heart with hope, and gave strength to the enfeebled body even to the very day "When God's finger touched him and he slept."

Sad that we should place him in the silent tomb, and, except to the few faithful hearts, the busy world go on as if he had not lived; but, sir, if we could look beyond this seeming sunset of his life, if we could catch the accents of that released and unburdened spirit we might have heard the whisper "It is well."

Mr. Speaker, William H. Cole was a man of versatility and varied experience, of strong will and determination—this was his distingnishing characteristic. Born in Baltimore city, we find him in early manhood, after his admission to the bar, settling in Kansas, taking part in the fierce struggle in that State in 1857 and 1858. Later we find him in the civil war, casting his fortune with the Southern States, where his ability and courage gave him distinction.

After the war, returning to his native city, he entered the field of journalism, again winning distinction, in the mean while being called to positions of honor and trust in our city and State government, until he was chosen to represent our district in the House.

Mr. Speaker, William H. Cole was essentially a man of the people. Every pulsation of his heart was in unison with their interests. Not an Irishman by birth, yet he was an honored officer of the Land League, one of the accredited representatives in its national organization. Not a workingman in the sense of performing manual labor, yet he was always welcomed at the deliberations of our workingmen and recognized as their true friend.

As a party man, while tolerant and respectful of the opinions of those honestly differing from him, yet he was filled with an honest zeal, which would not be repressed, for the success of his party. Whatever might be his individual disappointments in political matters, he never faltered in his allegiance to his party.

In the latter days of his life he arose almost from his death-bed and came to this Hall to cast his vote for a measure which he deemed of great importance and promising the greatest benefits to his countrymen. Later on, as your last session was drawing to its close, he recognized that his end was fast approaching, and although it was hard to surrender up those fond hopes and ambitions—harder still to sever those heart ties which bound him to home and loved ones—yet without a murmur, "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust," he awaited the summons which called him from time to eternity, from ceaseless pain to endless joy. Peace to his ashes. Honor to his memory.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions offered by my colleague [Mr. COMPTON].

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to present a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back the agricultural appropriation bill with Senate amendments, and I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is that a privileged motion? This is not a conference report.

Mr. HATCH. A motion to ask for a conference is privileged.

Mr. BRADY. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MATSON). The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture having considered the bill H. R. 10912, with amendments by the Senate, report the same back and recommend that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference thereon.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH; it was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Printing be given one hour, unless they conclude in a shorter time, to call up and have immediately considered measures reported by that committee.

Several members called for the regular order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a question of privilege. Among those recorded as not voting on the dependent pensions bill last Thursday I find my name. I do not find any pair announced. I was absent during the whole of the week confined to my bed by sickness. I had been paired, and I supposed I was then paired. If present, I would have voted for the bill and against the veto.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit as an amendment to the pending paragraph what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 217, strike out "4" and insert "6;" so as to read:
For newspaper clerk, $1,600.

Mr. CRAIN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "$2,000" instead of "$1,600."

Mr. HOLMAN. I must make the point of order on that.

Mr. CRAIN. That is the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law does not authorize that salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have made the point of order on the amendment to the amendment. I am not aware of any law that fixes this salary at $2,000. If there be any law authorizing that salary let it be produced.

Mr. CRAIN. My authority for the statement that the salary of $2,000 is authorized by law is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations; and I presume the gentleman from Indiana will not deny the fact that that was the appropriation of last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may have been the appropriation of last year, but I am not aware of any such law. If the gentleman from Missouri can produce any such law I will be glad to see it.

Mr. BURNES. All I can say is that the incumbent of this office serves until the 1st of December. The law for the current year provides a salary of $2,000; and if this amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] does not prevail, as a matter of course he will simply be deprived of the difference between $2,000 and $1,600 from the 1st of July to the 1st of December.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it anything more than the law of the current appropriation?

Mr. BURNES. So far as the specific office is concerned this clerk is not named. These clerks are not named in the law of 1873; the appropriations are made for clerks by classes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. There is no law as to what this clerk's salary would be next year. The amendment to the amendment is therefore subject to the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If there be no law how can the point of order be made that the amendment to the amendment changes existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. In either event the Chair must submit the question to the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I assume there is no such law, as no such law is produced.

Mr. CRAIN. The point of order is not well, taken because my amendment does not change any existing law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is a change of the laws of the United States to make a new office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken. If there be a law fixing this salary at the sum fixed in the amendment to the amendment it is in order; if there be no law it is in order for the committee to fix the compensation at whatever amount it chooses. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 201, page 9 of the bill, after the word "dollars," insert "an assistant to the person preparing the general index to the Journals of Congress under the resolution of May 22, 1882, $2,000."

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word by way of explanation of this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON. In 1882 a resolution was passed by Congress appropriating $2,000 for that year, and it has been kept up every year since to employ a competent person to make a general index of the records of Congress from the beginning——

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend will add to his amendment the words "for one year," I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SINGLETON. I will accept that modification.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 201, on page 9 of the bill, insert, after the word "dollars," an "assistant for one year to the person preparing the general index to the Journals of Congress under the resolution of May 22, 1882, $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 202 strike out the words "and two reading clerks," and after the word "each," in line 203, insert "two reading clerks, at $3,600 each."

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law authorizing that salary.

Mr. MATSON. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, there is no law authorizing any salary. This is not in violation of any law, and I challenge my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] to show any law that fixes these salaries at $3,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The present law fixes the salary at $3,000. I did not know that Indiana was going into the business of increasing salaries.

Mr. MORRISON. Indiana brought in a bill increasing certain salaries, thus setting the example.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call attention to the last clause of the appropriation law of the present year. That law fixes the salaries of these two officers at $3,000 each, and then it contains a provision that—

All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

If, therefore, there had been a law fixing the salaries of these officers at more than $3,000 each, that law would have been repealed by this provision.

Mr. MILLS. That is the annual appropriation bill, and operates for one year only.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; that provision is a permanent law.

Mr. MATSON. I understand my colleague to have read from the appropriation bill of the current year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but what I have read is permanent law.

Mr. MATSON. That fixes the salaries for this year; but we are now legislating for the next fiscal year, not for the present one. There is no law which would be violated by the adoption of this amendment, and I think that my colleague, by resorting to this appropriation bill, which exists but for one year, confesses that there is no permanent statute which would be violated by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the third section of the act from which I read is a permanent law, and is as operative in the future as during the current year. It repeals all acts or parts of acts inconsistent on in conflict with its provisions. If there is any law fixing a salary for these two officers it is this appropriation bill, and it fixes them at $3,000 each. You can not make language any clearer. It is a definite, specific fixing of the salaries and a repeal of all laws inconsistent with this act; and I call upon my colleague to show some law authorizing a salary for these officers above $3,000.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, there is a general law which prescribes the salaries of officers and employés of the Government. The law which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has read is a law which professes in its title to be an act to make appropriations for a specific term—a specific appropriation from the beginning of one fiscal year to the end of the same. It does not pretend to interfere with the general law regulating the salaries of the different employés of the Government, and therefore it can not be argued that that appropriation act, by the language which the gentleman has read, repeals any general law.

If the act from which he has read had been a general law relating to the salaries of officers and employés of the Government at all times, then it might be justly argued that the language quoted by the gentleman would repeal any prior law on the subject; but that act starts out by saying that it is an act making appropriations for a certain fiscal year, and, paragraph by paragraph, it goes on making appropriations for this officer and that officer, and then, at the end it says, in a general clause, that if there is any law inconsistent with the provisions of this specific appropriation act for the fiscal year, such law is hereby repealed. That is correct. Nobody doubts that; but a general law fixing the salaries of officers and employés permanently does not conflict with a specific appropriation bill operating only for a specific, limited time.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is admitted on all hands that a limitation made by an appropriation bill is only temporary and applies only to the annual appropriation. But in a general appropriation bill where the terms of a provision are the terms of permanent law, they have the same effect as when employed in any other form of statute.

There is no pretense that the language here is limited to appropriations made in the appropriation act for the current year. On the contrary, the language is general. It is the language of continuing, permanent law, not of temporary provision. Why, sir, what terms of legislation could be more specific?

That all acts—

Not for the present or current year, but—

All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The idea that that provision is limited in its operation to the current appropriation act is utterly untenable.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman allow me a question? In the act for the current year you have said that a particular salary shall be paid for this year. Now, is there anything inconsistent with that in the general law which provides the salary which shall be paid?

Mr. HOLMAN. If any statute fixes these salaries, it is the law of the current law which repeals all preceding legislation fixing the salaries. I am yet to hear the doctrine announced in this House that under the present rules a salary may be enlarged without some authority of law. No law is produced, or can be produced. If there were produced any statute of prior date to the appropriation act for the current year the provision which I have read repeals that. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, what purpose is there in the section which I have read except to repeal all statutes or parts of statutes inconsistent with the provisions of the appropriation act?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will please state his point of order again.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point of order is that there is no law authorizing the increase of these salaries which are fixed by the appropriation act for the present year at $3,000; and if there had been any antecedent law fixing these salaries at a higher rate it would be repealed by the third section of the appropriation act for the current year. There is an entire absence of law authorizing this proposition; and hence it is out of order under the third clause of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana hold that there is no law fixing the salary differently from the amount named in the pending bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I assume there is not; and if there ever was such a a provision, it is repealed by the third section, to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman has cited to the Chair any other law on the subject than the appropriation act for the current year. The Chair can not assume that this is in violation of existing law unless some statute with which the proposition conflicts is produced. The Chair will therefore ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] who moved this amendment to cite to the Chair any existing law which authorizes a salary of $3,600 for these officers.

Mr. MATSON. I insist that the burden is on my colleague. I insist that in order for him to maintain the point of order he must show that this amendment is in violation of existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; you have the affirmative.

Mr. MATSON. No, you have. I am not raising any point of order. Mr. Chairman, my colleague raises the point of order, and he must show that there is some law fixing this salary at some other sum than $3,600.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Merely to test this question of order, I move to amend the amendment so as to make these salaries $7,000. If the position of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] is good, then my amendment is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it has never been held that a person taking the negative position of the absence of law must produce evidence that there is no law. The party asking the increase of salary must produce the law justifying such increase. That has been the uniform ruling as, I think, the Chair is aware.

Mr. MATSON. I do not insist there is any law fixing this salary; I insist there is no existing law to be violated.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If there is no law authorizing the payment of $3,600, then the amendment can not be in order under the rules of the House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. As there seems to be some doubt whether there is any existing law on this subject, the Chair will submit the amendment to a vote of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is right.

Mr. CASWELL. There is no law fixing these salaries.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The amendment of Mr. MATSON having been again read,

The CHAIRMAN said: As many as are of opinion that this amendment be agreed to——

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, that is not the question to be submitted. The question is whether the amendment is in order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled the point of order by deciding to submit the amendment to a vote of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the point of order is overruled, then I have a word to say upon the amendment itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked that some statute be cited——

Mr. HOLMAN. I had not dreamed that the point was to be overruled. I never made a point of order in this House which seemed to me clearer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked for some statute governing the question, and, as none was produced, decided to submit the amendment to a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must be allowed to occupy a moment in protesting against this extraordinary proposition. It has more of the flavor of the legislation of 1873 than anything I have witnessed on this floor in a long time. If this proposition be adopted, it means a general increase of the salaries of officers of the Government. I protest against the initiation of a policy by which all along the line salaries are to be increased.

Gentlemen do not hold their seats on this side of the House on a doctrine which proposes to increase the burdens of the people of the country—to increase salaries. Their seats are held on a different doctrine from that. Instead of retrenchment during the first year of a Democratic administration an extravagance, unknown since the year of 1873, is to be inaugurated—legislation which terminated in the famous act which revolutionized this House and filled up this side with a majority of Democratic members.

Mr. REED. Do not let us refer to that sad event. [Laughter.]

Mr. MATSON. I have offered this amendment believing it is a proper one to be adopted. I am glad the Chair decided it to be in order, because I feel it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend want to pay these gentlemen now receiving $1,000 a month for their services $200 a month more from the first Monday in December to the 4th of March? They now receive $1,000 a month.

Mr. MATSON. I have not yielded the floor to my colleague. I do not believe there should be a general increase of salaries, nor do I believe there should be a few selected ones, a few to be reduced or a few to be raised, or for certain gentlemen of this House to say what should be done. [Applause on the Republican side.] Here is presented the case of two persons who are seen by this House every single hour it is in session. Members may come and members may go, the Speaker may come and the Speaker may go, other employés may come and go, but the reading clerks are always here. They read until their throats are raw. No men undergo the physical suffering and torture of these two clerks, and we ought not to hesitate to pay them $3,600 a year.

I beg to say further in regard to the objection urged that these clerks are not required to be here during the vacation. The little time they have during the vacation is of no value to them.

Mr. CRAIN. Members of Congress do not come here during the vacation.

Mr. MATSON. They do not come here during the vacation. Their time is worth little to them. Their time is taken up with the discharge of their duties, and while they are here reading they undergo physical torture and suffering which no member and no other officer undergoes. I think $3,600 is a moderate salary for these gentleman. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the present law these two gentlemen now receive for the current year, beginning on the first Monday of December to the 4th of March, at the rate of $1,000 per month. My colleague proposes to increase that to $1,200 a month. I am willing that that shall go to his constituents and mine, and let them judge between us.

Mr. MATSON. By the same process of calculation members get $1,660 a month. [Laughter].

Mr. BURROWS. I move as a substitute for the pending amendment the following:

The Clark read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 201, strike out down to line 203; so it will read:

"For Chief Clerk, Journal Clerk, and two reading clerks, $3,600 each."

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I indorse every single word said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] in relation to the reading clerks. There is no question in my mind their salary should be fixed at $3,600 each, as well as the salary of the Journal Clerk and the salary of the Chief Clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendments now pending.

Mr. MATSON'S amendment was read, and then Mr. BURROWS'S substitute.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is not the salary of these officers now $3,600 each?

Mr. BURROWS. Thirty-six hundred dollars was their salary for a long time, and it should be so to-day.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary of the Chief Clerk is fixed at $3,000 by law. While I admit he is a most valuable public officer, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question raised is precisely the same. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. The Chair is of opinion, and desires to state now, that the appropriation bill for the current year is not the "existing law" to which the rule of the House refers when provision is made that no legislation upon an appropriation bill changing existing law shall be in order. The Chair holds that an appropriation bill is not that existing law, because the appropriation bill will not be a law after the 1st of July next, when the bill now in progress of preparation is to take effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rules of the House, which provide that no appropriation shall be made except in conformity with existing law, can you increase a salary from $3,000 to $3,600 on a legislative act? Is it not in itself a legislative act?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no general law fixing the salary, as far as has been indicated to the Chair; and if there be no such existing law it must rest with the Committee of the Whole to say what the salary shall be, and not with the chairman of the committee. The Chair will not undertake to make a law if the Congress has not made one, and hence entertains the substitute of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the Chair decided the question of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say the law fixes the salary of the Chief Clerk at $3,000, and in that respect I am not speaking of what is done in an appropriation bill but what the statutes show.

The CHAIRMAN. If the general law fixes the salary at that the point of order is of course well taken. The Chair requests the gentleman from Indiana to indicate the law to which he refers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman who offers this amendment insist that there is a statute fixing this salary at $3,600? If so, I would like to have it produced. I say that the law fixes the salary at $3,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. As the gentleman claims its benefit I think it is the duty of the gentleman from Indiana to produce it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if the Chair has not already ruled on this question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that the point of order was overruled, but the gentleman from Indiana has called attention to the fact, as he claims, that there is a statute in existence fixing this salary of the Chief Clerk at $3,000. The Chair has asked him to produce it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Protesting against a ruling that authorizes a member to rise in his seat and move an increase of salary without showing any law to authorize it, and believing that it is in conflict with the rule of this House, in this instance I will read from the statutes.

One Chief Clerk at a salary of $3,000 a year, and while such office is held by the present incumbent, and no longer, an additional sum of $1,000.

That was the act of 1873, and prior to the appointment of the present incumbent. That is part of what is known as the salary-grab act.

Mr. CANNON. But my friend from Indiana will recollect that that was subsequently repealed. It was repealed in the next year by the act which, as I am somewhat hoarse to-night, I will hand to my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to have read. The act my friend from Indiana read is the salary-grab act, which, I repeat, was repealed by the act to which I now ask the attention of the committee.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think my colleague would undertake to deceive the House.

Mr. BURROWS. I send this statute to the desk, and ask to have it read by the Clerk.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DUNN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Education for the years 1885 and 1886; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7021) for the adjustment of land grants to aid in the construction of railroads in the State of Kansas, &c., and requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. MORGAN managers on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the statute indicated by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state that on further examination I find——

Mr. BURROWS. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana wishes to make a statement which may obviate the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The statute which I read, as I stated, is what is known as the salary grab, and fixes the salary at the amount stated. I admit that act was repealed.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand my friend to say that the law he read was repealed. If he admits that it is sufficient, and there is no need for reading the statute I sent up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not desire, then, to have it read.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the gentleman admits the law he quoted from to be repealed. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in order to punish the Committee on Appropriations we are likely to commit an extravagance of which we would all be ashamed and the country will denounce. I think we had better consult our senses more and our prejudices less in expending the public money.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust, sir, that the House will not go beyond the purpose that prompted it in the original issue with the gentleman from Indiana with reference to this bill. It was claimed that there was a purpose to increase some salaries and decrease others in violation of the rules of the House, and it was thought it was that spirit alone which prompted this body to take issue with the gentleman. That is not the present question. The salaries of these clerks have been for a long period of years fixed at $3,000.

I trust, sir, that we shall not in this excitement, without the advice of any committee, simply at the suggestion of our friends at the Clerk's desk—I mean the suggestion given by their presence, which recalls our friendship for them—set out in a loose method of legislation in the direction of increasing salaries. Let us observe the rule that we have prescribed for the committee itself and not undertake extemporaneously, without advice coming from any committee or any other authorized quarter, to turn in a tide of extravagance on this appropriation bill.

I trust we will leave the appropriations as they were in the bill of last year and of many preceding years, which show the legislative mind of Congress on the subject. Let us pause. I trust we will proceed no further in this matter and that we will simply allow the amount which has been allowed for a long period. I remember when this salary, at the rate of $3,600, in the excitement of the closing hours of a Congress and against the earnest appeal of that distinguished American citizen, General Garfield, was placed on the statute-book. Subsequently, in the Forty-fourth Congress, it was repealed, and since that time it has stood where it now is. I trust this hasty action that is proposed will not be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to amend the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] will be read.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Are there not already two amendments pending? I make the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment to the amendment is in the nature of a substitute. The Chair will cause the proposed amendment to be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute by adding the following:
"Provided, That no more than $35 per day shall be paid for each day actually employed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute, which has just been read.

The amendment to the substitute was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The substitute was agreed to—ayes 90, noes 75.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

The amendment as amended was agreed to—ayes 104, noes 67.

Mr. HOLMAN. We will take a yea-and-nay vote in the House on this amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Clerks, messengers, and stenographers to committees: For two stenographers to committees, at $4,000 each; clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,200; messenger, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,600; messenger, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Agriculture, clerk to the Committee on Claims, clerk to the Committee on Commerce, clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia, clerk to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs, clerk to the Committee on the Public Lands, clerk to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, clerk to the Committee on War Claims, clerk to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and clerk to the Committee on Public buildings and Grounds, at $2,000 each; in all, $48,300.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if these are the present salaries?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change made in this paragraph.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 244, strike out "$2,500," and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000;" in line 245, strike out "$1,200," and insert "$1,600;" so that it will read:
Clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,600,

Mr. HISCOCK. This amendment covers both the clerk and the assistant clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentlemen from Indiana has any point of order to make let him make it now. There is no law against my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law authorizing it.

Mr. HISCOCK. This relates to a part of the organization of the House. It provides the compensation for the officers of the House and there is no law fixing the compensation of these officers. Their compensation is fixed year by year in the annual bill, and there is no general provision in the law which covers them. I imagine the House will never part with its prerogative to fix the compensation that it will pay to its employés, and I challenge the gentleman on the other side to show any law, any statute fixing the compensation to be paid to these officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. By the salary-grab law this salary was fixed at $2,980.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That has been repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was the act of the 3d of March, 1873, and no law ever enacted by Congress ever received such an exampled rebuke as that law did from the people of this country. That law fixed the salary at $2,980, I admit. That law was repealed as soon as Congress could get together, after the indignant expression of our people. And now, sir, it is proposed to make this salary even higher when the cost of living is much reduced from what it was when that rebuke was given to Congress by the people of this country.

My point of order is that there is no law authorizing this increase, and that as regards an increase even up to $2,980, the law which authorized that was repealed in obedience to the command of our masters.

Mr. MORRISON. There is, as I believe, no necessity for increased compensation to the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means. The present clerk of that committee, Mr. Talbott, is most efficient, competent, and trustworthy as clerk, and is besides a man of ability and information beyond the requirements of efficient and capable clerkship to any committee. Still the clerk of any House committee is fairly well paid at $2,500 a year. Of course, the clerk of this committee should be at least as well paid as any other committee clerk of the House. None should receive more than $2,500 per annum. None higher, if so high, as the clerk of the Ways and Means Committee.

I assume the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] in offering his amendment means no more than this, and that this salary ought to be equalized with that of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, which the Committtee on Appropriations put in this bill at $3,000. In my judgment this equalization should be made by reducing the pay of the clerk on appropriations to $2,500. It seems to me that this equalization ought to have challenged the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as a question involving the proprieties and decencies of legislation when he was reporting the highest salary for his own committee clerk of appropriations.

He has just reminded us of how the people rebuked an increase of this salary of $2,500, in what he terms the "salary-grab" period. He seems to forget that whatever there was of that rebuke he is receiving it to-day. The rebuke of that far-off period stands against him to-day, because since that time the duties and labors of the clerk of his committee have been largely reduced while his salary has been consideably increased, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has continued that increase from year to year, and continues it in the very bill now under consideration. [Applause.]

My judgment is that the compensation here provided for the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means need not to be increased, but that of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be reduced.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to move in this House the increase of the salary of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations. Upon my motion it was carried, and all the opprobrium connected with it, I suppose, was visited upon my head; but I have never bowed beneath its weight, and I never expect to do so. I believed that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations earned that $3,000, and I stood here in my place and asked that it be given to him, and, so far as I know, nobody has ever been rebuked for the action then taken. I tell you, sir, that the people do not rebuke men for paying to the employés of the Government the money which they earn, and the "salary-grab," when it was denounced, was denounced because members of Congress voted it to themselves, and not because they proposed to increase to the proper point the salaries of efficient and faithful employés of the House.

As regards the clerks of the Committee of Ways and Means, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] knows them, and I say that they earn yearly $3,000, the sum which I proposed to give them. Experts are needed in that place—men who are learned in all the tariff and customs laws and internal-revenue laws of this and of other nations. These gentlemen are such experts. They are, if you please to call them so, the eyes, the ears, and the hands of the members of that committee, ready to give them at their request the information that they ask for upon every subject coming before the committee. The clerks of that committee are entitled to the compensation which this amendment proposes to give them, and I am willing to take the responsibility of having offered the amendment, notwithstanding that the distinguished chairman of that committee in a fit of economy has seen fit to oppose it.

I know that the labors of the Committee on Appropriations have been very largely increased, and I know further that the accomplished gentleman who is the clerk of that committee, Mr. Courts, is indispensable to the committee and to this House, and never by vote of mine shall his compensation be stricken down or reduced. I hope, sir, notwithstanding the opposition of the gentleman from Indiana and of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, my motion will prevail. Let me add that even the gentleman from Indiana himself would be powerless to manage this bill unless the clerk of that committee sat at his elbow. [Laughter and applause.]

Even the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would be unable to inform us in reference to the provisions of these appropriation bills or to lay before this House the detailed information which it demands of him were it not that the ever vigilant Courts is always near him to post him up in reference to the details and the facts which the House calls for; and if any bill shall ever be brought before this House affecting the customs taxes or the internal-revenue taxes of this country the accomplished clerk of that committee will be found as indispensable to the committee and to this House as the very chairman himself. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. It seems that there is no general law fixing this salary, and it must be carried in the appropriation bill. Therefore, it is not for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House to fix it, and he will submit the question to the committee.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to—ayes 105, noes 74.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will take a vote in the House upon that amendment.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 257, after the word "claims," insert "assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims, $1,200."

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, this is not an increase of salary. This clerk is provided for in the bill for the current year. He was provided for as far back as the Forty-sixth Congress, again in the Forty-seventh and the Forty-eighth, and again in the Forty-ninth Congress, and now it is sought to drop him out of the appropriation bill for the coming year. There never has been heretofore as much necessity for this clerk as there will be in the next Congress. In the Forty-seventh Congress I had the honor to be a member of that committee and to be associated with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and I say to him and to the House that the work of the committee has more than trebled since he and I served on that committee.

And I say to the House that the work of that committee has more than trebled since he and I served upon it and had the aid of this assistant clerk. The gentleman must be aware that this clerk was essential to the work of the committee in the Forty-seventh Congress. Now, let me say in his ear that in the Forty-seventh Congress there were sent to that committee 1,601 bills and petitions. In the Forty-ninth Congress there have been sent to the committee up to the present time 4,750 bills and petitions—more than three times the amount of work performed in the Forty-seventh Congress, and more than four times the amount performed in the Forty-sixth Congress, when this office was first created.

There is much other work to be performed by this clerk that I should like to bring to the attention of members in order to show that no unreasonable application is made to this House in asking that in the next Congress, of which I shall not be a member, this assistant clerk shall be given to the Committee on War Claims, unless the purpose is to abolish that committee; and if that is the purpose, it ought to be carried out directly; and we should not, first of all, impose the work upon the committee and then refuse to furnish the necessary clerical assistance to do the work.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a vote.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would like to know whether this is an annual clerk, or whether he serves merely for three months at the short session, and draws a salary of $1,200 for those three months.

Mr. GEDDES. He is an annual clerk. When this session closes he must be fed and clothed—he must live.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Can he not go out and earn his bread?

Mr. GEDDES. Oh, yes; as you and I can; and we shall have to do it. [Applause and laughter].

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would like to know whether this has been an annual clerk heretofore, or only a session clerk?

Mr. GEDDES. Always an annual clerk, just as he is now; and he received $1,600 until in the bill of last year the salary was reduced to $1,200. I am only asking that this clerk be continued at $1,200 in the next Congress.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to know how many bills have come from that committee.

Mr. GEDDES. Do you mean how many have been reported?

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to know how many have passed and become laws.

Mr. GEDDES. Oh, we are not responsible for the number that may have failed after they were reported.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GEDDES, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 94, noes 87.

The Clerk read as follows:

For thirty-one clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session, $39,618.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] a question. It is now nearly 10 o'clock. There are ninety-five more pages of this bill to be read. It is plain that the bill in the form in which it has been submitted will not go through the House.

If we can come to any understanding about the matter, it is high time it should be arrived at. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he will not consent that without debate, as the items in this bill are reached, they shall be made to conform to the corresponding items in the bill of last year—the bill making appropriations for the current fiscal year.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask the gentleman to answer me that question.

A MEMBER. Then we would have to go back and change the parts of the bill already gone over.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. HAMMOND. Let the gentleman from Indiana answer my question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I see no impropriety in the course suggested, except that in a few instances in the Quartermaster General's Office, that officer has recommended a very material reduction of his force, on the ground that the whole of the present force is not required.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That could be provided for.

Mr. HOLMAN. But even there I see no reason under the circumstances why the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia could not be adopted.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Would the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia cover the surveyors-general?

Mr. HAMMOND. The purpose I had in view in getting this answer from the gentleman from Indian—and it is to me satisfactory—was not to commit this committee to each individual item of the bill, even upon the idea that it conforms to the other bill, because the other bill may, in certain particulars, be wrong; it may be that we ought to supply deficiencies for officers that did not then exist; it may be that we shall have to cut off officers that by reason of a changed condition of circumstances can now be dispensed with, or have been dispensed with by law.

I wish simply to arrive at an understanding that when the House again begins the reading of this bill, when it is necessary to make any provision conform to the law for the current year, the amount shall be simply named, and we shall go on. When there comes a point at which there is really a difference of opinion or of construction, and members feel that in good faith they should undertake to change the existing bill, and can give a reason for it, the committee ought to be controlled by that reason. But I desire to impress upon this House that they who take the responsibility of refusing to accede to what the gentleman from Indiana now says he is willing to do—to make this bill conform as far as it ought to conform to the bill of the current year—they who do that take a fearful responsibility.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me add, if points of order are made they shall be decided without debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will be agreed to. There are a few places in the bill providing, for instance, for the occupation of the west wing of the State, War, and Navy Department, and there are half a dozen provisions of the same class about which there will be no controversy, and which I think should go into the bill. If gentlemen will examine the bill they will find there are comparatively few changes. A large majority of the sections are untouched altogether. Most of the sections of the pending bill are the same as those of the last bill.

If the gentleman from Georgia will make his statement again, and no member of the Committee on Appropriations objects, and I believe they are all present with one exception, I think, I will consent to the proposition.

Mr. HAMMOND. My proposition is that it shall simply include salaries, and those salaries shall be made to conform to the bill of the current year.

Mr. MILLS. As modified by the amendments made to-night.

Mr. HAMMOND. Of course. I do not mean to go back in reference to anything which has been done to-night in the way of amendments, but I say from now forward it shall apply. I understand the Committee of the Whole have voted already on propositions, and I am not asking anybody to recede from anything which has been done. I say let us conform this bill to the other, not because I regard that as a perfect bill, but because we did read that bill, we did pass on that deliberately, and because whatever evil will come from following that example is not to be compared with the evil which will arise by the course the committee is now engaged in.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia a question for information.

Mr. HAMMOND. I mean, of course, all obstruction in this Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What I want to understand is this: Does the gentlemen grant where there are any changes made it will be understood they will be abandoned only if objection be made?

Mr. BLOUNT. Abandoned anyway.

Mr. HAMMOND. I take the ground, that unless some one calls attention to the change, it has to be taken for granted.

Mr. NELSON. Does it cover this point? I ask the gentleman from Georgia for information. They have reported in the bill to reduce and consolidate surveyor-generals in several States and Territories. Are those to be left where they were in the last bill?

Several MEMBERS. Of course they are.

Mr. HAMMOND. My purpose is to get some way of traveling fast with this bill.

Mr. NELSON. Let me ask the gentleman—do you intend to cover the case of those surveyor-generals?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman in charge of the bill consents to it we can go on and carry out the idea of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOLMAN. Speaking for myself——

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman from Indiana proceeds I wish to say this: I understood the gentleman to respond to the request of my colleague that this bill shall be made to conform to the bill of the current year so far as it related to salaries.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, and the number of employés.

Mr. BLOUNT. And the gentleman from Indiana responded in this way, where objection was made he would. That leaves it in this doubt——

Mr. HOLMAN. No, the gentleman misapprehended me. It was suggested by the gentleman from Georgia where there was change suggested and no objection to it——

Mr. BLOUNT. Does my friend understand it in this way, where he has reduced a salary, where the amount is different from the current year?

Mr. HOLMAN. When it is reduced.

Mr. BLOUNT. He will make the change on his own motion. I hope my friend will be allowed to answer. [Cries of "Get his answer!"] I think my friend will answer my question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I see very well this committee does not favor any change in this bill in reduction of salaries. That is manifest, and I can see this bill itself will not pass except on some principle which will produce concord of action. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I will agree in that proposition, and if members of the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe they are all present but one, will not object to it, I will consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend from Indiana indicate the changes in the bill as they are reached?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SYMES. I want to ask the gentleman one question. I want to know if that provision in this bill which provides for abolishing all the offices of the Surveyor-General on the 1st of July, 1888, is to go out?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is covered by the general proposition, of course.

Mr. SYMES. And the proposition of last year will go in?

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course, if this arrangement is carried out the bill will be made to conform.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that we proceed with the bill.

Mr. KING. If there is to be no change in this bill from the bill of last year in the matter of salary, or in the personnel, I ask the gentleman from Indiana to just simply take up the measure of the last session and put it upon its passage now. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HAMMOND. Permit me one minute more. I think the committee will now so understand this matter that we may proceed with the reading of this bill, and I believe that no misunderstanding will occur if we go on and the gentleman from Indiana does what he has indicated his purpose to do, call attention to each variation from the bill of last year so that it may be made to conform to that bill as we proceed with its consideration. [Cries of "That's right!"]

Mr. CANNON, Mr. BRADY, and others called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the regular order. The gentleman from Georgia has a motion pending.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia, early this evening, stated that the origin of the difficulty between the Appropriations Committee and the House was that the Appropriations Committee had brought in appropriations here not in compliance with the requirements of the statute. That is the difficulty; and the solution presented by the gentleman from Georgia does not do away with that difficulty. Now, if the understanding can be reached that as we read this bill it shall be conformed to existing law, I mean now the law as laid down by the statute, and not that established by appropriation bills heretofore, then it will be satisfactory, otherwise not.

Mr. McMILLIN. The proposition was to make it conform to the law under which we are now operating.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It will be at any time in order to amend it under the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HENLEY. I shall insist that we are not to be governed by a prior appropriation bill, because that bill may have violated the law; it did to my own personal knowledge in certain instances. But if we are to be governed by the existing law, and if the gentleman from Indiana will indicate his purpose to frame the bill in accordance with that law, so far as I am concerned it will be satisfactory.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let me state to the gentleman from California that in the appropriation bill of last year the existing law is violated over one hundred and forty times.

Mr. HENLEY. Yes; I am just reminded by my friend from Louisiana that in the bill which is proposed to be taken up and substituted for this one the law is violated over one hundred and forty times.

Mr. HAMMOND. I think the gentleman from California misunderstands me. I have not asked unanimous consent for anything. I have simply elicited from the gentleman from Indiana a declaration that he intends to do a particular thing. I believe when we start the committee will allow him to do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the reading of the bill will go on, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. HEPBURN. The committee is in so much disorder that it is absolutely impossible to hear what is being done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to preserve order upon the floor, as it has been doing, and again requests members to resume their seats.

Mr. HAMMOND. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say just this, that no agreement can be made that will bind anybody in this committee, and therefore I hope the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Doorkeeper: For Doorkeeper, $3,000; and for hire of horses, feed, repair of wagon and harness, $1,100; assistant doorkeeper, superintendent of document-room, assistant superintendent of document-room, and Department messenger (C. W. Coombs), at $2,000 each; one employé (John T. Chancey), $1,500; document file clerk, $1,400; assistant document file clerk, under resolution of December 19, 1881, $1,314; clerk for Doorkeeper, and janitor, at $1,200 each; nine messengers, including the messenger to the reporters' gallery, at $1,200 each; nine messengers, at $1,000 each: seven laborers, at $720 each; two laborers in the water-closet, at $720 each; three laborers, including two in the cloak-rooms, at $600 each; female attendant in ladies' retiring-room, $600; superintendent of the folding-room, $2,000; three clerks in the folding-room, one at $1,800, and two at $1,200 each; one foreman, $1,500; one messenger, $1,200; one folder in the sealing-room, $1,200; one page, $500; one laborer, $400; ten folders, at $900 each; five folders, at $840 each; three folders, during the session, at $67 per month each; and fifteen folders, at $720 each; one night watchman, $900; one driver, $600; fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll, at $1,200 each; two chief pages (A. H. Pickens and H. T. Lyle), at $900 each; thirty-three pages, during the session, including two riding pages, one telephone page, and one telegraph page, at $2.50 per day each; two messengers, during the session, at $67 per month each; ten laborers, during the session, at $60 per month each; six laborers known as cloak-room men, during the session, at $50 per month each; in all, $128,711.50.

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point of order on lines 279 and 280, where the names of C. W. Coombs and John T. Chancey appear, and also in line 307, where the names of A. H. Pickens and H. T. Lyle appear. I make the point of order under the authority of the Constitution of the United States, article 1, section 2, paragraph 5, which reads as follows:

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no doubt but that the point is well taken if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The point is conceded, I understand.

Mr. REAGAN. Because, Mr. Chairman, if we can appoint the clerks in the next House we can appoint the Speaker on the same appropriation bill. I insist, therefore, on the point of order I made.

Mr. CANNON. There is no law fixing the number of pages or the number of messengers for this House. It is competent for the House, in carrying on its business, to designate one or all by name or otherwise. So much for that.

I did hope that my valued friend from Texas, now that he is soon to be transplanted from this body to the other, would at least consent that this House, which he is to know no more for six years at least, and I hope that he will have service enough on the other side so that it will know him no more forever [laughter], will let the House that he is leaving regulate its own pages, messengers, and other affairs according to its own desires.

I appeal now to my friend from Texas, as this point of order is frivolous, to withdraw it.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Illinois says there is no law relating to this matter. I do not know whether the Constitution is recognized as law on that side of the House or not. It used to be recognized as law on this side. Those gentlemen who are not familiar with the instrument may not have caught the words which I read from the Constitution. I will read them again:

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers.

I said if the House could by this act take from the next House the right to elect its officers by naming them here it could take away from the next House of Representatives the right to elect its Speaker by naming the Speaker in this bill. Each House has the right to choose its own officers and the very fact that the "other officers" are mentioned along with the Speaker shows that this provision of the Constitution was made to apply alike to the Speaker and the officers of the House.

This is an act of special favoritism, a specimen of what we had also last session of an attempt to push men into office in violation of the Constitution. I believe the gentleman from Illinois was one of the gentlemen to follow the bill to the Senate in order to get those names replaced on the bill after they had been stricken out of it by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that it was ruled at the last session that those names should not appear in the bill. The present occupant of the Chair adheres to that ruling.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Public printing:
For compensation of the Public Printer, $4,500; for chief clerk, $2,400; two clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; in all, $15,100.

Mr. STEELE. I call the attention of my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] to the fact that he has changed the classification of the clerks in this paragraph. In the bill for the current year there is provision made for four clerks of class 4 and one clerk of class 1.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a slight change of the classification. This reduces the force a little. It makes only a reduction of $200, and it is in conformity with the wishes of the present Public Printer.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

EXECUTIVE.

For compensation of the President of the United States, $50,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after "dollars," in line 406, the following:
"Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available until any rules of the Civil Service Commission (approved and promulgated by the President) now in force, which exclude from its examination applicants over forty-five years of age, shall be abolished."

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order against that amendment that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to strike out the last word. I find on pages 18 and 19 of this bill a provision applying to the salaries of the Civil Service Commission and all of its employés, in words almost identical with the words of the amendment just offered; the only words I have added being "approved and promulgated by the President."

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that it is the President who makes the rules of the Civil Service Commission. The law creating the Civil Service Commission provides:

That it shall be the duty of said commissioners to aid the President as he may request in preparing suitable rules in carrying this act into effect.

I find by the report of the Civil Service Commission, Miscellaneous Document 57 of the current session of Congress, the following:

On the same day the President amended clause 2 of rule 12, as follows:
"No one shall be examined for admission to the classified postal service if under sixteen or over thirty-five years of age excepting messengers, stampers, or other junior assistants, who must not be over fourteen years of age, or to the classified departmental service if under eighteen or over forty-five years of age."

This is the rule to which exception is taken. This rule has been approved and promulgated by the President himself. The point I proposed to make by the amendment I offered was simply this, that this committee shall not assume to coerce the President of the United States in regard to the rules he shall make. The Committee on Appropriations brings in here a proviso simply for buncombe, in order that they may whip the President of the United States in regard to his civil-service rules. I do not think it is becoming in the Committee on Appropriations of this House to attempt any such thing as that. And I do not think it is becoming in this House to entertain for one moment a proposition that shall attempt coercion of the Executive of this Republic in regard to the rules he shall make in this branch of the public service which is committed expressly by law to his custody.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: Why do you not wait till you get to that proviso, and then make the point of order?

Mr. McCOMAS. I rise to oppose the formal amendment. To save time, as the ruling indicated by the Chair will save three or four speeches on that clause, I appeal to the gentleman in charge of this bill to say now that he will strike out that proviso when it is reached. By giving that assurance he will save discussion. It may be struck out on a point of order when it is reached, and if it is understood that that shall be done we may save now four or five speeches that may be delivered in advance. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to respond to my suggestion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would not feel authorized, without consulting the committee, to consent to strike it out. The point of order will of course be made.

Mr. McCOMAS. It would save time to get your assurance now.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Did I understand that the Chair ruled out the amendment which I offered?

The CHAIRMAN. It was ruled out.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph, as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a stenographer; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; two clerks at $900 each; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $24,800: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available until any rules of the Civil Service Commission now in force which exclude from its examination applicants over forty-five years of age shall be abolished.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, Mr. CUTCHEON, and Mr. McCOMAS made the point of order before the reading was completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the question when the Clerk has concluded the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk completed the reading as above.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, let us have a ruling upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this same question was raised at the last session of Congress, and the point of order was sustained by the then chairman of the Committee of the Whole. The Chair therefore, following that decision, sustains the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. My inquiry is whether the chairman of this Committee of the Whole can inform us why it is that the Committee on Appropriations insist on violating the rules of this House?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LORE. I desire to take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained—ayes 106, noes 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, $2,000.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In line 441 I move to strike out "two" and insert "four." I think that no member of the committee or of the House will pretend that the $2,000 here provided is at all adequate to pay the expenses of executing the civil-service law. The commission have estimated for $4,000, and that is the least they can get along with. The appropriation was $4,000 last year, but this bill proposes to reduce it to $2,000. I therefore move to insert the least amount that will serve the purpose, $4,000. If I were unkind, I would say that this reduction was simply intended to cripple the commission and prevent them from discharging the duties which the law devolves upon them; but it is not the way to do it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the reduction was not made to cripple the commission. It was made to restrict junketing, going from one part of the country to another, and $2,000 is quite adequate for the legitimate purposes of the commission. The reduction, therefore, has no relation whatever to interfering with the law or crippling the commission.

Mr. STEELE. The amount last year was $4,000, and $3,000 for incidental expenses is left out of this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me suggest to my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] that under the interstate-commerce law nobody can travel over the railroads free, and that may somewhat increase the traveling expenses of the commission.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that they ever rode free; I judge that they never did; but there is no occasion for them to travel over the length and breadth of the land. In every city there is a regularly organized civil service commission in the postal service and in the customs service, and all the business between those local boards and the commission can be transacted by mail.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the object for increasing this appropriation to $5,000 is not for the purpose of encouraging junketing expeditions, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] would intimate. It is to enable the commission to carry their examinations among the people of the States and Territories instead of confining them to circumscribed limits. An examiner under this commission traveled 250,000 miles and conducted examinations for the unprecedentedly small sum of $4,000. This required him to hold examinations during the day and travel at night.

There is no harder-worked and more self-sacrificing officers in the employment of the Government than the officers connected with the civil service. They were allowed $4,000 for traveling expenses the present year, and need a like amount the next year. They have provided for over one hundred and twenty examinations in the States and Territories, and unless this allowance is made this work can not be effectively carried out. Say the commission in a recent communication to me:

The commissioners are unanimously of the opinion that the reduction of the appropriation to $2,000 would not only make it impossible adequately to carry out the series of examinations set forth in the schedule, but furthermore, by limiting the examinations to be held to those in which the services of expert examiners could be availed of, even make it impracticable to provide properly for the holding of "at least two examinations in each year" in every State and Territory in which applicants reside, which the statute expressly requires.

I trust, therefore, this House will give this important reform a fair opportunity to extend its usefulness among the people, and not require applicants for appointment to travel thousands of miles to stand examinations which in the end may result in disappointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the portion of the bill relating to the Department of State, covering pages 19 and 20, is exactly the language of the law of the present fiscal year except these words: "to enable the Secretary of State to purchase a mail-wagon for the use of the Department, $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary." I ask therefore that that part of the bill be passed over without reading.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the head of "Treasury Department," on pages 20, 21, 22, and down to line 539, on page 23, there is no change whatever in the present law except the increase of the salary of one clerk from $2,000 to $2,200, and a provision for two laborers instead of three, these changes having been made in pursuance of the recommendation of the Department. I ask that this portion of the bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraphs indicated by the gentleman from Indiana will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly content to assent to that, if I can move to amend by striking out in line 487 the word "two" and inserting "four;" so that it will read "clerk to the Secretary, $2,400."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve a point of order on that amendment. It is an increase, I believe, of $200 beyond the amount allowed by existing law.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that, according to my recollection, the law authorizes $2,400 as this salary. This is the one thing that the Secretary of the Treasury specially asked in his estimates, and as I understand specially asked of the committee. When the head of a great Department in a confidential manner asks on a question of this sort an increase of $200, I, for one, although I am on the minority side, will not refuse it. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. That salary is fixed by law at $2,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken. The salary is fixed in the Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 399, at $2,400.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to say positively what is the salary fixed by law; but I hope the increase will not be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the amendment to the committee.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to amend by inserting after the word "thousand," in line 492, the words "two hundred;" so that it will read "one clerk at $1,200."

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. This is the clerk in the office of the Actuary of the Treasury, who is, I believe, an honest, truthful man; and he says he can not get a good clerk, competent to perform the duties of that place, for $1,000. He asked me to propose this amendment to allow $200 more, and I have done it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I think this bill is likely to be famous as against all other bills of the same class since 1873 as containing the largest amount of salary increases.

The amendment of Mr. MORRISON was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill till the paragraph relating to "division of appointments" was reached.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only change made in the division of appointments is the reduction of one copyist at $840. I ask that this paragraph be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this clause will be passed over.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the next paragraph, relating to "division of public moneys," there is a change by transposition, there being three instead of four clerks of class 4, and three instead of two clerks of class 2, making a reduction of $200. I hope this paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment:

In line 558 strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to read "four clerks of class 4;" and in line 559 strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to read "two clerks of class 2."

In this amendment I propose to make the provision conform to the law for the current year, and to the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury. I know of no reason why there should be any arbitrary change.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a vote.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the next paragraph, relating to "division of loans and currency," the changes made were, I believe, satisfactory to that bureau. I will not be positive, but that is my recollection. The changes are as follows: In the number of clerks of class 1 there is a reduction from four to three; the clerks at $900 are reduced in number from fourteen to thirteen, and two copyists at $840 are added. I hope there will be no objection to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the paragraphs relating to "division of revenue marine" and "division of mercantile marine and internal revenue" I believe there is no change whatever. I ask that these paragraphs be passed over.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the next paragraph, relating to "division of stationery, printing and blanks," there is a reduction of one in the number of clerks of class 4, and an increase of one in the number of clerks of class 2. I hope there will be no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph referred to will be passed over.

There was no objection.

The Clerk next read the paragraph relating to "division of mail and files."

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change in that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of captured property, claims, and lands: For chief of division, $2,250; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk at $900; and one laborer; in all, $8,610.

Mr. HOLMAN. Here we have a reduction from $2,500 to $2,250 in the salary of the chief of division and a number of clerks.

Mr. STEELE. Two one-thousand-dollar clerks left out.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; two clerks of $900 each left out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The division of captured property, claims, and lands is discriminated against in this bill. Now, it is proposed to restore the salary of this chief of division to $2,500, as fixed in the bill of the present fiscal year.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; that was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Do you mean to restore that salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the present salaries are right.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call the gentleman's attention to the salary of the chief of division of captured property, claims, and lands. It is fixed in the present law, not the one we are now considering but the one for the present year, at $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Do not you propose to restore it in this bill in that regard?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman insists on it it must be done.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do insist on it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. He agrees to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend does not mean to restore the two nine-hundred-dollar clerks?

Mr. BLANCHARD. No; I do not insist on the restoration of anything but the salary of the chief of division of captured property, claims, and lands.

I understand that salary is restored.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of special agents: For assistant chief of division, $2,000; one clerk of class 3; three clerks of class 1; one clerk at $1,000; three clerks at $900 each; and one messenger; in all, $11,740.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change in that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Offices of disbursing clerks: For two disbursing clerks, at $2,500 each; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; and one clerk, $1,000; in all, $9,400.

Miscellaneous: For one clerk of class 2; one clerk, $1,000; two clerks at $900 each; in all, $4,200.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change there.

Mr. STEELE. One messenger or one laborer has been left out.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no reduction in the number of officers.

Mr. STEELE. One messenger is left out.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; only one is left out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Supervising Architect: In the construction branch of the Treasury: For Supervising Architect, $4,500; assistant and chief clerk, $2,500; photographer, $2,000; one principal clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 1; one clerk at $900; and one assistant messenger; in all, $15,420.

And the services of skilled draughtsmen, civil engineers, computers, accountants, assistants to the photographer, copyists, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order may be employed in the office of the Supervising Architect to carry into effect the various appropriations for public buildings, to be paid for from such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, shall not exceed $150,000; and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed and the amount paid to each.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change in that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

First Comptroller of the Treasury: For First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; four chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; five clerks of class 4; thirteen clerks of class 3; eleven clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; and ten clerks, at $900 each; two skilled laborers, at $840 each; one messenger; and three laborers; in all, $87,400.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change except that which the committee desires to submit in the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 653 strike out "ten" and insert "eleven;" in line 654 strike out "two" and insert "one;" in line 655 strike out "each," and in line 656, after the word "hundred," insert "and sixty;" so it will read:

First Comptroller of the Treasury: For First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; four chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; five clerks of class 4; thirteen clerks of class 3; eleven clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; and eleven clerks, at $900 each; one skilled laborer, at $840; one messenger; and three laborers; in all, $87,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second Comptroller of the Treasury: For Second Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; seven chiefs of division, at $2,100 each nine clerks of class 4; ten clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; ten clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; five clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and three laborers; in all, $89,920.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two or three changes in conformity to the estimates.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the additional force in the Second Comptroller's Office, rendered necessary by increase of work relating to pensions, namely: One clerk of class 4, $1,800.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is according to the estimates also.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the adjustment of the accounts of the Soldiers' Home, under section 4818 of the Revised Statutes, in the Office of the Second Comptroller: For five clerks, at $660 each, to be employed on Soldiers' Home roll, $3,300: Provided, That adjustments of said accounts shall be limited to those originating subsequent to March 3, 1851.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is in conformity to the present law.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner of Customs: For Commissioner of Customs, $3,600; deputy commissioner, $2,250; two chiefs of divisions, at $2,100 each; two clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; eleven clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $49,030.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only change made there is the following: The salary of the Commissioner of Customs is fixed at $3,600. The present salary is $4,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move it be restored to $4,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say in justification of this reduction that the Commissioner of Customs stands on the same footing as the Auditor.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to say under the Revised Statutes the salary of the Commissioner of Customs is fixed at $4,000. I move it be restored to $4,000.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to this fact. He says the Revised Statutes fixes it at $4,000. I call his attention to the fact that the Revised Statutes also fixed the salary of these different Auditors at $4,000, and yet for ten years they have only been receiving $3,600. I wish to say, further, the Auditors earn more money and ought to receive more money than this Commissioner.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, as I understood this agreement entered into here to-night was that this bill should be made to conform to the appropriation of last year with reference to these salaries. I also understood that the gentleman from Indiana was a party to that agreement. Under the present law the Commissioner of Customs receives $4,000 per annum, and this amendment is simply putting him back in this bill at which the present law fixes his salary, making it conform, according to the agreement, to that law. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment of Mr. SCOTT was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. It will be necessary to make the total footing of that paragraph conform to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk was directed during the day to make the footings correspond with the amendments adopted without the necessity of a formal motion to that effect. That course will be pursued hereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. As to the provision of this bill for the office of the First Auditor there is no change. As to the Second Auditor, there is no change with the exception that in line 703 provision is made for two charwomen at $180 each. That was the old salary for this class of employés; but last year we increased the pay of the charwomen of the Treasury Department from $180 to $240, eighty persons in number.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the provision in this clause of the bill be amended by striking out "$180" and inserting "$240."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope that will be done. I had prepared an amendment covering that point.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to call attention to one point in this connection. I understood that the Secretary of the Treasury had recommended an increase in the number of the charwomen in that Department; and I want to know whether any change has been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has not been before the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understood there was a communication here in reference to the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not aware of any such recommendation from the Secretary. I have seen a communication, I think, from some superintendent, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations without any recommendation.

The next paragraph, beginning with line 706, embodies no change.

Mr. STEELE. There are some changes in the preceding paragraph for the Second Auditor's office.

Mr. HOLMAN. Only such as conform to the estimates.

Mr. STEELE. In line 698 I see you have added two clerks, and in line 699 added one.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had intended to call attention to the fact that that was in conformity to the views of the Second Auditor.

Mr. MILLS. No objection; let the Clerk read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. STEELE. In line 701, you strike out "eight" and insert "four."

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the next paragraphs, down to the paragraph making provision for the Third Auditor, there are no changes, nor are there any changes in that portion of the bill on pages 30 and 31 beginning with line 720 and ending with line 751; nor is there any change in the next paragraph down to line 765. From that line, 765, down to the end of this paragraph there are a few changes. At the present time there are seven assorters of money orders. This bill provides for eight. There are also twenty-two male laborers, while this bill provides for twenty-three, which items together make a total increase in that bureau, growing out of the steadily increasing business there, of $1,390, which I hope will be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The next paragraph, lines 774 to 777, is also without change of law. In the office of the Treasurer, beginning with line 778, there is no change except some that the committee wish to submit. I therefore ask to add the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 800, strike out "six" where it occurs first and insert "ten."
In line 801, strike out "six" where it occurs and insert "nine." And in lieu of the sum proposed in lines 802 and 803, insert "$283,684.80."

Mr. HOLMAN. This makes a material increase in the appropriations for that service rendered necessary by the printing of the one and two dollar silver certificates, as there is largely increased work to be done in the bureau for which this increase in these employés is asked.

Mr. STEELE. There has been an increase of five, I think, in line 794, of clerks, at $900 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. There have been some slight increases, but they have only conformed to the estimates.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change in the next paragraph, beginning with line 804, nor is there any in the paragraph succeeding, in the office of the Register of the Treasury, nor in that of the Comptoller of the Currency, down to and including line 837.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of special examinations of national banks and bank-plates, of keeping macerator in Treasury building in repairs, and for other incidental expenses of attending the work of said macerator, $2,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is new legislation.

There is no change in the next paragraph, beginning with line 842.

In the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, beginning with line 849, there is an increase of one chemist, $2,500, and one microscopist, $2,500, very large salaries, I think. There are also twenty-four clerks of class three instead of twenty-five, and thirteen clerks at one thousand each, instead of four, making a net increase of $2,400. I trust it will be satisfactory.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the salary of the deputy commissioner of internal revenue is fixed by section 222 of the Revised Statutes at $3,500. This provision fixes the salary at $3,200.

Mr TOWNSHEND. We have already passed over the salaries of the auditors, which are fixed at $4,000, and yet this bill only provides for $3,600 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last section of the present law fixes the salaries as specified in this bill, so I hope my colleague will not insist upon the change.

Mr. MATSON. I only insist upon the statute being carried out as in the case of the Commissioner of Customs.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment proposed.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the next paragraph there is no change.

Mr. MATSON. I insist that my motion is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as offering an amendment.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to make a motion to increase this salary of the deputy commissioner to what the statute fixes it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be increased.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if there is any change in the salary of this officer from that of last year?

Mr. HOLMAN. We made the same appropriation for that office in the present bill as in the former.

Mr. EDEN. Was it not understood that the bill as we passed through it was to be made to conform with the present law? That was my understanding.

Mr. MATSON. I did not understand the agreement was so binding that the statute itself was to be violated.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCMILLIN). The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 855, strike out "five" and insert "six;" so that it will read:
"Six heads of division, at $2,250."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make that amendment upon the request and, as I understand it, the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the operation of the oleomargarine law it has become necessary to create a new division in the Internal Revenue Bureau. It is necessary to have a chief in order to take charge of that division. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken,

The CHAIRMAN stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand a division. Unless this is done the oleomargarine law will be inoperative.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 71.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph. One year ago I had occasion to call attention to the fact that the statute provides there shall be in the Internal Revenue Office seven heads of division at $2,500. The Committee on Appropriations in the last act provided that two heads of division shall be paid the sum specified in the statute, and that the remaining five should be paid $2,250 each. I observe they have repeated that in the present bill. Inasmuch as we have stricken out the words "in full compensation," if this bill goes through in its present shape the United States Government will have five lawsuits to meet, if these heads of division do as I believe they will. I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 853 strike out "two" and insert "seven."
In lines 855 and 856 strike out "five heads of division, at $2,250 each;" so that it will read:
"Seven heads of division, at $2,500 each."

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that we have already voted on those lines.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be voted down.

The question being taken on Mr. GALLINGER'S amendment, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 68.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the paragraphs relating to the Light-House Board and the office of the Life-Saving Service, down to line 900, there is no change.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the lines indicated will be passed over and considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Bureau of Navigation: For Commissioner of Navigation, $3,600; two clerks of class 4; additional to clerk acting as Commissioner, $200; one clerk of class 3; three clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; ten clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $28,180.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only change made here is by the insertion of these words:

Additional to clerk acting as Commissioner, $200.

And reducing the number of clerks of class 2 from four to three.

I trust there will be no objection to these changes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Why is that salary increased?

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order against the words in line 903.

Additional to clerk acting as Commissioner, $200.

I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by striking out, in line 904, the word "three," and inserting "four;" so that it will read "four clerks of class 2." This will make the law the same as for the current year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change made in the paragraph from line 909 to line 916, relating to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to have inserted at the end of this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 916 add the following:

"And the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, including piece-workers, shall be allowed a leave of absence with pay not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, at such time as the chief of the bureau may designate."

Mr. BLAND. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This is the only Department of the Government where the employés are not entitled to a leave of absence; and any one who has visited that Department realizes that they are the hardest worked and the poorest paid of all the employés of the Government.

This amendment should be adopted as a simple matter of humanity, so as to accord some little consideration to these poorest paid and hardest worked of all the Government employés. In view of the fact that we are dispensing the public moneys with a liberal hand I trust the point of order will not be made where a matter of humanity like this is concerned.

The salaries of these employés are so small that they can not take their time away from their work for needed rest. I hope no gentleman will insist on the point of order on this amendment. The gentleman in charge of the bill has no objection to it.

Mr. BLAND. I will withdraw the point of order if we can now have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk began to read the paragraph relating to the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change in that part of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. Is not my colleague mistaken? Last year there was a provision for the collection of statistics relative to commerce, $5,500, but in this I find no such item.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, it was not estimated for. The head of the bureau did not want it.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying one thing. It is true that an estimate was not made for an appropriation for a report on internal commerce; for what I know not. I suspect, however, that it was because the work required a degree of skill and capacity which the bureau does not now possess. That report is one of the most valuable that has ever been made, but as no estimate was sent in for it, of course I did not feel warranted in offering an amendment throwing work upon the bureau which possibly it might not be competent to do. I withdrew the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the provisions in regard to the secret service division are the same as the present law, except that there are two clerks of class 2 reduced to one, and one attendant has his salary increased from $680 to $720.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection to that paragraph it will be considered as read and agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to turn back for a moment to page 29 of the bill to make an amendment.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "Let us finish the bill!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANDALL. There is.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph headed "office construction of standard weights and measures."

Mr. HOLMAN. In that paragraph there is no change from the law of the present year.

Mr. STEELE. I think my colleague has omitted to look at line 944.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; in that line there is a slight change. The appropriation for purchase of materials and apparatus and incidental expenses is reduced from $500 to $400, an unimportant reduction.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask unanimous consent to return to line 687, to make an amendment that will not take more than a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that that request has been submitted to the House and objected to.

Mr. CRAIN. I think not, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to object.

Mr. RANDALL. I did.

Mr. CRAIN. Then I shall have to call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. All right.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph headed, "Office of the Director of the Mint."

Mr. HOLMAN. The only change made in the appropriations for the office of the Director of the Mint is this: The examiner's salary is changed from $2,300 to $2,400, and the same increase is made in the salary of the computer.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let those salaries be made to conform to the law as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would make the salaries $2,300 and $2,200, respectively.

A MEMBER. What is the proposition?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is to strike out in line 953 "$2,400" and insert "$2,300."

Mr. CANNON. I object to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order has been made.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care if it has. I want to say a word upon that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] briefly.

Mr. CANNON. And I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will hear me.

Mr. WARNER. I simply asked that the arrangement that was made here should be carried out and these several appropriations made to conform to the law. I do not know what the law is.

Mr. CANNON. I am not aware of any law fixing these salaries, but I want to say to the gentleman that the Director of the Mint came in person and asked for these slight increases, saying that these were men he could not do without; that he feared he should be unable to keep them, and that without their assistance he would be unwilling to hold the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But if the Chair will examine I think he will find that there is no statute fixing these salaries.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have no object, Mr. Chairman, except to carry out the arrangement made here that these appropriations should be made to conform to the existing law, and if there is no law restricting these salaries, then I make no point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please state the second amendment. The Clerk did not get it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The second amendment is the omission of $2,400 in line 54 and the insertion of $2,200. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph be passed over until we ascertain what the law is.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have now at hand the law, and find that the salaries there provided are, for examiner, $2,200; computer, $2,200. Both these salaries are $2,200.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana adhere to his proposition to pass this paragraph over informally?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I think the salaries ought to be fixed as the law provides.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels constrained, upon the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, to sustain the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] and was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to insist on the point of order. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us carry out the arrangement and make these provisions conform to the law.

Mr. CANNON. I deny that there is any such law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana read the law now in force; and as the gentleman from Illinois has not produced anything to the contrary, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAIN. I call for the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. STEELE. We have not passed all the paragraphs in regard to the Director of the Mint. In lines 963 to 965 there is new legislation. I would like to know whether there is any necessity for it. I refer to this provision:

For freight on bullion and coin, by registered mail or otherwise, between mints and assay offices, $7,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. This provision was inserted in the first place upon the recommendation of the Director of the Mint, who desired such authority to be given, although there was some doubt whether the plan would be practicable. The committee thought it safe to leave this provision in. Of course, if this method of transporting bullion and coin should be found practicable there would be a great reduction of expense.

Mr. STEELE. I notice that in line 969 this bill appropriates $750. In the law for the current year the appropriation is $1,000. But I do not care anything about that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount is small at any rate. I ask the Clerk to read on.

The Clerk read the paragraph in regard to office of Supervising Surgeon-General, Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change there.

The Clerk read the paragraph in regard to office Supervising Inspector-General, Steamboat-Inspection Service.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change there.

The Clerk read the following:

For contingent expenses of the Treasury Department, namely: For stationery for the Treasury Department and its several bureaus, $25,000.

Mr. STEELE. I see the appropriation here is $25,000. Last year it was $30,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Twenty-five thousand dollars is supposed by the committee to be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. That is as much as was spent last year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage required to prepay matter addressed to Postal Union countries, $1,500.

Mr. STEELE. The appropriation in the corresponding item last year was $2,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. This reduction of $500 is made because it will not be necessary to expend so much.

Mr. STEELE. Then the $500 has not been struck off to be added in the Senate?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman must know that that is not the intention.

The Clerk read as follows:

For newspapers, law-books, city directories, and other books of reference; purchase of material for binding important records (and of the amount appropriated not more than $400 may be used in the purchase of technical publications, foreign and domestic), $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the present law.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation of accounts and records, including the necessary traveling expenses, and for other traveling expenses, $1,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is an increase there of $500. The changes made in the next paragraph are those resulting from the construction of the west wing of the building now in progress of erection. We have inserted the following provision:

And on or before February 29, 1888, the above-named offices shall be removed to rooms to be assigned to them by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Winder Building, corner of Seventeenth and F streets.

This provision has been inserted upon the understanding that this building would be in part vacated by removals into the west wing of the State, War, and Navy Department.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. CRAIN. I make the point of order that the paragraph is not subject to amendment until it is read. If I can have unanimous consent to introduce the amendment which I hold in my hand, I do not care whether it be voted down or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order that the paragraph can not be amended until it is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings for the Bureau of Statistics, the Marine-Hospital Service, and a portion of the Second Auditor's Office, for a period not longer than until February 29, 1888, $5,750; and on or before February 29, 1888, the above-named offices shall be removed to rooms to be assigned to them by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Winder Building, corner of Seventeenth and F streets.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to offer an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 1025, strike out all down to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. HEARD. I do this because I am assured by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics that suitable quarters can not be provided in Winder's Building for the proper conduct of the affairs of that bureau. Unless the committee are able to present reasons to the Committee of the Whole such change should be ordered and can be made without impairment of that branch of the service, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

I say further, as I understand it, the Secretary of the Treasury to-day has it in his power to make the removal if in his judgment it should be made. I hope the amendment will be adopted and the phraseology of the present bill will not be observed.

Mr. STEELE. You propose to compel him to make it whether he thinks it proper or not.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say in reference to this matter I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri will not prevail, and for these reasons: On the 1st day of January, or about that time, the west room in the annex to the War, State, and Navy Building will be completed and then there will be sufficient room for all the divisions of the War Department. This will vacate the rooms now occupied by the Chief of Ordnance in the Winder Building owned by the Government.

If anybody has been in the Ordnance Department he will recognize the southern point of this building is superior to that now occupied by the Bureau of Statistics. Refusal to remove the Bureau of Statistics to Winder's building, which the Government owns, is nothing more nor less than action in behalf of somebody who owns the building which is now rented to the Bureau of Statistics, and is below Albaugh's Theater. It is mere assurance on the part of this man, a mere bureau officer, less than a bureau officer, to say that he can not go into Winder's building because there is not room enough. Hundreds of clerks working on Army rolls worked there, and they require the best sight of any employés of the Government.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics states this building is not adapted to the work of that bureau. The work of his whole force is a matter of computation of delicate figures, and Winder's building does not give the proper facilities required. It was his duty to submit this matter to Congress, and I think his modest presentation deserves the consideration of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order on the words proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late, discussion having been had.

The question recurred on Mr. HEARD'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes not counted.

Mr. HEARD. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, after line 1029, to insert the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of stables for Treasury Department from March 1 to June 30, 1888, $200.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is rendered necessary by the changes which have been made.

Mr. BRADY. I demand a division.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. The several paragraphs that follow on page 43 down to and including line 1070 on page 44 present no change.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection they will be considered as having been read and adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the next paragraph, relating to the collection of the internal revenue, the following words have been added to the law of last year:

Including expenses incident to enforcing the provisions of the act of August 2, 1886, entitled "An act defining butter, &c.," $1,850,000.

Mr. STEELE. There is a proviso in the law of last year not incorporated in this.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I submit the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "eight hundred and fifty," in line 1076, and insert "nine hundred;" so that it will read, $1,900,000.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, The estimate submitted by the Treasury Department is $1,900,000 for this purpose as the amount necessary to properly carry out the provisions of the oleomargarine act. The committee cut it down to $1,850,000, being $50,000 less than the amount originally recommended by the Treasury Department, for the purpose of carrying out the law.

As I gave notice in committee that I would offer this amendment in the House, I now submit it, hoping it will be adopted; and I do not believe—in view of the fact that that law is upon the statute-books as the law of the land—I do not believe in any committee of this House going to work and by indirection, as it seems to me, destroying the efficiency of that law.

I therefore urge upon the attention of the committee the purpose for which I offer the amendment, which is to make effective and forcible the law adopted upon this subject and now upon our statute-books; and in voting upon the amendment I desire that the House shall know the object I have in view and the purpose it seeks to accomplish.

I repeat the estimates submitted by the Department are in accordance with the amendment I now present.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word. The committee recommend an increase in the appropriation for that service on the first item of $35,000 and on the last item of $20,000, making $55,000 in all. The committee feel reasonably safe in recommending that as a proper amount, and do not think there is any danger of a deficiency.

I hope my friend will not insist upon his amendment, or, if insisted upon, that it will not be adopted by the committee.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to be heard for a moment only upon this question. It has been well understood throughout the country that during the past year the internal-revenue department has been hampered by the lack of funds to properly carry out the objects of this oleomargarine act. One of the great objects was to acquire statistics and obtain information upon the subject; and we know that the full amount of this estimate will be necessary to carry out the purposes of the law in that regard.

It is well known also that the sum of about one millions dollars will be received under the oleomargarine law from the direct tax; and the amount proposed by the amendment of the gentleman here is no more than is actually necessary to be provided. I trust therefore that there will be no misguided or misjudged application of the plea of economy to that bill. Let us have the full amount required to execute its provisions, and then make those persons charged with the execution of the law responsible for their work.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I merely want to remark that last year when I made a similar proposition to increase the appropriation for this purpose it was said then that there was no danger of a deficiency, and that an ample amount of money was given. The result has been that the Treasury Department has called upon Congress to fill the deficiency I then prophesied; and I believe if this increase is not given there will be a further deficiency. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CUTCHEON was recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to correct a statement I made a moment since.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask why we should higgle over this amount? The oleomargarine gives us the revenue; revenue that we do not want, for we have too much revenue already; it is piling up in the Treasury. And since this oleomargarine gives the revenue, why, then, shall we not expend it for the proper execution of the law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I find on examination that the statement I made with reference to the change of law in this paragraph was wrong in one particular. For the salaries and expenses of collectors, &c., there is an increase of $35,000, as I have said; but the appropriation for this year for salaries and expenses was placed at $1,970,000. As proposed by this bill it is $1,850,000. But the amount given in the bill, in the opinion of the committee, is all that is necessary, and I do not think there is any need for this increase.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, and there were—ayes 59, noes 60.

Mr. BRADY. No quorum.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I demand tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. You can take a vote upon it in the House.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is understood that we may have a vote in the House on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. That is for the House to determine.

Mr. STEELE. I want to call attention to the fact that the proviso has been left out of this section.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is that?

Mr. STEELE. I refer to the proviso to this paragraph of the bill, which provided that the number of deputy collectors, store-keepers, gaugers, clerks, &c., employed in this department should not be increased, nor shall the officers' salaries be increased beyond the last fiscal year. What is the reason for leaving out that proviso?

Mr. HOLMAN. Because it is impossible to determine what number of special agents will be required under the provisions of the oleomargarine act.

Under the head of independent treasury, in the office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore, there is only one change made.

Mr. STEELE. I did not hear what the gentleman said about the omission of the proviso.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was deemed unnecessary on account of the new duties thrown upon the office; nothing else.

The only change made in the paragraph appropriating for the office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore is that the bill strikes out $500 from the salary as established by the law of the current year. I trust there will be no objection to it.

Mr. FINDLAY. There are serious objections to it.

Mr. BRADY. I call for the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore: For assistant treasurer, $4,000; cashier, $2,500; three clerks, at $1,800 each; two clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one clerk, at $1,000; one messenger, $840; three vault watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $21,100.

Mr. FINDLAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1083 strike out "$4,000" and insert "$5,000," so that it will read: For assistant treasurer, $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law of the present year is $4,500.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is true, and I believe that since 1879 each appropriation bill has provided for $4,500 being the salary of this office. But the law creating the office which was passed in 1866, which is upon the statute-book and is incorporated in section 3596 of the Revised Statutes provides the salary shall be $5,000. That is the existing law, and there has been no effort made on the part of Congress to change it, and no change has been made in it; but Congress has simply failed to appropriate the amount of salary as fixed by the original law, and the only law there is on the subject, unless you may call the current appropriation bills the law.

I draw a very great distinction between a bill making appropriations year by year and the law creating the office and fixing the salary attached to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that we may compromise on $4,500.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the amount $4,500.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think we should agree to the compromise suggested, and make the salary correspond with the law for the current year, $4,500.

Mr. FINDLAY. Very well; I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amount will be changed to $4,500.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation for the office of the assistant treasurer at Boston remains as it was. At Chicago, which is the fourth subtreasury in rank after Philadelphia, Boston, and New York, the salary of the assistant treasurer is increased to $5,000. I hope that the paragraphs in relation both to Boston and Chicago will be passed over without reading.

Mr. CANNON. I thought there was an agreement that all these salaries should remain as in the law for the current year.

Mr. HENLEY. There was no agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over without reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. As to Boston, there is no change in the law. I ask that that paragraph be accepted.

Mr. BRADY. I call for the reading of the paragraph.

The paragraph relating to the office of the assistant treasurer at Boston was read and no amendment to it was offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the paragraph in relation to the office of assistant treasurer at Chicago will be passed over without reading.

Mr. BRADY. I call for the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago: For assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $1,800; book-keper and receiving teller, at $1,500 each; two coin, coupon, and currency clerks, at $1,500 each; one assistant book-keeper and three clerks, at $1,200 each; one messenger, $840; one janitor, at $600; and three watchmen, $720 each; in all, $23,700.

Mr. STEELE. I see that the salary of the assistant treasurer at Chicago is raised above the amount appropriated in the bill for the current year.

Mr. DUNHAM. And it ought to be.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$4,500," the amount in the current law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The subtreasury at Chicago has a much larger income than that at Boston. Why should not the salary of the assistant treasurer be the same in Chicago as in Boston?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I understand the law requires a salary for the assistant treasurer at Chicago of $5,000; certainly the importance of the city is such as to warrant a salary of that amount.

Mr. STEELE. Last year it was fixed at $4,500.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not care what it was fixed at last year. The precedents established by the Appropriations Committee are not sufficient precedents to bind the action of this House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My friend from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], I think, is mistaken in saying that the salary of the assistant treasurer at Chicago is $4,500; the permanent law makes his salary $5,000.

Mr. STEELE. I did not say what the permanent law made it. I stated what the salary was in the appropriation act for the current year.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say one word as to this. It is true that a statute more than ten years old fixes the amount of the salary at Chicago at $5,000. So it is at Baltimore and at various other places. But the salary at Baltimore has just been fixed at $4,500. I think $5,000 is perhaps little enough for the man at Chicago, perhaps little enough for the men at all these places. But I have stood here for ten years and seen the Appropriations Committee in a Democratic House make a raid on the salary of the subtreasurer at Chicago, and hold it at $4,500 during all that time. And we Republicans furnished as good an assistant treasurer as there was anywhere. When he went out there was a great scramble among the faithful for the office at $4,500. Now, I am willing with this explanation that you should pour $500 more upon this man than his predecessor received when there was as much business done as now, but I want you to take the responsibility.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. We have not had a Democratic House for ten years continuously.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make one statement. If we put this salary at $4,500, that would be in substantial harmony with the understanding we had a little while ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 6.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. We will give you a vote on this in the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. No; let us vote now.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 119, noes 18.

Mr. BRADY and Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair request members to vote.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I think it is evident that there is no quorum in the House, and if the gentlemen who are managing this bill cannot come to any terms, we may as well adjourn and go home.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no; let us go on.

Mr. BLAND moved a call of the House, but withdrew the motion.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The demand for a further count is withdrawn.

Mr. BRADY. The vote discloses that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DUNHAM. I have not withdrawn the point, Mr. Chairman. If anybody states that I have, it is a mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will retain their places, and the Chair requests members to vote.

The count was resumed; and the tellers reported—ayes 141, noes 22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to offer an amendment which——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] for the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. STEELE. Can he take me off the floor to make that motion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to make that motion at this time.

The question was taken on the motion that the committee rise, and it was rejected.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by striking out in line 1120 of the bill "$23,700" and inserting "$23,200."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a mere clerical change, and it will be made.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph headed "office of the assistant treasurer, Cincinnati."

Mr. HOLMAN. The only change there is that the salary is reduced to $4,000. In connection with that item let me say that the salaries of the assistant treasurers at the great offices, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Chicago are $5,000, while all the others are put in this bill at $4,000, and Cincinnati is among the smaller offices.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What was the amount of that salary last year?

Mr. HOLMAN. Four thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then this should be the same. I make that motion.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If this is to be restored to $4,500, all right.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to—ayes 147, noes 32.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know what the previous vote was.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote, as reported by the tellers, was 141 to 22.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What was the total?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can compute that for himself. [Cries of "Regular Order!"]

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question for information. What were the figures given to the Chair by the Clerk?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced them as given to the Chair.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for tellers on the pending proposition.

The question was taken on ordering tellers, and they were refused—only 43 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Count the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no other side.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at New Orleans: For Assistant Treasurer, $4,000; cashier, $2,250; receiving-teller, $2,000; bookkeeper, $1,500; two clerks at $1,000 each; porter, $500; one day-watchman, at $720; one night-watchman, at $720; in all, $13,690.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed by the committee to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 1136, before the word "two," insert "one clerk at $1,200."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a word upon that amendment. The appropriation now is exactly that of the present law and the same that it has been for several years past, but the committee have instructed me to recommend to the House to increase the clerical force there by one clerk of class 1, for the reason that that subtreasury now is somewhat dependent upon the mint for its clerical service, and it is not desirable that that should be so.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer, as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana and as a substitute for the paragraph just read, that which I send up to the desk.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

For assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,500; receiving-teller, $2,000; paying teller, $2,000; book-keeper, $1,800; assistant book-keeper, $1,200; coin and redemption clerk, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each, $2,000; porter, $720; night watchman, $720; day watchman, $720; in all, $19,360.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this can be received as a substitute for the whole paragraph, but the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which is an amendment to the text, will take precedence.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is an increase of $1,200 for that office over the present year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the Committee of the Whole to hear me for a few moments upon this proposition. The subtreasurer at New Orleans is accorded by law a salary of $4,500. The subtreasurer at Cincinnati has just been voted by the committee a salary of $4,500, notwithstanding the fact that the business of the subtreasury at Cincinnati is $24,000,000 a year less than at New Orleans. If the subtreasurers at Cincinnati, at Baltimore, and at Saint Louis are entitled to a salary of $4,500, how can this Committee of the Whole with any degree of consistency refuse to give the subtreasurer at New Orleans $4,500, when the business at New Orleans is millions of dollars ahead of each of the offices I have named?

The gentleman from Indiana is entirely in error when he says that the subtreasurer at New Orleans has anything to do with the obtaining of clerical assistance from the mint in that city.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, the committee was so informed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then the committee was erroneously informed. I speak from personal knowledge. The subtreasury at New Orleans is in an entirely different place from the mint; and there is no connection between the two except the money coined at the mint is deposited in the subtreasury, thereby increasing the business of the latter office.

Now, it is a fact, that notwithstanding New Orleans does millions of dollars more business annually than Baltimore, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati, the Committee on Appropriations has given to New Orleans only nine salaries, including that of the subtreasurer, while at Boston they have given fifteen, at Cincinnati ten, and at Saint Louis twelve. The amendment which I have sent up merely gives to New Orleans twelve employés.

This very bill which I hold in my hand allows to the subtreasurer at Baltimore $21,100 for clerical hire, whereas it only allows to New Orleans for the same purpose, $13,690. The substitute which I have sent to the desk allows to the subtreasurer at New Orleans $19,000 for clerical hire, including the salary of the subtreasurer, and, allows him twelve clerks. If Baltimore, with $10,000,000 a year less business than New Orleans, can have fifteen clerks, why can not New Orleans have twelve? And if Baltimore, with $10,000,000 less business, can have $21,000 for clerical hire, why can not New Orleans have $19,000?

Mr. FINDLAY. Twenty-one thousand dollars at Baltimore includes the salaries.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Exactly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana a question—whether Democrats can not be found in New Orleans who will run the subtreasury with the same salaries and with the same clerical force with which the Republicans ran it?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, speaking in the gentleman's time, my own having expired, I am glad to answer his question. I will state to the committee that the Treasurer of the United States himself, Mr. Jordan, called upon me to-day and stated to me that the amount allowed to the subtreasurer at New Orleans for clerical hire is entirely inadequate; and he furnished me with the letter, which I send to the Clerk to be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not occupy my time, unless he answers the question which has been put to him.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I was speaking in the time of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HOLMAN. It was my time the gentleman was occupying, but I was willing he should answer that question. For ten years the Republicans carried on that office without a murmur at $4,000. Among the very first things we did when we obtained control of the House in the Forty-fourth Congress was to reduce that salary to $4,000, and it has never since been above that.

Mr. CANNON. And you can find plenty of Republicans who would be very glad to carry on the office now. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as we increase the clerical force there to the amount of $1,200, I trust there will be no further increase in that branch of the service. We are assured that the appropriation is ample.

Mr. BLANCHARD. By whom is the gentleman "assured" of that fact, when I stand here telling him that the Treasurer of the United States himself told me to-day that the salaries were altogether inadequate?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is not $4,000 the amount appropriated in the bill of last year?

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been the appropriation for ten years.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then it is strictly in accordance with the agreement that it should remain at $4,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. And there have been no complaints, so far as I know.

Mr. HENLEY. The question is, What do the Revised Statutes provide?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I happen to have some knowledge in regard to the administration of this office at New Orleans, and I can state most conscientiously that the force proposed in the bill is entirely inadequate to conduct the business of that office properly. The bond given by the subtreasurer at New Orleans is larger than that given by the corresponding officer in any other city except New York and Cincinnati, where the circumstances are peculiar.

Now, to my certain knowledge, it has been found necessary at New Orleans in the counting of large sums of Government money to ask assistance from employés of the custom-house. It seems to me unreasonable that while the subtreasurer is required to give so large a bond, we should give him so scanty a force that he is compelled to go outside of his office and seek assistance. I know positively that in the counting of the silver in the vaults of the subtreasury at New Orleans last year the subtreasurer was compelled to employ the porter and watchman of the collector of the customs to aid him, though these custom-house employés were practically irresponsible. It is utterly impossible for the subtreasurer at New Orleans to discharge his duties in an efficient manner and with safety to the interests of the Government unless he is allowed adequate assistance.

With $64,000,000 we have only allowed us nine employés, while other cities which have from ten to twenty and thirty millions less are allowed many more.

The collection of the city of New Orleans amounts to 20 cents on the amount of money business transacted there, whereas you can not find any other city where it amounts to less than 30 or 40.

It is unfair to ask the administration of such a fund in a city of daily increasing importance without giving them adequate supply of labor. I am aware in my business relations there the work given that department to do has increased in the last three or four years. We are compelled to rely upon the assistant treasurer there for our supplies of notes and silver certificates and other means of exchange with the country districts. I doubt whether outside of the city of New York there is the assistant treasurer's office to-day so important as the city of New Orleans, which has so much business thrown upon it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We might as well throw up the sponge first as at last, if we are to be talked to death. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman from Indiana will not be so inconsistent as to consent that Baltimore, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati shall have $4,500 as the salary of the assistant subtreasurer and leave that at New Orleans at $4,000, when his own report shows that New Orleans does millions of dollars more business than any of the cities indicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not in transactions.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, in transactions; and the gentleman's report shows it.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not in transactions. The deposits are large, but the transactions are not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will inform the gentleman from Indiana from his own report. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I will read his statement showing just what the facts are:

Statement showing the transactions—

Note that, Mr. Chairman; it is transactions and not deposits—of the subtreasurer of the United States at Baltimore, transactions $53,652,000; Saint Louis, $57,944,000; Cincinnati, $40,823,000; New Orleans, $64,495,000.

[Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

I ask the Clerk to read——

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. What is the salary of this officer now?

Mr. BLANCHARD. At the last session of this Congress, while all the other subtreasurers in the United States were allowed $4,500, a discrimination was made against New Orleans, and that city was only allowed $4,000.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. How much do you want?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I want $4,500.

Several MEMBERS. That settles it. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the formal amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wish to say the gentleman misapprehends the report. It is one I am familiar with. He misapprehended it. The gentleman said number of transactions. This report simply indicates under the head of transactions the amounts of deposits. There being a mint at New Orleans and it being a great silver center, deposits are enormous. They are spoken of as transactions. In the number of transactions there is no comparison between New Orleans and Chicago, or New Orleans and Baltimore, or New Orleans and Saint Louis.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be voted down. [Cries of "Order!"]

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I now ask for a vote on my substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the regular order. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,500; receiving teller, $2,000; paying teller, $2,000; book-keeper, $1,800; assistant book-keeper, $1,200; coin and redemption clerk, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each, $2,000; porter, $720; night watchman, $720; day watchman, $720; in all, $19,360.

Mr. BLANCHARD demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 74.

Mr. BRADY. No quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana I will cheerfully yield to a vote in the House.

Mr. BRADY. I insist on the point there is no quorum.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw his point of no quorum.

Mr. BRADY. I do.

So the substitute was disagreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$4,500."

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the law on this?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Four thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let us stand by the law.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to inquire if the point of no quorum has been withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no announcement by the Chair of that fact. I desire to renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. It was withdrawn, and the Chair announced it. No objection having been made, it is now too late.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the amendment to be voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, which the Clerk will now report.

The amendment of Mr. BLANCHARD was again read.

Mr. DUNHAM. I understand it proposes to give New Orleans what the law requires, and which has been refused to Chicago. Now, I would like to know if this is the case; and if so, why this discrimination?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only state what the proposition now pending is, and upon which the vote is to be taken.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 96, noes 31.

Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. BRADY, and Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope my friend from Virginia will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BRADY. So far as I am concerned I will withdraw it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I insist, and will not withdraw it.

Mr. DUNHAM. And if it be necessary there will be two to insist upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentlemen will allow a vote to be taken in the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. You would not let the law of the United States apply to Chicago, but you are willing that it shall apply to New Orleans. Now, if you succeed in doing that it must be done by a quorum of this House.

Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing, and until the tellers make their report the Chair can not entertain that motion.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I think it is evident that there is no quorum present. There seems to be no accretions to the vote. It is now about 1 o'clock in the morning, and I think about time for the committee to rise.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to ask unanimous consent, with a view to compromising matters, that the bill be reported back to the House, the residue of it amended to correspond exactly with the act of the present year.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. PETTIBONE. It could not be done without unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, there seem to be no voters; I ask that the tellers report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there have been five persons passed between the tellers and counted since the gentleman from Kansas rose and addressed the Chair.

Mr. WHEELER. How many does it take to make a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred and sixty-three members.

Mr. WHEELER. There are not three hundred and twenty-five members of this House. I claim that it takes only one-half of the actual membership of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it takes one hundred and sixty-three.

Mr. WHEELER. In the Forty-seventh Congress it was held that one hundred and forty-six members made a quorum after the House had lost two members. Now there are only three hundred and twenty-one members of the present House.

The CHAIRMAN. The membership of the present House has been increased; and the Chair thinks, as has been held before, that it takes a majority of the membership of the House to constitute a quorum.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 113, noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move that the committee do now rise. It is past one o'clock.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 106.

So the committee refused to rise.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. With reference to the office of the assistant treasurer at New York, I will state that it is unchanged; but a proposition has been raised by Mr. Candler, the present subtreasurer, to make a readjustment of the employés of the office. It is a long provision, as gentlemen will see, and I do not wish to trouble the House with reading it. I ask therefore that the proposition be passed over, as it is in the current law.

Mr. BRADY. I object, and demand the reading.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph beginning with line 1141.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the hour is so late, and gentlemen have been here confined to their current duties for a long time; and it seems to me the Committee on Appropriations sufficiently understand the views of this Committee of the Whole to know what they expect in this bill. I therefore make this suggestion, that the committee rise and a recess be taken until 9 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Say 10 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to that. There must be some time taken as a matter of course in the preliminary proceedings of the House in the morning. A vote on the measure, which we will submit and which we believe will be satisfactory in view of the present temper of the House, can scarcely be put off safely to a later hour. I hope it will be agreed that this recess may be taken to that hour.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is too early.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill can not be considered with any safety unless the House meets at an early hour.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Then let us sit an hour later to-night.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the committee rise with a view to taking a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. I object to the request.

A MEMBER. Say 9.30.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess until 9.30, and the House then proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Is it his purpose on the assembling of the House in the morning to take up this bill at once?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the purpose to take up this bill immediately.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Why not let the House meet at an earlier hour with the agreement that this bill shall be taken up at a later hour, say 10 o'clock?

Mr. HOLMAN. It can not be enrolled and reach the Senate unless it be acted upon promptly in the morning.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. So we are confronted with losing the bill unless we go on with it to-night or meet at half past 9 to-morrow morning?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I suggest that to-morrow morning the gentleman from Indiana may be able to present the bill in a shape in which it will be acceptable to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what I propose to do.

Several MEMBERS. Let the Chair state the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition as he understands it: That the committee now rise with the understanding that the House shall thereafter take a recess. That, of course, is for the House to determine. The Chair will entertain a motion that the committee rise with a view of testing the sense of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not understand there is any objection to the proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does the gentleman include in his proposition that when the House meets at half past 9 o'clock in the morning no other business in the form of conference reports or anything else shall be entertained before the House goes into Committee of the Whole to consider this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall ask the House to take up this bill as soon as it meets.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Believing that what I have suggested presents the only solution, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following conferees on the part of the House:

On the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 10912), Mr. HATCH, Mr. GREEN, and Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota.

On the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelly, Mr. SWOPE, Mr. NEECE, and Mr. CONGER.

On the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, Mr. HEMPHILL, Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, and Mr. ROWELL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to present a privileged report.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the hope that some understanding may be reached with regard to the legislative bill, I ask unanimous consent for a recess now until nine and a half o'clock.

Many MEMBERS. Say 10 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will say 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that a recess be now taken until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., Tuesday, March 1) the House took a recess until 10 o'clock a. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m. Tuesday, March 1.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 17th instant from the Secretary of the Interior submitting with accompanying papers two agreements made with the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota under the provisions of the act of May 15, 1886 (24 Stat., 44).

The papers are presented for the consideration and action of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1887.

SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and draft, and recommending the passage of a bill to provide for the sale of lands allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob Band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

LAND GRANTS IN KANSAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate and the request of that body for a committee of conference.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be non-concurred in, and that the request of the Senate for a conference be agreed to. This is a bill adjusting land grants in the State of Kansas, and is in fact a general bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I should like the gentleman from Kansas to explain what is the effect of it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The House passed a bill adjusting the land-grants and sending back the excess lands to the public domain. This amendment makes a grant of the excess lands to the several railroad companies—that is what it amounts to. The Senate have asked a conference, and my request is that the House non-concur in the amendment and agree to the conference.

Mr. RYAN. I hope there will be no objection to that.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. COBB, Mr. VAN EATON, and Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

STATE UNIVERSITY, LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 176) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

DEPOSITORS IN FREEDMAN'S BANK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3114) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MONUMENT TO THE MOTHER OF WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3182) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburg, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CROW RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3225) to authorize the Stillwater and Cooke City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian Reserve, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 28, 1887.

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Commissioner of Education 1,000 copies of the Report on Education in Alaska (Jackson), printed in compliance with a concurrent resolution of August 2, 1886, the distribution of which was not therein directed.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the followinge Senate concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 28, 1887.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1885 and 1886 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent leave to print remarks in the RECORD was granted, as follows:

To Mr. WARD, of Illinois, upon the bill (H. R. 6977).

To Mr. SENEY, upon the bill (S. 194) to extend aid to common schools.

To Mr. GROUT, upon the bill in relation to agricultural-experiment stations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. LITTLE asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Jesse N. Owen.

Mr. PERKINS asked and obtained permission to remove from the files of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House the petition asking for a rerating of the pension granted to Fred. Hamlin, late of Company G, Fourth Missouri Cavalry, with accompanying papers, without leaving copies thereof, no adverse report having been made on such petition.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLER, by unanimous consent, was excused from attendance at the night sessions of the House, on account of ill health

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. BELMONT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and moved that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BELMONT, Mr. COX, and Mr. HITT.

CABLE LAID IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia in relation to the accounts of the Standard Underground Cable Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., for cable laid in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, with the recommendation that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. TUCKER, Mr. SENEY, and Mr. PARKER.

Mr. WILLIS. I have a conference report which I desire to present.

MEXICAN PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes. I desire to present on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations a substitute for the original bill. The matter will occupy but a moment. The bill is designed to make appropriations in pursuance of the bill recently passed providing pensions for the soldiers of the Mexican war.

The SPEAKER. The substitute proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions provided for under the act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war, and for other purposes," approved January 29, 1887, as follows: For the balance of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, $2,300,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, $4,600,000; in all $6,900,000: Provided, That the whole sum herein appropriated shall be available for expenditure until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations, and proposes to appropriate the amount estimated by the Secretary of the Interior, covering the period from now until June 30, 1888.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and the House will proceed to consider it.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and leave is granted.

The substitute proposed by Mr. TOWNSHEND was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move to suspend the rules and pass House bill 11234, with such amendments as I am authorized to present from the Committee on Appropriations, which will be read with the bill.

ALIEN LANDHOLDERS.

Mr. PAYSON. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] is a conference report in order?

The SPEAKER. It is, if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. WILLIS. I believe I have the floor for a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Conference reports are in order, of course, at all times, even when a motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to present this conference report now. Its consideration will take but a moment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 1, and insert as follows:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not lawfully declared their intention to become such citizens, or for any corporation not created by or under the laws of the United States or of some State or Territory of the United States, to hereafter acquire, hold, or own real estate so hereafter acquired, or any interest therein, in any of the Territories of the United States or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice in the collection of debts heretofore created: Provided, That the prohibition of this section shall not apply to cases in which the right to hold or dispose of lands in the United States is secured by existing treaties to the citizens or subjects of foreign countries, which rights, so far as they may exist by force of any such treaty, shall continue to exist so long as such treaties are in force, and no longer."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 2, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 2. That no corporation or association more than 20 per cent. of the stock of which is or may be owned by any person or persons, corporation or corporations, association or associations, not citizens of the United States, shall hereafter acquire or hold or own any real estate hereafter acquired in any of the Territories of the United States or of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 3, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 3. That no corporation other than those organized for the construction or operation of railways, canals, or turnpikes shall acquire, hold, or own more than 5,000 acres of land in any of the Territories of the United States; and no railroad, canal, or turnpike corporation shall hereafter acquire, hold, or own lands in any Territory, other than as may be necessary for the proper operation of its railroad, canal, or turnpike, except such lands as may have been granted to it by act of Congress; but the prohibition of this section shall not affect the title to any lands now lawfully held by any such corporation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 4, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all property acquired, held, or owned in violation of the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to enforce every such forfeiture by bill in equity or other proper process. And in any suit or proceeding that may be commenced to enforce the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of the court to determine the very right of the matter, without regard to matters of form, joinder of parties, multifariousness, or other matters not affecting the substantial rights either of the United States or of the parties concerned in any such proceeding arising out of the matters in this act mentioned."

And the Senate agree to the same.

T. R. COBB,
H. S. VAN EATON,
L. E. PAYSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. M. TELLER,
E. C. WALTHALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] moves to suspend the rules and pass with amendments presented by him from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. On that motion I demand a second.

Mr. BURROWS. The bill had better be read. We should not pass a bill of this important character without having it read.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] insists upon his right to submit a conference report, the Chair will of course recognize him.

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled to insist upon it. It will not take long to dispose of this report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would suggest to the gentleman that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Kansas can take the responsibility of delaying the consideration of the bill by making that point if he chooses to. I do not think it is my duty to withhold the report, and hence I insist upon presenting it at this time.

Mr. BURNES. I ask if after a motion is made to suspend the rules, and the reading of a bill has been commenced, it is then in order for the gentleman to present a conference report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is. Under the practice of the House a conference report is always in order. The Chair thinks that otherwise it would endanger the passage of even appropriation bills themselves, because there is nearly always some matter between the two Houses for consideration during the closing hours of a session.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is the motion the gentleman makes in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes a report from a committee of conference, which is always in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Against that I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does not the question of consideration take precedence of the reading of the report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House has the right to know the matter against which the question of consideration is raised before it is called upon to determine whether it will consider it or not.

The Clerk will read the report if it is demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. WILLIS. There are but very few amendments of the original bill embodied in the report, and the reading will take but a short time.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for the reading of the whole amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. That has been read once.

The SPEAKER. It has been read once, but it is embodied in the report and forms a part of it; and the Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to demand the reading.

Mr. WILLIS. The amendments of the conference committee are in red ink, and there is no necessity for reading any other part than the amendments.

The SPEAKER. But the amendment of the Senate is made a part of the report, and must be read if any gentleman demands it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I insist upon the reading of the report.

The report of the committee of conference was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out, in line 10, "five."
Strike out, in line 15, "fifty" and insert "forty."
Strike out, in line 19, "five."
Strike out, in line 22, "seven" and insert "five."
Strike out, in line 24, "ten" and insert "six."
Strike out, in line 30, "ten" and insert "five."
Strike out, in line 35, "six" and insert "seven."

And add, at the end of the paragraph, "of which $1,000 shall be used for improving the western channel of said harbor leading to the Point of Pines."

In line 37 strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen."
In line 39 strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen."
In line 41 strike out "ten" and insert "five."
In line 47 strike out "ten" and insert "five."
In line 70 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."
In line 83 strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."
In line 89 strike out "ten" and insert "five."
In line 105 strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."
In line 138 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."
In line 146 strike out "ten" and insert "five."
In line 152 strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five."
In line 160 strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five."
In line 173 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."
In line 188 strike out "sixty-five" and insert "sixty."
In line 206 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty."
In line 223 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."
In line 228 strike out "three" and insert "one."
In line 236 strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five."

Add to line 266, "And the Secretary of War is authorized to accept a deed of three and thirty-one hundredths acres of land from the Pierre Marquette Lumber Company for the purpose of constructing the harbor of refuge at Ludington."

In line 283 strike out "ten" and insert "eight," and in the same line strike out "five" and insert "four."
In line 328 strike out "eighty" and insert "sixty."
In line 346 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."
In line 357 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."
In line 276 strike out "eighty" and insert "seventy."
In line 388 strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500."
In line 392 strike out "five."
In line 397 strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten."
In line 430 strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen."
In line 483 strike out "five."
In line 514 strike out "ten" and insert "five;" and add, after the word "dollars," the words "Improving Nominee Bay and Creek: continuing improvement, $5,000."
In line 521 strike out "seventy" and insert "sixty."
In line 535 strike out "forty" and insert "thirty."
In line 536 strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten."
In line 612 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen."
In line 696 strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."
In line 807 strike out the word "opposite" and insert "above."
In line 808 strike out "including" and insert "and $5,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary for."
In line 870 strike out the words "and fifteen."
Strike out the proviso beginning in line 924 down to 934.
In line 968 strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."
In line 980 strike out "such" and insert "the;" and in the same line strike out the words "by means of a boat railway."
In line 981 strike out the word "and."
In line 1005 strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and twenty-five."
In line 1008 strike out "eighty" and insert "fifty."
In line 1025 strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and seventy-five."
In line 1066 strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen."
In lines 1098 and 1099 strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five," and also in line 1109 the same amendment.
In line 1114 strike out "five" and insert "four."

After line 48, in section 2, insert "Ohio River, with a view to protecting the channel opposite Cairo."

In line 91 strike out "Werymouth" and insert "Weymouth."

ALBERT S. WILLIS,
NEWTON C. BLANCHARD,
THOMAS J. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
S. J. R. McMILLAN,
O. D. CONGER,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

During the reading of the report the following took place:

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] agree to give us a yea-and-nay vote on the question of consideration?

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman mean on the question of the adoption of the report?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No, sir; on the question of consideration.

Mr. HAMMOND. They have not got enough to get the yeas and nays on anything.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] objects to dispensing with the reading of the report. The Clerk will continue to read.

The Clerk resumed, and completed the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the report?

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask if there is a detailed statement accompanying the report?

The SPEAKER. There is; the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement of the House conferees to accompany the conference report on H. R. 10419, making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) known as the "river and harbor bill," submit the following statement:

The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and inserted a bill of their own, taking the House bill as the basis therefor. Their action was treated as one amendment.

The House receded from its disagreement to this amendment, and concurred in the same with an amendment, being a new bill, to which the Senate agreed.

The Senate amendment contained every item of appropriation of the House bill without reduction of amount. In other words, the House bill was left unchanged, except that certain of its appropriations were increased in amount. The Senate inserted twenty-nine new items, amounting to $1,013,500. The aggregate of these new items was reduced in conference to $857,500. The Senate increased items in the House bill amounting in the aggregate to $2,148,550. This aggregate was reduced in conference to $1,598,580.

The principal items increased and inserted by the Senate are as follows:

|---|---|
| Baltimore Harbor | $175,000 |
| Mouth of the Columbia | 175,000 |
| Buffalo Harbor | 170,000 |
| Erie Harbor | 100,000 |
| New Haven | 75,000 |
| Norfolk | 70,000 |
| Humboldt Bay | 50,000 |
| Bar Harbor | 50,000 |
| Milwaukee | 40,000 |
| Portage Lake Canals | 350,000 |
| Mississippi River | 250,000 |
| Green and Barren Rivers | 150,000 |
| Potomac River | 100,000 |
| Cape Fear River | 70,000 |
| Saint John's River | 50,000 |
| Missouri River | 50,000 |
| Cascades of the Columbia | 50,000 |

The above amounts were largely reduced in conference.

The estimate of the Chief of Engineers of the amount that can be "profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, was $30,000,000.

The estimate of the Secretary of War for same year was $10,174,000.

The total of the original House bill was $7,458,250.

The total of the Senate bill as it came back to the House was $10,620,350.

The total of the bill now reported is $9,913,800.

ALBERT S. WILLIS.
N. C. BLANCHARD.
T. J. HENDERSON.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Rule XXIX, referring to conference reports, requires that—

There shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

I submit that what has been read is not that detailed statement explanatory of the action of the committee and that no one can tell from what has been read what was done by the Senate in the way of amendment, or what was done by the committee of conference in the way of changing the Senate amendment. No one knows now the condition of this bill. No one can tell from any information we have had what specific amounts are appropriated for specific improvements. I submit that the statement which has been read is meager in its character and is not a compliance with the rule. I therefore raise the question of order and ask that the report be remanded to the committee in order that they may comply with the rule.

The SPEAKER. The rule requires the managers of the conference on the part of the House to make this detailed statement. But the Chair does not feel it is the province of the Chair to determine whether that report is sufficient or not. That is for the House to determine. Another rule requires that when committees report back to the House bills, resolutions, &c., such bills, &c., shall be accompanied by reports in writing. It frequently happens that a committee does nothing more than recommend in one or two lines the passage or rejection of a measure. And the objection has sometimes been made that these reports are insufficient, but that has been held to be a question which the Chair can not decide. The Chair can not assume the responsibility of examining all the reports and determining whether they are sufficient. That is involved in the question now pending whether the House will consider the report. If it is thought that the statement is insufficient and that that is a reason why the House should not consider the report, that of course will control the votes of gentlemen on the floor.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I suggest that with reference to many of these amendments there is no attempt whatever at explanation?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of order addressed to the Chair. The House may receive a report and act upon it although it contains no detailed statement whatever, if the House desires to do so.

Mr. WILLIS. The House has just heard, as contained in the conference report, every word and syllable in the bill as now proposed to be enacted. I think that sufficiently answers the point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what amount the bill now carries?

Mr. WILLIS. Nine million nine hundred and thirteen thousand dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What is the appropriation for the Hennepin Canal?

Mr. WILLIS. There is an appropriation for the survey, but none for the canal.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How much is appropriated for the survey and location?

Mr. WILLIS. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then I am opposed to the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate, had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and live-stock, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 260) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House agree to the conference report?

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. If the report should not be pressed at this time, but should be presented at a later portion of the day, would it require the same reading to which the House has been listening?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. So far as that point is concerned, that probably would not be raised. We are met here to consider the legislative bill, and that has not been brought before the House.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 127, noes 23.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the demand for the yeas and nays will not be insisted on.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 169, noes 27.

So the House agreed to consider the report.

Mr. WILLIS. Under other circumstances I would desire very much to discuss this bill. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as the House is well aware, have been put to great disadvantage by their inability, without damaging the prospect of passing their bill, to reply to the charges which have been made in connection with it. But I recognize the fact that the public business is exceedingly pressing, and that we have no right to hold the floor longer than is essential to bring before the House the result of our conference, and let them say by their votes whether it shall stand as their action or not. In view, therefore, of the fact that other measures are pressing, I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. COWLES. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on agreeing to the conference report.

The SPEAKER declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 135, noes 39.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 39 votes in favor thereof.

Several MEMBERS. Count the other side.

The other side was counted; and there were 146 votes.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-nine gentlemen have risen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays and 146 against it. There is a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 89, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—178.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, and Mr. EDEN were announced as paired on the river and harbor bill. Mr. JONES would vote for the bill and Mr. EDEN against it.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. EVANS.

Mr. SADLER with Mr. BINGHAM.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. HILL with Mr. LOUTTIT.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. OWENS.

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. PHELPS. Mr. SOWDEN, if not paired, would vote against the bill.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. Is it a conference report?

Mr. PEEL. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, is that of higher privilege than a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The House last night, by unanimous consent and with a distinct understanding, agreed that the legislative bill should be taken up this morning as the first business in order. My question is whether that agreement does not give that bill priority?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember that any order on that subject was made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was an understanding to that effect.

The SPEAKER. There may have been an understanding between members on the floor, but no order was made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The record shows that there was such an understanding.

The SPEAKER. But there was no order, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] insists on his right to present the conference report, regardless of any understanding that may have been had among gentlemen on the floor. There was no order made by the House. If there had been an order the Chair would see that it was executed.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, 9, 10, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 6, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, and 20, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "twenty" insert "thirty-five" and add at the end of amended paragraph the following: "of which sum $15,000 may be used to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes;'" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "For the purchase by the United States of additional land for farming purposes for the Carlisle Industrial School, being the 'Parker Farm," so called, containing about 109 acres, $18,000, to be immediately available," and the Senate agree to the same.

S. W. PEEL,
T. G. SKINNER,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent, the reading of the statement of the House conferees was dispensed with.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 10394, "A bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes," submit the following statement showing the effect of the action of the conference committee in the report submitted herewith:

Amendments numbered 1 and 2: Restores the amount provided by the House for pay of physician and two teachers for the Apaches, Kiowas, and Comanches, and the total sum appropriated for said tribes.

Amendments numbered 3 and 4: Reduces the appropriation for the civilization of the Poncas from $7,000 as provided by the House to $5,000, and makes necessary change of total.

Amendment numbered 5: Restores the amount provided by the House bill for support of Indians at the Fort Peck agency.

Amendments numbered 6, 7, and 8: Provides, in lieu of the House appropriation of $25,000 for support and civilization of the Navajo Indians to be paid out of their funds in the Treasury, an appropriation of $7,500 for support and civilization out of the Treasury of the United States, and $7,500 for constructing ditches and reservoirs, to be taken from their funds now in the Treasury.

Amendments numbered 9 and 10: Restores the provisions of the House bill for Joseph's band of Nez Percé Indians.

Amendment numbered 11: Makes an appropriation of $15,000 for the Shoshones of Wyoming, in lieu of $17,000 as provided by the House.

Amendment numbered 12: Makes an appropriation of $4,000 for incidental expenses of Indian service in Montana, in lieu of $5,000 as provided by the House.

Amendments numbered 13 and 15: Places the provision limiting the employment of persons as farmers to those who have been engaged practically in the occupation of farming for at least five years, at the end of the paragraph providing for agency farmers instead of in another portion of the bill.

Amendment numbered 14: Makes provision that the Secretary of the Interior shall make a detailed report to Congress of the expenditure of the money covered into the Treasury under the caption of "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor," which is authorized by the amended paragraph to be used for the benefit of the tribes on whose account said money was covered in.

Amendment numbered 16: Increases the appropriation for surveys of Indian reservations and for allotments in severalty from $25,000, as provided by the House, to $35,000, and authorizes the expenditure of $15,000 of this amount to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act providing for allotments of lands in severalty to Indians, approved February 8, 1887.

Amendment numbered 17: Strikes out the provision reappropriating the unexpended balance of the appropriation for day and industrial schools for 1887 for use in fiscal year 1888.

Amendment numbered 18: Provides for the purchase of additional land for the use of the Carlisle Industrial School at a cost of $18,000.

Amendment numbered 19: Provides for the purchase of additional land for the Industrial School at Salem, Oreg., at an expense not to exceed $1,500, payment therefor to be made in labor to be performed by the Indian pupils of said school.

Amendment numbered 20: Provides for the erection of shops and hospital building for the Industrial School at Genoa, Nebr., and appropriates $6,000 therefor.

| Amount as passed House | $5,189,197 66 |
| Amount as agreed to in conference | 5,226,897 66 |

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I call up my motion to suspend the rules and pass the general deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Can not the question of consideration be raised against it?

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to suspend all the rules of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a word to my friend who makes this motion. Last night, although no order was made, it was understood, I think by members generally, that upon the meeting of the House this morning we should proceed at once with the legislative bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana whether it is not important that the legislative appropriation bill should be in the hands of the engrossing clerks as soon as possible.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is indispensable that it should go through at the earliest possible moment.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think it was the clear understanding last night that we should go on with the legislative bill this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that what occurred last night was in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. No order whatever on the subject was made by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the Chair let me read one line from the RECORD? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] inquired of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]—

Is it the purpose on the assembling of the House in the morning to take up this bill at once?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the purpose to take up this bill immediately.

The SPEAKER. That was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am aware of that; but good faith would require——

The SPEAKER. That was not an order by the House. The House did not in fact make any order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will send up the statement of his motion.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I am very reluctant to resist the inclinations and wishes of my esteemed colleague on the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HOLMAN], but as he has been occupying two days with his bill, and as this morning he did not ask that his bill be proceeded with, I rose to make my motion to suspend the rules; and the reading of this deficiency bill was commenced. I think I have as much of the "milk of human kindness" as anybody——

A MEMBER. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will read the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to suspend the rules and take from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill of the House (H. R. 11234) and with the amendments which I send to the desk pass the same, with leave to have a separate vote on an amendment which I will offer at the instance of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. BRADY. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the reading of the bill. It has not yet been read.

Mr. BURROWS. It ought to be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the question of consideration is raised will not that dispense with the reading of this bill if the House prefers to consider the other bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just decided that the question of consideration can not be raised against a motion to suspend the rules, because it is a motion to suspend all rules of the House in order by a single vote to pass the bill. The bill will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, during which the reading of portions of the bill reciting judgments, audited claims, &c., was, on motion of Mr. LONG and Mr. BURNES, dispensed with by unanimous consent. The reading having been concluded,

The SPEAKER. The amendments included in the motion of the gentleman from Missouri will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after line 22, insert:

"Silver certificates and legal-tender notes: For printing and finishing additional silver certificates and legal-tender notes of the denominations of one and two dollars, to be expended as follows:

"Under the Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For compensation of employés, $5,500; for plate printing, $14,000; for materials and miscellaneous expenses, $3,700.

"Under the office of the Treasurer of the United States: For materials needed in sealing and separating United States securities, $500; for salaries for additional pressmen, feeders, and separaters, $3,300; in all, $27,000.

"And the number of plate printers and printers' assistants may on the passage of this act be increased to the number provided for in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888."

On pages 14 and 15 strike out all of lines 333 to and including line 343.

In line 647 strike out "Rohr" and insert "Rahr."

In line 692 strike out "C" and insert "G."

In lines 763–4, in lieu of the sum proposed, insert $99,079.69.

On page 34 strike out all of lines 807 to and including line 810.

In line 1071 strike out "one" and insert "two."

In line 1077 strike out "administratix" and insert "executrix."

In line 1080 strike out "Ferkins" and insert "Perkins."

In line 935 strike out "Husband" and insert "Husbands."

In line 974 strike out "Getly" and insert "Getty."

In line 992 strike out "B" and insert "D."

At the end of the same line strike out "I" and insert "T."

In line 1007 strike out "B" and insert "V."

In line 1011 strike out "Bernan" and insert "Vernan."

In line 1034 strike out "Tamer" and insert "Tanner."

In line 1047 strike out "Beochan" and insert "Beacham."

In line 1088 strike out "eight" and insert "six."

In line 1095 strike out "Bechler" and insert "Beehler."

In line 1105 strike out "W."

After line 1123, insert the following:

"To pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Pacific Railroad, otherwise the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, $85,396.24, being in addition to the sum of $44,800.74, appropriated by the act approved August 4, 1886, to pay a judgment in favor of said Pacific Railroad, which two sums shall be in full satisfaction of the judgment in favor of the Pacific Railroad, reported to Congress in House Executive Document No. 187, Forty-ninth Congress, second session."

After line 1179, insert:

"To pay Henry Neal the difference between the pay of a laborer and the pay of a messenger during the two sessions of the Forty-ninth Congress, $451.70."

On page 49, at the end of line 10, insert the following:

"Provided, That if it appear by legal proof to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that any of the corporations named in said executive document as paying said tax never deducted or withheld the same from the alien holders of such stock or bonds, and that the same is not due to said aliens, payment may be made to the corporation."

On page 67, in line 131, strike out "twelve" and insert "forty-two."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10731) for the erection of a public building in the city of Binghamton, N. Y.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, &c.;

A bill (H. R. 5541) to prevent the employment of convict labor and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of material for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor; and

A bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers, and their employés.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered on the motion to suspend the rules.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BURNES. The amendment which is alluded to in the motion I have made had better be now called up and disposed of before general debate is indulged in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no debate.

Mr. BURNES. We may not have any debate. As suggested in the motion, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, after line 356, insert the following:

"To pay the claim of the estate of T. J. League, deceased, settlement numbered 5245, certified by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 22, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, $10,750."

Mr. BURNES. I desire for a moment to state the reasons which induced me to offer that amendment. During the last session of Congress this amendment was proposed in the House and agreed to by a large majority on a yea-and-nay vote. Subsequently in conference this item was dropped under circumstances which may be considered of doubtful legality on the part of the conferees.

But, be that as it may, I offer it in deference and in profound respect to the House by whose vote this claim, if I may so call it, has been authorized in this bill.

I have nothing to say in regard to the merits of it. My principles are probably unchanged; but there is this to be said of this bill, that it is based on a contract made by a quartermaster or commissary in the United States Army nearly a year after the close of the war for rent of premises which the Government used and for which no part has been paid. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GILFILLAN. Are amendments in order?

The SPEAKER. Amendments are not in order. The question is on the suspension of the rules.

Mr. CANNON. How can the vote be taken on the amendment if the rules are suspended? The bill has no status except under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri in his motion proposes to suspend the rules and pass the bill with a certain amendment, which the gentleman sent up, and with leave to offer an amendment on the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CANNON. I ask if it is in order to consider the amendment now?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CANNON. Then I wish to submit some remarks on the amendment. I should be glad to have some time to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY]. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts want? I understand I am now recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has been recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Not under the fifteen-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. There is no debate except the debate for thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. CANNON. When is the vote to be taken on the amendment?

The SPEAKER. Before the vote is taken on the motion to suspend the rules the Chair thinks the amendment can be disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. I can occupy fifteen minutes now.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I hope my time does not commence until now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the Speaker will let his gavel fall at the end of seven minutes.

I would have been glad, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Missouri had explained the bill; but as he has not done so I must go on without it.

I wish to say at the commencement, if this bill was being considered in the Committee of the Whole under the ordinary rules, and afterwards in the House, I would do what I could to have the bill fully understood by the House and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations for various reasons. While the bill was considered by the full Committee on Appropriations, the report accompanying the bill was never submitted to the subcommitte of which I am a member, or the full committee, and was never adopted by either, and yet it proposes on its face to speak for the committee. I do not understand that way of doing business, but here in the closing hours of the session I am powerless except to state that the bill does not contain many important items of appropriation, and contains some items that should be explained to the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Powerless on account of the vicious methods of your own committee.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

Now, this bill, Mr. Speaker, consists in the main of deficiencies. I agree in the main with the recommendations made as to them, yet there are some items in the bill recommended which would not have existed under any wise administration on the part of the Executive. Of course the bill must pass, because there are thousands of people who are entitled to small amounts, bounty, back pay, post-office claims, and others who can not do without their money without suffering. The bill is conspicuous for the absence of many items which it should contain, and several of these I want to call your attention to in the few moments I shall occupy. If you will examine the report you will see that it omits an item of appropriation of $2,000,000 for service upon some 2,000 miles of the leased lines of the Central Pacific Railroad, being in payment for the transportation of mails, troops, &c., for the United States.

It is familiar to gentlemen here that the Supreme Court of the United States held in connection with this Government service on these 2,000 miles of non-aided bond leased that the money was due and payable by the Government, and a judgment was rendered in favor of the companies in that case. Following that decision the accounting officers of the Treasury of this administration have audited these amounts and have transmitted them in the regular estimates to Congress for appropriation, and yet, although the auditors and the comptrollers, following the road marked by the Supreme Court, have transmitted these items, aggregating $2,000,000, none of the items appear in this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not here to make any special plea for the Central Pacific Railroad, or any other railroad; but I am calling the attention of this House to the fact that the highest tribunal in this country, one of the co-ordinate branches of this Government, has decided in favor of the justice of these claims, and rendered judgment; and yet they are for some reason left out of this bill in its preparation.

Upon what ground is it left out? To my mind, only one answer can be made, and that is upon the ground of that power which the sovereign has in this and all other countries to repudiate the obligations of the Government.

Yet there are reasons assigned in this report submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, which I hold in my hand, that were not deemed sufficient by the Supreme Court.

In speaking of the suit of the railroad company against the United States the report says:

The suit was begun in the Court of Claims by the filing of a petition or declaration at law at the November term of said court in 1885. It was the guarded production of several of the skilled lawyers of that powerful company. It of course stated a naked case at law. It did not admit any of the known facts constituting a complete equitable defense.

The attorney representing the United States filed only a general demurrer. This the court very properly overruled, and judgment thereon was allowed to be entered in the Court of Claims. The Supreme Court, on appeal, could do nothing but sustain the judgment of the court below. What that great tribunal would have decided had the facts and equities of the Government been presented by answer, we, of course, do not know.

The gentleman from Missouri then proceeeds with his argument in the case. Now, all I know is that, upon a presentation of the facts as are admitted touching these leased lines, the Supreme Court did make the decision. There is no question of that. Under what administration? Under this administration. Who prepared the case? The present Attorney-General of the United States. Not our Attorney-General, your Attorney-General; and the gentleman to avoid the effect of the decision of the Supreme Court attacks his Department of Justice, and says:

What that great tribunal (the Supreme Court) would have decided had the facts and equities of the Government been presented by answer, we, of course, do not know,

That is to say, if the Government case had been properly "presented," that we might well have looked for a different decision, for which reason he refuses to recognize the decision of the court and appropriate the money.

The SPEAKER. The time the gentleman desired to occupy has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield myself five minutes longer.

Sir, I have to say that if the Attorney-General, by fraud or collusion, as the report intimates, has failed to do his duty, my friend from Missouri should have arisen in his place and moved articles of impeachment against him.

Now, I want to discuss the Central Pacific Railroad in a single remark. I want it to pay its debts to the Government according to contract. It claims, and claims truly, that it has paid every debt to the United States that it has been called on under the law to pay, even under the Thurman act. Is it then the true remedy for a debt to fall due from that road in the future to the Government to withhold from it the money which is due the road now, and which the court says the Government is bound to pay? I will tell you the remedy: to meet anticipated danger of loss amend the Thurman act so as to take in addition to the 25 per cent. of earnings of that road for a sinking fund to meet the indebtedness of the Government to become due, 25 per cent. more, or 35 per cent. more. That is the legal way. But no; the gentleman from Missouri, and his side of the House, with 45 majority, have another plan of proceeding, and that is to play on the prejudices against railroads in the minds of the people, arbitrarily do that which we have no right to do, and leave undone that which we have a right to do.

Sir, the obligations and contracts of the Government with all its citizens should be kept, and this, too, whether they be high or low, rich or poor. There is no safety in any other course.

There is another item of $2,800,000 left out of this bill. For fifty years the United States has failed to keep its treaty stipulations with the Choctaw Indian Nation. In 1881 Congress passed a law permitting that nation to sue the United States in the Court of Claims. The suit was brought and an appeal from the judgment taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. In November last that court found there was due from the United States to the Choctaw Nation over $2,800,000, and under its direction the Court of Claims entered judgment against the United States for that amount. Under the law that judgment bears interest at the rate of 5 per cent., $140,000 per annum. Under law it is certified to Congress for appropriation. We have the money in the Treasury to pay it.

Mr. McKINLEY. An adjudicated claim?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. Why, it is a judgment of the Court of Claims under the direction of the Supreme Court; and yet they leave it out, though we have the money to pay it.

Mr. MORROW. What is the rate per cent.?

Mr. CANNON. Five per cent.

Why? Because in the exercise of that same sovereign power that my friend from Missouri thinks so much of, we have the power so to deal with the subject as to require the people on the one hand to pay this $140,000 a year interest, and postpone the payment to the Indians and set aside the mandates of the Supreme Court. In other words, the Democratic Committee on Appropriations claim the right to repudiate, and that is what we are doing.

I do not think this is statesmanship. I do not think it is wise. It is plain, simple, palpable repudiation if it does not go into the bill.

It is true the Indians are weak. It is true that the railroad companies are not in favor. It is easy to refuse what we owe. A new preacher once went to a strange place to preach. He wanted to talk about the saloon-keepers. One of the congregation said, "Oh, no; if you do that you would hurt somebody's feelings." Then he proposed to talk about this, that, and the other, but there was always somebody in that congregation who would be offended. "What then can I do?" said he. "Oh," said the man he was talking to, "give the Jews the devil, they have got no friends here." It is on that theory my friend from Missouri seems to proceed in making up this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois what would be the amount of the bill if these matters were included?

Mr. CANNON. The bill would carry five million dollars more than it does now. I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to three minutes.

Mr. McCOMAS. I can not in three minutes animadvert upon the whole of the bill. I therefore ask attention to the largest item in this bill, the deficiencies in the Department of Justice. I desire to call attention to the fact that the deficiency in this bill of $25,000 for assistant attorney's fees occurs because the whole of it and more, too, had been expended in special counsel fees in the Bell telephone case before the appropriation had been applied to the direct object of the assistance in that office ordinarily employed.

Let me call attention to one thing more, the fees of witnesses and jurors. It was said here a year ago when by me the attention of the House was challenged to the steady increase under Democratic rule of expenditure in these items in the Department that it would soon grow less. It was predicted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that it would dwindle and go down under the new administration. Instead of that it has gone up, and up, after two years of so-called retrenchment and reform. The Democratic members who loudly protested against these appropriations as choice specimens of Republican extravagance are silent now and silent all since Democratic expenditure has outstripped all prior years.

The expenditures for witness fees in 1881 were $580,000; in 1882, $670,000; in 1883, $601,000; in 1884, $660,000; in 1885, $621,000; in 1886, $787,000; in 1887, including $200,000 in this deficiency bill, the sum of $750,000.

Another: Expenditures for jurors' fees in 1881 were $440,000; in 1882, $470,000; in 1883, $450,000; in 1884, $510,000; in 1885, $450,000; in 1886, $540,000; in 1887, including $50,000 in this deficiency bill, the sum of $500,000.

What do we find in regard to the new marshals and new officials who summoned these officers, and the new procedure under the two years of this Administration? While in 1881 the Republicans were thought to be extravagant in spending $580,000 for witnesses' fees, in 1886 we have an expenditure for those purposes of $787,000; for the year 1887, now current, an expenditure of $750,000; and already, for 1888, we appropriated $550,000, and next year we will, in a deficiency bill, add $250,000 more, which ought now to be in the sundry civil bill we are about to pass.

So also is it with jurors. We have now an expenditure of $500,000 where the Republicans had years ago, in 1881, an expenditure of $400,000. Now we have $500,000, and we make another appropriation of $450,000 with a sure deficiency to add next year and swell up a quarter of a million more on these two items in the next deficiency bill. Yet gentlemen will go to the country with the cry that they are cutting down the expenditures this year; and next year they will come up with a deficiency bill and pass it under a suspension of the rules.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCOMAS. And the hammer will come down at the end of three minutes, and we will not have an opportunity of stating the facts fully to the country.

Mr. BURNES. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. I wanted to say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that perhaps I am as good a friend to the Indians as he is, and I am authorized to say for the Choctaw people that they deemed it wiser and more prudent, inasmuch as the Senate had under investigation in one of its committees the question of the attorneys' fees for the transaction of the Choctaw net proceeds claims, that that matter should be shaped and put upon the bill in the Senate. I will also say I want every dollar of it paid, and paid to the Indians, and let these attorneys settle with the Indians. I hope the Senate will take that course, and that the House will be ready when the bill comes back to unite with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and accept the amendment.

Mr. RYAN. Could not that have been provided in this bill?

Mr. BURNES. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], that he may make a statement as to the Pacific railroads' claims.

Mr. McCOMAS. I had asked my colleague on the committee to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] the time he yields to me. I will yield my time to that gentleman, and will say only one word on the Pacific railroads' claims. The debt of the Central Pacific, with thirty years' interest, is already approaching the time of maturity and interest will fall due in a very few years. In bringing about a settlement between the Government and the railroad companies we ought to have a care how we put beyond our control the chance of having a set-off, and thus avoid the trouble we now have with the Union Pacific while we have money in hand. In that matter I am in hearty accord with my friend in charge of the bill [Mr. BURNES]. I yield the remainder of my time, if he desires it, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY].

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is presented for consideration later than the members of the House expected or desired, I need only remind them that it is necessarily reserved as the last of the general appropriation bills, and that I am in no way responsible for any delays in the consideration of the other bills which were lying across my pathway.

I believe I have heard no complaint against any particular item of appropriation which this bill contains; the objections, if any, arise from desires to get other items in it which did not meet the approbation of a majority of the committee. Being a deficiency bill, we have looked for law, reason, and equity in every one of its many items of appropriation.

I must express my profound regret that my esteemed colleague on the committee [Mr. CANNON] has allowed himself to become a little disturbed or excited. He has read portions of the report accompanying the bill, and complains of me for not submitting the report to the committee or showing it to him. I certainly intended no discourtesy to the distinguished gentleman, and he is no doubt aware that it has not been the custom to submit these reports formally to the Committee on Appropriations, and as by a vote of the committee, in session, I was instructed to report the bill to the House, it became my duty to write and submit such report as I deemed appropriate.

The report was submitted individually to the members of the committee who prepared the bill, and some others, and it met their approval. It was also substantially the mere statement of facts and conclusions of law presented to the committee. If I failed to show it to my colleague thus complaining, it was because he was known to be opposed to the omission of the provisions to which allusion has been made, and was representing the minority of the committee voting on those provisions. I feel confident he does not feel that I could treat him with unkindness or discourtesy, especially as to matters entirely non-political. I would add that in its preparation and consideration in the committee I have been aided and strengthened at every step by my colleague's advice, wisdom, and experience. The report, which I trust every member of this House will read, I feel justified in saying is indisputably correct, and has the sanction of the majority of the committee. So much for what I may term the unkindness of my friend from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Of course he does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. BURNES. I can not yield now.

Mr. Speaker, I do not yield. I do not misrepresent my colleague, but if I should I will correct it in the RECORD or make the amende honorable in due time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is not the report of the Committee on Appropriations. It never was submitted to the committee, and never was considered or adopted by the committee.

Mr. STEELE. And it was printed on the 25th of February.

Mr. BURNES. Grant it all. The report was submitted to members of the committee informally, according to the usual custom. My colleague from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] and others, the friends of the bill as it is, agreed to the report. But enough of this, which at best amounts to nothing. The question is not how did the report get here, but are its facts and conclusions correct and in the interest of the Government and the people?

My colleague seems to regard it as necessary to declare himself against repudiation; that question does not arise. I am against every form of repudiation, public or private, but before appropriating to pay any claim I think it the duty of Congress to determine whether it is a just claim or an honest claim, and, further, whether it ought to be paid in money, or, if the claimant be indebted to the Government on other accounts, whether it ought in justice and equity to be set off against so much of such indebtedness. As I would not vote for repudiation, so I would not vote any sum to be paid to any creditor of the Government so long as such creditor was indebted to the Government to the same or a greater amount.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company owes this Government more than $60,000,000 for bonds and money paid by it in interest thereon. This fact is conceded. The Government owes the Central Pacific Railroad Company $2,000,000 or more for transportation. This fact is conceded. Have we not the right to credit the Central Pacific Railroad Company with the $2,000,000 on account, or place that amount to the company's credit in the sinking fund, ready for the final day of settlement, which the people have determined shall come.

But it has been said that the debt of the company to the United States is not due. What of it! The company has had the bonds of the United States for twenty years, and on them we have regularly paid the interest for the benefit of the company, and all on a contract binding the company to repay the great sum thus lent it. Is not that company chargeable with fraud—fraud upon its great creditor. When fraud can be charged successfully, an attachment on a debt not due will be maintained.

Was not a specific act of fraud proven on the floor of this House only a few days ago by the evidence of an honored member as to a specific act of misappropriation of money by the company? In the money thus misappropriated the Government had a specific and lawful interest; to a part of it a clear right. Yet it was taken, if not embezzled, by the company to pay for services on one of the very branch lines claimed by the company as having independent rights, although a leased line, as it is called. If we could rely upon facts and circumstances almost universally believed to be true, every member of this corporation participating in its management and control would be declared by a jury of their countrymen, if a prosecution were instituted, better fitted for the prison-house than for the councils of statesmen.

Sixty million dollars and more justly owing to the United States! Sixty million dollars out of the public Treasury and in the pockets of the managers of the Central Pacific Railroad Company! An admitted debt! A beneficent loan! Whether technically due or not makes no difference. It is a debt. It is in danger. Acts of fraud have been committed and great loss is threatened to the United States. The Government owes the Central Pacific Railroad Company $2,000,000. We propose to owe it until some adjustment of the $60,000,000 due us by the company is secured or a repayment made.

They say they have a judgment. A judgment! There is no judgment. There was a judgment rendered upon kindred claims to the amount of some $22,000 only. But in that suit none of the equities or rights of the United States were necessarily considered. Suit was begun in the Court of Claims. The petition was filed, and was met by a demurrer on the part of the Government. Judgment was entered on demurrer. An appeal was gravely taken to the Supreme Court. Of course the judgment was sustained, properly sustained, as none of the equities of the United States or the frauds of the company were in issue.

What the court would have decided in case the whole of the facts and circumstances had been placed before it in a bill for relief is not for us now to speculate upon or determine. It is sufficient to note that, by the authority of the sovereign people, this Government has the power to do justice and pay this corporation what we owe it, offsetting our claim against theirs. This is the conclusion the committee have reached—the conclusion of justice or right, common sense or public duty.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Before the gentleman takes his seat I wish he would tell us what is the latest date to which the allowances by the various Departments are provided for in this bill.

Mr. BURNES. Up to February 18——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill to allow me to send up and have read an amendment which I supposed was in the bill, but which has probably been omitted by inadvertence.

It is for the completion of a work which was ordered by the last Congress, which is now in progress, and which will be completed by next December if we make this appropriation.

Mr. BURNES. I see no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to continue and complete the index of claims reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Claims under the act of March 3, 1871, and by the Court of Claims under the so-called Bowman act of March 3, 1883, such sum as may be necessary to pay a clerk, from and after March 4, 1887, the same compensation paid per diem to committee clerks; such employment not to extend beyond December 5, 1887.

Mr. DOCKERY. That amendment was directed by the House and should be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. BURNES. Yes. I suggest, however, that it ought not to extend beyond the 30th of June.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it extend beyond the 30th of June?

The SPEAKER. The amendment provides that the compensation shall not extend beyond the 5th of December next.

Mr. RANDALL. It ought not to extend beyond the 30th of June, because this bill relates only to the current fiscal year.

Mr. DOCKERY. The House has already passed upon this matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not contradicting that; but the bill does not extend beyond the current fiscal year.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the provision is not to go beyond the 30th day of June, it may as well not go into the bill at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether the amendment which has been sent up proposing to pay $10,750—the Texas matter—has not already been voted on by the House and been rejected.

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir; it was voted on at the last session.

A MEMBER. It was passed by both Houses—not rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent to have an amendment read to which, if the circumstances are understood, there will be, I think, not a single objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after line 1165 the following:
"To pay R. T. Moses for services rendered in the sealing-room during the months of December and Janury of the present session, $142."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

There being no objection, the amendment of Mr. HARRIS was considered and adopted.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I desire by unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to know whether there is a specific appropriation in this bill for issuing one and two dollar United States notes.

Mr. BURNES. That amendment has been read from the desk; and I answer my friend from Iowa that there is a provision for that purpose.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does it specify one and two dollar United States notes?

Mr. BURNES. One and two dollar United States notes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I thank the Committee on Appropriations. There has been a palpable violation of the law during the last year or two, and I wanted to know whether this provision is specific.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. BURNES. I understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] misunderstood the answer I made a few moments ago. The fact is that the amendment under consideration was passed through this House and also through the Senate at the last session and went into conference, where it got lost in the make-up of the bill. It was passed in the House, I believe, by a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment of the same character as that just adopted on motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment of Mr. WILSON was read, as follows:

After line 1182, insert:
"To pay Maurice Ruddlestone the difference between the pay of laborer at $720 per annum and that of a messenger at the rate of $3.60 per day from July 11, 1886, to June 30, 1887, $583.40."

There being no objection to the amendment of Mr. WILSON, it was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] stated a few moments ago that this Texas amendment was passed by both Houses at the last session, and was "lost" in conference. How did it get "lost?"

Mr. BURNES. Well, sir, the conferees concluded that, as this provision was in a section which had been amended in other particulars, they had the power to compromise on this item, and leave it out. I will say that I still think the conferees did have that power.

Mr. BURROWS. Did the conferees on the part of the Senate insist on taking it out?

Mr. BURNES. The conferees on the part of the Senate and those on the part of the House preferred, upon investigation, to leave it out. That is all I can say.

Mr. BURROWS. I think that these matters ought to stand on their own merits, and should not be "log-rolled."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] on behalf of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 15, after line 356, insert the following:
"To pay the claim of the estate of T. J. League, deceased, settlement numbered 5245, certified by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 22, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, $10,750."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 65, noes 77.

Mr. CRAIN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CRAIN and Mr. BURROWS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 89.

So the amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments which have been read.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 134, noes 23; more than two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask, by unanimous consent, that all who desire to print remarks on the deficiency bill, which has just been passed, be permitted to do so.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I object.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House be suspended, and the bill of the House 11028, as amended by the Committee of the Whole, be passed with the following amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the bill dispensed with?

Mr. HENLEY. I object to the second being considered as ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. The understanding of last evening has been carried out.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has the bill been reduced in conformity to law?

Mr. HOLMAN. In conformity to the appropriations of the current year.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask the amendments be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to say that the bill was read and acted upon up to the forty-seventh page. That much of the bill was acted upon by the Committee of the Whole, and of course that portion of the bill is to be taken as left by the Committee of the Whole. The balance of the bill is left as it is in the law of the current year except in several instances to which I will call attention.

Mr. BURROWS. To facilitate the matter I will suggest to my friend from Indiana he take up each amendment in its order, calling the attention of the committee to the page and letting it be read by the Clerk, and so going through with them.

Mr. HOLMAN. All after the forty-seventh page?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, all after the forty-seventh page as they have been already gone through with in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. I suggest instead of quarter of an hour we have half an hour for debate on each side.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is it considered a second has been ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. It is understood, then, half an hour on each side is allowed?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

For additional clerical force for the assistant treasurer of New York, $6,400, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. STEELE. There is an increase there.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; that is the transfer from the sundry bill to this bill. It was not in the last year's bill, but has been transferred to this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; chief clerk and teller, $2,500; assistant teller, $1,800; book-keeper, $1,500; assistant book-keeper and one clerk, at $1,200 each; messenger, $1,000; three watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $15,360.

Mr. HOLMAN. In line 1198 "$500" is inserted, so it will read "for assistant treasurer, $4,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at Helena, Mont.: For salary of assayer in charge, $2,000; melter, $2,000; chief clerk, $1,600; one clerk, $1,400; in all, $7,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. In line 1307 strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500;" in line 1308 insert "250;" so it will read "$1,850."

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs of building, $1,000.

Mr. STEELE. For repairs of building, $1,000, in line 1298 is a new item.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was not in last year, but is put in this year, and is now stricken out.

Mr. TOOLE. In reference to the Territory of Montana, there was a provision that $900 of the amount appropriated should be given for a clerk in the office of the secretary.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was purely temporary. The appropriation applied to that year.

Mr. TOOLE. I understood this was to come up to the current year.

Mr. HOLMAN. But not for a purely temporary office.

Mr. TOOLE. I move to amend the paragraph in that respect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McMILLIN in the chair). The bill is not subject to amendments.

Mr. TOOLE. If it is in order I would move the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is only in order by unanimous consent. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments as indicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. The provision to which the gentleman refers was temporary and paid out of the appropriations for the Territory of Montana for that legislative year.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 1400 strike out "two" and insert "three;" so it will read "three associate judges" under the heading Territory of New Mexico. In line 1403 strike out "thirteen" and insert "sixteen," in making up the total.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. My understanding of the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Indiana was that this unanimous consent was given upon the express understanding that the amendments made in this appropriation bill should conform it to the law of the current year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. If that be true, and I do not know, of course, the question raised by my friend from Montana; but if true that the bill does not conform in that respect to the current law, then I think the gentleman from Montana has the right to insist upon his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me explain to the gentleman from Arkansas again. That was the item incorporated in the bill of last year, as I have said, and taken from the appropriation for the legislative expenses of the Territories. There are no legislative expenses for the coming year, and I ask unanimous consent that this memorandum which I send to the desk be read as an explanation of that provision.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman can not take me off my feet in that way. Let me first make this simple observation: that if the statement of the gentleman from Indiana is not to exclude such corrections as I have indicated; in other words, if the gentleman's suggestion does not exclude those amendments to the text of this bill which will make it conform to the existing law, I have nothing to urge against it.

I do not object in the present case, for I know nothing of the question submitted by the gentleman from Montana; but I do not want the consent given to the gentleman from Indiana to be so broad that when we come to a place where the existing law demands that there shall be a modification of the text of the bill, we shall not have the right to propose it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly not. I ask the Clerk now to read this memorandum.

The Clerk read as follows:

The salaries of officers in Alaska are restored to the sums fixed by the current law; otherwise the Territories are provided for substantially in accordance with the estimates; biennial sessions of Legislatures being provided for where they occur next year, and are omitted where they occurred last year.

The provisions as to Utah under the Edmunds act are made the same as they were in the current law.

Mr. TOOLE. I want to say with reference to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana that the appropriation bill for the current year and always before that, provided for this clerk. But the gentleman from Indiana leaves the impression that because last year was a legislative year, a clerk was then provided but ought not to be now. As a matter of fact the bill presented to this House provides for a clerk; but the result of this arrangement is that the amount appropriated is wholly insufficient and inadequate; and while there is a right to the service of a clerk nominally, he will not have any power to employ one because there is no money out of which he can be paid.

I ask, then, that this sum be specifically appropriated for, thereby providing the actual salary of the clerk. And I ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated in the bill in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman for unanimous consent to move this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I object for the present; and rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I demand the regular order for the purpose of proceeding with the bill. As I understand it, this is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Then by what right is all of this colloquy and conjuring of the bill going on here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only by unanimous consent; and if objection is made of course the Chair will direct the Clerk to continue the reading.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was done at the instance of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. CANNON. I object to it; and ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the present occupant not being in the chair at the time the arrangement was made is unable to say what agreement was reached; but understands, however, that there was some suggestion that the differences should be pointed out as they were reached, thus indicating the corrections.

Mr. PERKINS. It was demanded that the amendments should be read, and as I understand this is the reading of the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I demand now the regular order under the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But that has been modified by a suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan, which was unanimously accepted by the House.

Mr. PERKINS. The motion was to suspend the rules and pass the bill with amendments, and we are having the amendments read, as I understand.

Mr. BURROWS. That is all. It was understood that the amendments were to be read for the information of the House, and when that portion of the bill was reached to which they applied attention was then to be called to the changes made so that we could understand the bill as we proceeded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed to read the amendments.

The Clerk continued the reading of the modifications.

Mr. STEELE. There are several changes in the office of the Quartermaster-General which have not been explained.

Mr. CANNON. I object to discussion.

Mr. STEELE. The understanding was that the bill was to be changed in accordance with the law of the current year. Now, I am calling attention to the fact that in the Quartermaster's Department there are some changes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will allow the bill to be read.

Mr. BURROWS. These changes had better be explained as we proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I trust the time occupied will be allowed to come out of the hour.

Mr. BURROWS. I can not consent to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. STEELE. I say there are changes in the office of the Quartermaster-General which have not been explained.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can tell the gentleman in a moment. These changes were all made on the express request of the Quartermaster-General himself.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being demanded, the Chair will direct the reading of the bill, unless, as the Chair is informed, an agreement was entered into when the present occupant was not in the chair which modified that order, and, if so, the Chair would be glad to be informed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was a modification [illegible]

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I made the proposition that these amendments be taken up in their order, and that the gentleman from Indiana should as they were read if there was any question about any amendment give an explanation, so that we could understand it, but without debate, and that we should go through all the amendments in that way. And that was agreed to on all hands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just one moment. The law of the current year has been simply copied into this bill except in some few cases to which I will call attention when the reading is through.

Mr. STEELE. The proviso which was in the bill for the current year prohibiting printing in the Surgeon-General's Office has been stricken out, and does not appear in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That proviso is the permanent law.

Mr. ROGERS. I insist upon the agreement which was understood by the whole House being carried out, that the gentleman from Indiana should, as the reading progresses, point out the differences, and that the time for debate should be extended half an hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the request was submitted by the then occupant of the chair, and no objection was made to it. The present occupant will be constrained to carry out the agreement.

Mr. CANNON. What was the agreement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That when the amendments are read by the Clerk, if there is a variance between the existing appropriation law and the bill as reported by the House, the gentleman from Indiana is to be permitted to explain the difference.

Mr. STEELE. But if he fails to call attention to any point in the bill where there is a change are we to sit by and let him go on without asking for an explanation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks a gentleman would in the case supposed have a right to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to that fact.

Mr. STEELE. And that is precisely what I am calling attention to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the agreement as to explanation and debate would, as the Chair is informed by the Clerk, only attach to the amendments offered by the committee or by the gentleman having the bill in charge.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman fails to amend this bill so as to make it conform to the current appropriation law are we to sit by and let him go ahead?

Mr. BURROWS. The whole basis of this agreement was the statement of the gentleman from Indiana that this bill from page 47 conformed with existing law. Upon that statement this agreement was entered into. Now, if, as we go over the bill, it appears that the statement of the gentleman from Indiana is erroneous we have a right to call attention to that fact.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did not the gentleman from Indiana state there were some few changes from the existing law?

Mr. HALL. I desire to make a suggestion in the form of a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALL. While the gentleman in charge of the bill has the right by an amendment to make this bill conform to existing law, the agreement entered into can not take away from the House the power to control and correct and make the amendments what they should be. My point, in other words, is that the recommendation of the gentleman, while it may point out and call attention of the House to what should be done, is not conclusive on the House.

Mr. STEELE. We have not yet had any explanation why the proviso I refer to has been stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will allow it to be read I will give the explanation he desires.

Mr. STEELE. The proviso will be found in the legislative bill for the current year, on page 194 of the Statutes at Large.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague will notice this fact. There was a proviso added to the paragraph appropriating for the office of the Surgeon-General in the following words:

Provided, That hereafter no printing shall be done in the Surgeon-General's Office, and all printing for said office shall be done by the Public Printer, and charged to the appropriations made by law applicable to such service.

My friend wants that repeated in this bill. I suggest to him that that is made permanent law.

Mr. HENLEY. It is the law now.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proviso is that "hereafter the printing," &c. That is permanent law.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 1672 strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,000," so as to read: "For medical dispensary, Surgeon-General's Office, $1,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. That makes it conform to the appropriation for the current year.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 1676, after the word "office," where it first occurs, insert "Commissary-General's Office."

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to explain that there some change was made as regards the rent of offices for the reason that the west wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments building will soon be completed, and this bill necessarily provides for the transfer of most of the War Department officials into that building. That of course makes some change in the aggregate amount to be appropriated for renting offices.

The Clerk read the following amendments:

In line 1682 correct the total by inserting "$25,675."

Strike out lines 1721, 1722, and 1723, namely, these words:

"For one day watchman for South Carolina Avenue reservation, Folger Square, and adjacent reservations, $660."

Mr. HOLMAN. That clause is stricken out for the reason that it is not contained in the current law.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this part of the bill.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Amend line 1729, on page 71, as follows: Strike out the words "one thousand two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand four hundred;" also, in line 1730, same page, strike out the words "one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand two hundred;" also, in line 1736, insert the following after the word "firemen:" "$900 each;" also, in lines 1739 and 1740, strike out the words "eighty-nine thousand nine hundred and twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ninety-four thousand three hundred and eighty."

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not consent to that.

The Clerk continued the reading of the amendments, as follows:

In line 1831 strike out "Norfolk."
In line 1837 strike out "$7,500" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. Norfolk is not in the present law, and is therefore omitted from this bill.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will there be an opportunity to offer amendments to this bill?

The SPEAKER. No amendment can now be offered except by unimous consent.

Mr. JAMES. But at a later time?

The SPEAKER. At any time. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FINDLAY. I would like to know whether these amendments proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] having charge of this bill are not subject to debate at this time?

The SPEAKER. After the amendments have been read there would be, under the rules of the House, thirty minutes for debate; but it has been agreed that there shall be one hour for debate, thirty minutes on each side.

Mr. FINDLAY. I desire to say that the appropriation made here——

The SPEAKER. Debate will be in order after the amendments are read.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, are we not entitled to have the bill read as the committee propose to amend it?

The SPEAKER. That would have been in order under the rules; but by an agreement on the floor it was arranged that the amendments which are proposed should be read for the information of the House, and that that portion of the bill which is not changed by the amendments should not be read.

Mr. NELSON. Well, I simply desire to hear the amendments read.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

In line 1875 strike out "one clerk of class 3."
In line 1876 strike out where it first occurs, "one clerk," and insert "two clerks of class 2."
Also correct the total in line 1881 by striking out "six" and inserting "four."
In line 1901 strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000."
In line 1921, after the word each, insert "two special inspectors connected with the administration of the public-lands service, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and to be subject to his direction, at $2,500 each."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the House that these two inspectors were first provided for by the law of the current year at salaries of $2,500 each. They were omitted in the first place from this bill, but were afterwards restored, and of course they are restored under the understanding.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert, in line 1919, after the word "appeals," the words "whose opinions shall be filed in the case."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is right, and I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will not object to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that amendment is entirely proper.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] if it is not the fact now that these opinions are reduced to writing in every instance?

Mr. HEPBURN. They are; but when they go to the Secretary or the Assistant Secretary he may throw them into the waste-basket when he has done with them. All I desire is that they shall be filed in each case and preserved as a part of the record.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But in every instance they are now required to be in writing?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is my understanding.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I do not object.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, in line 1940 in the current law there are twelve laborers provided for, but I see there are thirteen in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, if there is an additional laborer here it is owing to an inadvertence, and I hope my friend will take no exception to it. I think, however, it will be found that there is merely a transfer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1951 strike out "seventy" and insert "seventy-five."
In line 1952 insert the following:
"For per diem in lieu of subsistence of two special inspectors connected with the administration of the public land service, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 a day, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation, $5,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is necessary. It is the same as the present law.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1956 strike out "seven clerks" and insert "five clerks."

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment is in accordance with the current law.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will consent that instead of the number of clerks being reduced to conform to the existing law it shall be increased to meet the requirements of the office. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that he ask unanimous consent to that effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no objection to giving them seven clerks, but we simply made the bill conform to the present law. If the House has no objection to increasing the number to seven I have none. I think seven is the proper number, and I now ask unanimous consent that seven be the number.

Mr. PERKINS. But we want more than that. I am informed that the Secretary of the Interior desires eleven clerks for that duty instead of five.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is correct. He ought to have them.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the number be made eleven.

Mr. CABELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent to strike out "five" and insert "seven?"

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the gentleman will permit me to state the reasons why I desire this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to inserting "eleven," but not to inserting "seven."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request to insert "seven?" The Chair hears none; and that amendment is made. The Clerk will correct the summing up.

The Clerk continued the reading.

Mr. MATSON. In lines 2047 and 2048 the words "and traveling" should be struck out so as to conform to the existing law. The present law reads "when absent from home on duty."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the words "and traveling" will be struck out.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have the clause read as it will stand if amended.

The SPEAKER. The clause as proposed to be amended will read:

For per diem when absent from home on duty outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. MATSON. The committee strikes out the words "outside the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand. The Chair understood that only the words "and traveling" were to be struck out.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Also the words "outside the District of Columbia," because those are not in the existing law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The words "outside the District of Columbia" should be struck out.

The SPEAKER. Is it agreed to strike out those words?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. By striking out those words we conform to the existing law.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care if we do. I will not agree to anything which will give these men a per diem while here in this city.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You have already agreed to conform to the existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. The clause should read:

For per diem when absent from home on duty.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] objects to the amendment which proposes to strike out the words "outside the District of Columbia."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But he can not object under the arrangement.

The SPEAKER. He can object, because this is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with certain amendments, and this amendment is not included in the motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the motion is that the bill shall conform to the present law.

The SPEAKER. When was that understood?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When the motion was first made that was the understanding.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] sent up a specific proposition to suspend the rules and pass the bill with certain amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And his motion includes the striking out of this language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He so stated a while ago.

The SPEAKER. The motion as sent to the desk does not so show.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The bill as now proposed to be passed has been framed to conform to the present law; and these words are not in the present law.

The SPEAKER. That may be so; but the Chair can only take what is before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment as intended to be sent up—and if it does not so appear there is simply a clerical error—was designed to make this paragraph read as follows:

For per diem, when absent from home on duty, &c.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is correct.
Mr. MATSON. That is the law as it is.
The SPEAKER. Does the gentlemen from Indiana state that in the bill which he sent up he proposed to strike out the words "outside the District of Columbia?"
Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; to make it read "for per diem when absent from home on duty."
Mr. CANNON. I hope that will not be done.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. But it is already done.
Mr. HOLMAN. That simply makes the clause conform to the law, according to the understanding. We can not vary from the understanding.
Mr. CANNON. Well, you are getting in under this "understanding" many objectionable things that can not be defended on the floor.
Mr. HOLMAN. But by the understanding we must make the bill conform to the existing law.
The Clerk proceeding to read, read the following:

In lines 2065 and 2066 strike out "outside the District of Columbia."

Mr. BLANCHARD. In lines 2065 and 2066, the words——
Mr. CANNON. I think there was a misunderstanding in regard to this matter.
The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will suspend for a moment. The Chair finds on examination that in the bill actually sent up by the gentleman from Indiana, in connection with the motion to suspend the rules, lines are drawn through the words "outside the District of Columbia."
Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is correct.
The SPEAKER. Hence that amendment is included in the motion to suspend the rules.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. That conforms to the present law.
Mr. HOLMAN. The words intended to be stricken out and inserted are these——
Mr. BLANCHARD. I thought the Speaker recognized me.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has charge of the bill.
Mr. HOLMAN. The words in the bill as reported to the House were "while absent from home and traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia."
The SPEAKER. That has been disposed of, and the House is at another place.
Mr. HOLMAN. The words intended to be stricken out as sent to the Clerk's desk are "outside of the District of Columbia."
The SPEAKER. That has already been done.
Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman from Indiana moved that in lines 2065 and 2066 the words "traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia" be stricken out, because they are not in the current law. The words "absent from home" have not been asked to be stricken out, although they are not in the current law. I ask they be included.
Mr. HOLMAN. What words are those?
Mr. BLANCHARD. "Absent from home."
Mr. HOLMAN. That language is in the present law.
Mr. BLANCHARD. I beg pardon.
Mr. HOLMAN. I will read:

Per diem when absent from home on duty.

The SPEAKER. The committee propose to strike out after the word "traveling."
Mr. BLANCHARD. The Speaker does not understand me. The words "absent from home" are not in the current law.
Mr. HOLMAN. Those words are not proposed to be stricken out.
Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask they be stricken out, as they are not in the current law.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. CANNON. I object.
Mr. BLANCHARD. I understood the gentleman from Indiana had brought in a bill which was to conform to existing law. That was what the gentleman from Indiana said to be his purpose.
The SPEAKER. The Chair can not be governed by what the gentleman from Indiana said was his purpose. He must be governed by the bill presented to the House, and that bill which he has sent up includes those words.
Mr. HOLMAN. If I can be permitted to have one minute I will make a statement. I admit the words to be stricken out are "while absent from home and traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia." But the truth is, the language of the law, when it comes to be examined carefully, is "while traveling on duty." Inasmuch as the effort has been made for many hours to get the exact language of the present statute, I ask, by unanimous consent, the words "while traveling on duty" be inserted.
Mr. BLANCHARD. They are in the law.
Mr. CUTCHEON. "While traveling on duty."
Mr. HOLMAN. The words "traveling on duty" have been struck out, and now if we will strike out the words "outside of the District of Columbia" it will conform to existing law.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask what languaage has been struck out?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has stated it. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendments.
Mr. STEELE. I notice there is a change in line 2092.
Mr. HOLMAN. I will state the bill is exactly in accordance with the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Interior.
Mr. STEELE. Under the heading of United States Patent Office you have cut off three copyists.
Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, there are some little increase and some little decreases.
The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.
Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, in line 2232 I see that there is a decrease of $7,000 for stationery in the Department of the Interior, including the civil service, &c.
Mr. RANDALL. The law heretofore provided that the Interior Department should supply the necessary stationery for the Civil Service Commission. It is changed in this provision.
Mr. HOLMAN. They are all combined here together in one item, in place of being separated, as heretofore.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.
Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as the surveyors-general and their clerks, beginning with line 2251 of the bill and going down to and including line 2367, are to be entirely stricken out and the provisions of the bill of the current year inserted without modification or change, I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with.
Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.
The SPEAKER. Then the Clerk will read the amendment.
The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.
When the office of surveyor-general of the Territory of Montana was reached,
Mr. TOOLE. I ask unanimous consent to make an amendment to this paragraph. I want to strike out the amount fixed here and insert another amount and make provision for a clerk. [Cries of "Regular order!"] And I think if the House will permit me to make a brief explanation there will be no objection to the request.
Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the gentleman's making a statement, but I do object to an increase of this item.
Mr. CANNON. How long does the gentleman want?
Mr. TOOLE. Not exceeding three minutes.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's being heard for three minutes? [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Clerk will proceed with the reading.
When the Clerk reached the provision making appropriations for the office of surveyor-general of Nevada,
Mr. MORROW. The present law provides $2,500 for Nevada.
Mr. HOLMAN. That is a mistake; there is a clerical error in the bill which the gentleman holds in his hands.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. The present law is only $1,800.
Mr. HOLMAN. That is correct.
The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.
When the provision for the office of the surveyor-general of Oregon was reached,
Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, by the Revised Statutes, section 2209, it is provided that the surveyors-general of Oregon and Washington shall each receive a salary of $2,500 per annum. I understand, according to the arrangement under which the House is now operating, and which the Speaker will recognize, it is provided that these appropriations we are considering shall conform to existing law. The amount that I have specified for these salaries is the existing law, and I ask the gentleman from Indiana why the salary of these officials has not been restored to what the law requires.
Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has the statute before him. For surveyor-general of Oregon, $1,800. That is the current law we are acting upon.
Mr. HERMANN. That is the language of the appropriation bill of last year.
Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; the current year.
Mr. HERMANN. I understand the rule to be that the appropriation should conform to the existing law.
Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; to the current law; the bill of the current year.
Mr. STEELE. Regular order.
Mr. HENLEY. There was a provision in the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations originally, by which the offices of the surveyors-general of California and Nevada were consolidated. I presume that is eliminated under the agreement?
Mr. HOLMAN. Of course; the law of last year is restored.
The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendent of free delivery, $2,500.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be made to conform to the provision of the bill as reported, and make this salary $3,000.
Mr. HOLMAN. There is an elimination of every increase, as the gentleman will see, and I will be compelled to object.

Mr. CANNON. I know; but I am endeavoring to do this by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman must see that if I accord this privilege in one case it will be expected in all others.

Mr. HALL. Owing to the confusion it is impossible to ascertain what the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reference here is to the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and the point in controversy is as to the compensation of the superintendent of the free delivery.

Mr. HALL. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALL. I make the point of order that under the arrangement by which we are proceeding the mere suggestion of the gentleman who has charge of the bill does not control the House, nor does not deprive the members of the right to be heard on that which is supposed to be existing law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is not controlling the House by virtue of his right as a member, but has introduced a motion which is pending, to suspend the rules and pass this bill with certain amendments. Those amendments are being read, and no other amendment can now be offered except by unanimous consent. But debate will be had upon the bill for one hour after the reading of the amendments.

Mr. HALL. I understand that arrangement had not been made.

The SPEAKER. There is no arrangement about it. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. HALL. The agreement under which the motion to suspend the rules was made was that the gentleman from Indiana would have the right to point out to the House, for the purpose of amendment, those points where the present bill does not conform to the last appropriation bill, and only a few moments ago the question was raised on another point of order that the arrangement under which the gentleman submitted his motion to suspend the rules did not deprive the House of the control of these amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information of such an arrangement.

Mr. HALL. What I want to call the attention of the Chair to is that there is an arrangement which will be conceded by the gentleman from Indiana himself.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Indiana has a motion pending, which was sent to the Clerk's desk, in the nature of a resolution to suspend the rules and pass the bill with certain amendments, and that is the only question before the House.

Mr. HALL. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to say if what I stated was not acceded to by him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not quite see the point my friend wishes to make. What does he wish to do?

Mr. HALL. I insist that this proposed amendment of this bill to make it conform to the last appropriation act is not in accordance with the laws which relate to and apply to the superintendent of the carrier system.

Mr. HOLMAN. Last night it was understood this bill should be made to conform to the present appropriation law.

Mr. HALL. I appeal to the record, which will show that that arrangement was not made. The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] rose and insisted that instead of the bill being made to conform to the current appropriation act it should be made to conform to existing law, to the permanent statutes; and that was acceded to.

The SPEAKER. If there has been any understanding on the floor in regard to that matter the Chair knows nothing of it; and if the gentleman from Indiana is not carrying out any understanding which was entered into it is in the power of the House to refuse to pass the bill. Meanwhile the Chair can not entertain motions to amend under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HALL. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALL. It is whether the proposition coming from the gentleman from Indiana is not in the nature of an amendment to amend the bill reported by the Appropriations Committee so as to make it conform to what he supposes to be the existing appropriation law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the gentleman from Indiana supposes. But that gentleman has offered a resolution to suspend the rules and pass the bill with certain specific amendments. Those are the only amendments before the House, and the only ones that can come before the House without unanimous consent.

Mr. HALL. I ask unanimous consent that the amount provided by the bill reported by the Appropriations Committee unanimously, allowing a salary of $3,000 to the Superintendent of the Free Delivery, may be allowed to stand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the sum of $3,000 be inserted. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not consent to that.

Several members called for the regular order.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 2400 strike out in the total, "$111,900," and insert "$110,900."

Mr. STEELE. I find at line 2398 there is a difference from the current law in which provision is made for one clerk of class 2, two clerks of class 1, and six clerks at $1,000 each. Those have been left out, and at that point in this bill provision is made for two clerks at $900 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those changes were made in conformity with the recommendations of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. STEELE. I notice that in line 2420 the word "female" after the word "two" is omitted, so that it now reads "two clerks" instead of "two female clerks," as it was in the bill of last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the restoration of that word, although its omission was by recommendation of the Department.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to insert the word "female."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARRY. I ask unanimous consent in line 2404 to strike out $2,000 and insert $2,500; so that it will read:

Chief of division of inspection, $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not consent to that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 8594) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate Mr. MAHONE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 2517) for the relief of the estate of Edwin T. Pilkenton, deceased;

An act (H. R. 5289) affirming the action of the President of the United States in annulling and revoking an order dismissing Martin H. McChesney from service in the armies of the United States, and honorably discharging said McChesney from said service;

An act (H. R. 2646) granting to the Kanawha and Ohio Railroad Company the right to lay its track through United States lock and dam property in the great Kanawha Valley, State of West Virginia;

An act (H. R. 8030) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the Territory of Dakota with certain sums for ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Territory, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 9339) granting the right of way to the Prescott and Arizona Central Railway Company across the Fort Whipple Barracks Military Reservation in Arizona;

An act (H. R. 10048) to authorize the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad to build its road across the Fort Meade Military reservation;

An act (H. R. 9446) for the relief of Robert W. Spang;

An act (H. R. 10353) for the relief of Andrew J. Edgerly;

An act (H. R. 228) for the relief of James Roach;

An act (H. R. 7996) for the relief of William J. Mulvey;

An act (H. R. 1173) to correct the record of Capt. Edmund G. Fechét;

An act (H. R. 2998) granting a pension to Henry Mericle;

An act (H. R. 6027) granting a pension to William McFadden;

An act (H. R. 6952) granting a pension to Charles Riddle;

An act (H. R. 8485) granting a pension to Isaac Askie;

An act (H. R. 10473) granting a pension to William Reddick;

An act (H. R. 10795) granting a pension to Elenor C. Ransom;

An act (H. R. 5345) for the relief of Mary J. Gilbert;

An act (H. R. 10091) for the construction of a stable for the use of the horses and wagons for the use of the offices of the House of Representatives;

An act (H. R. 7209) to authorize the construction of a graveled road to the Richmond National Cemetery, near Richmond, Va.;

An act (H. R. 8880) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.;

An act (H. R. 6764) to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss.;

An act (H. R. 5652) for the relief of James W. Goodrich;

An act (H. R. 4535) granting a pension to Adeliza Perry; and
An act (H. R. 10804) to effect a rearrangement of grades of officers in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Clerk contlnued the reading of the amendments, as follows:

In line 2428 strike out "four," where it last occurs, and insert "eight."
In line 2435 strike out "twenty-five hundred" and insert "three thousand."
In line 2440 correct the total, striking out "four" and inserting "nine."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, in line 2429, by some oversight last year, after the words "fifty-two," the word "female" was stricken out. I ask unanimous consent that that be restored.

Mr. CROXTON. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2473 strike out "two" and "fifty" and insert "one;" so that it will read two thousand one hundred.
In line 2490 strike out "two" and "seventy" and insert "one" and "twenty," making the total twenty-two thousand one hundred and twenty.
In lines 2541 and 2542 strike out "one assistant attorney in the Court of Claims, $2,000."
In line 2553, after the words "one thousand," insert the words "two hundred." Correct the total in line 2557.
In line 2621, after the word "dollars," insert "one clerk, $1,200."

Mr. STEELE. I notice that there are some changes in the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury. Last year there were four clerks of class 4——

Mr. HOLMAN. The change was made at the suggestion of the Solicitor of the Treasury.

The Clerk resumed the reading, as follows:

And, in lieu of the sum proposed in lines 2621 and 2622, insert "$30,040."

The SPEAKER. This completes the reading of the amendments.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the point of order I made last night to two items on page 39. I wish to let them stand as they are now in the bill.

The SPEAKER. There is no point of order pending.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I made one last night.

The SPEAKER. That was in Committee of the Whole, and on another bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Well, I ask unanimous consent that the point of order made by myself may be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. There is no point of order pending.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then I ask unanimous consent that the items on page 39 to which the point applied be left to stand as they are now in the bill—the salaries of the examiner and the computer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent to insert——

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the law had better be followed.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a clerical omission. In line 903 the word "deputy" is omitted, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted.

The SPEAKER. Those words were stricken out in the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has conformed the bill as he now offers it to that action of the committee. Under the arrangement heretofore made one hour will be allowed for debate, thirty minutes in support of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and thirty minutes in opposition to it. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, all that I desire in the way of debate is to have the statement read which I send to the desk. It is a very condensed statement of the changes made in the bill after the forty-seventh page, up to which, of course, the House is fully informed of the contents of the bill, and I trust that as the statement is read gentlemen will notice the exact effect of the changes.

The statement was read, as follows:

The changes on page 63 are in accordance with the wishes of General Holabird, the Quartermaster-General.
The changes appearing on pages 67, 68, and 69, relating to the contingent expenses of the War Department, furniture for the new west and center wings of the State, War, and Navy Building, the occupancy of said wings and for rent of buildings for the War Department offices are essential to be made consequent upon the completion of the building.
The increase from $34,000 to $35,000 on account of fuel, lights, repairs, &c., on page 71, for the State, War, and Navy Building, is neccessary in order to make some needed repairs of the Winder Building.
The reduction from $10,000 to $7,000 on account of United States maps, on page 81, is in accordance with the estimates. The changes as to the Patent Office are in accordance with the estimates, except the increase of the Assistant Commissioner's salary, which is stricken out.
On page 84 provision is made for additional clerks at pension agencies to the amount of $12,000, and for contingencies at said agencies $3,000. These increases are incident to the passage of the Mexican pension bill.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk to be read. It comes in on page 61, and relates to the Adjutant-General's Office.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 1,490 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-seven."
In line 1,491 strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty-nine."
In line 1,491 strike out "sixty-nine" and insert "seventy-five."
In line 1,492 strike out "fifty-nine" and insert "sixty-two."
In line 1,495 strike out "three" and insert "thirty-seven."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations had a long interview with the Adjutant-General, and the provisions of the bill were satisfactory to him.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have read a telegram received from the Adjutant-General's Office. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will proceed.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] made a motion last night to amend the bill in line 1076 so as to increase the appropriation for the expenses of enforcing the oleomargarine law, and, under the agreement, he understood that he was to have a vote in the House on that question to-day. In his behalf, I desire now to offer that amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. HOLMAN to suspend the rules and pass with amendments the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to occupy only a short time, and shall then yield to two or three gentlemen who desire to submit a few remarks upon this bill.

Under the Constitution the House originates revenue bills, and it has always claimed the power and the right, as a valuable one belonging to the direct representatives of the people, to originate the general appropriation bills; and I think rightfully so. Coming as we do every alternate year from the great body of the people, representing directly their desires and needs, it is right and proper that we should originate these bills, varying as the public service does from year to year, not only as to the clerical service in the Departments but the service throughout the length and breadth of our extended country that comes home to the people through the Post-Office Department, the Treasury, and all the other Departments by which the interests of sixty million people are affected.

Having said that much, I wish to say that this House by the passage of this bill in the form proposed throws aside voluntarily and studiously its power; because for now almost a day the yearning desire of members of this House has been, not to appropriate in this great bill according to the necessities of the Government, variable as they are, but to inquire what was done last year for the service of the present year, and to bring the service of the present year down to that standard. In other words, we propose now, under a suspension of the rules, with limited debate, to abdicate our power and present this bill to the Senate with our compliments, saying "We have shorn ourselves of our legitimate power under the Constitution and the traditions of the Government; and we send you a mere proposition to continue the service of the Government for another year as it is this year; please be kind enough, in the two days that are left, to take it up, digest it, change it, and make it as it ought to be; and then we shall be prepared to meekly bow the head and bend the back and accept your suggestions; you are wiser than we." That is the position in which this House practically places itself.

What folly to have taken two days in the consideration of the bill, and wandered through 107 pages—to do what? Literally, in this multitude of words in 107 pages, to do what could be done in five lines—to provide that the service of next year shall be as the service of this year. That is all there is of it. And it is, I undertake to say, not praiseworthy, but wasteful and extravagant to spread a great act like that in extenso among the session laws.

Why is this thing in this shape? I think I know some reasons why. Because in this House the great majority on the other side, with its divided leadership and its inefficiency, has not the cohesion and the power to originate and press to a successful conclusion this bill. And we stand confessing it before the country.

What next? In the bill as reported from the committee there are various propositions. I recollect that the Committee on Appropriations was empowered by instruction of the House, aliunde the rules, to inquire touching the abolition of certain officers in the Territories and States—the surveyors-general. There was one of these officers down in Florida, although there are no lands there to be surveyed, in fact, belonging to the United States, the State being entitled to every acre of land unsurveyed under the swamp act; one in Louisiana—fifteen of them altogether, scattered in all parts of the country.

The estimate for that service is $132,000, though, perhaps, with the exception of the States of California and Colorado and the Territory of New Mexico, there is no use at all for these officers, even if there is in those excepted places. Under that authority, the Committee on Appropriations provided in this bill for the abolition of these fifteen places, the estimated cost of which is $132,000 a year. But there comes the cry of the lateness of the session, the cry that we might, in passing this bill, merely repeat the current law; and under that pressure this motion to suspend the rules that proper reduction and needed reform are taken out of the bill. Why? Was it necessary? I say no. The amount expended last year in the survey of the public lands under contracts which were let by these fifteen surveyors-general was $4,000. That is the value of the work performed by your $132,000 worth of office-holders, fifteen in number, supplemented by a corps of clerks and other officers scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land. What has been the actual expenditure for this work during the present year? As I recollect, about $13,000.

All this great machinery to do a specific work, all this expense being incurred, yet the work not being done! I want you of the majority to take the consequences of your act. I think much of the opposition and much of the delay in the consideration of this bill was to try to get the matter in such a shape somehow or other that you could retain that patronage and let your fifteen Democratic office-holders with a corps of clerks, &c., scattered throughout the different States and Territories still suck the public teat, still fold their arms and do nothing for another year but draw their salaries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to yield to several gentlemen. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had the control of thirty minutes, and has occupied eight.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan three minutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I have offered contemplates the increase of the clerical force in the Office of the Adjutant-General by the addition of two clerks of the fourth class, four clerks of the third class, six clerks of the second class, and thirteen clerks of the first class.

I offer this amendment in conformity with the following telegram from the Adjutant-General, received this morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. B. M. CUTCHEON:

In reply to your letter of February 28, I beg to say that in a special report made yesterday to the Secretary of War, I represented the urgent necessity of adding twenty-five clerks to my present clerical force, to be classified as follows: Two of class 4; four of class 3; six of class 2; and thirteen of class 1; and added a recommendation that as the necessity was immediate, the additional force be made available from the passage of the law, and that the latter provide for the compensation of the clerks for the balance of the present fiscal year.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The circumstances which have rendered this increase of clerical force necessary arise from the passage of the act relative to the muster and pay of certain officers and men of the volunteer forces, following:

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," approved June 3, 1884.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1 of "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," approved June 3, 1884, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

That the joint resolution approved July 11, 1870, entitled "Joint resolution amendatory of joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army," approved July 26, 1866, is hereby so amended and shall be so construed that in all cases arising under the same any person who was duly appointed and commissioned, whether his commission was actually received by him or not, shall be considered as commissioned to the grade therein named from the date from which he was to take rank under and by the terms of his said commission, and shall be entitled to all pay and emoluments as if actually mustered at that date: Provided, That at the date from which he was to take rank by the terms of his commission there was a vacancy to which he could be so commissioned and that he was actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was so commissioned, or, if not so performing such duties, then from such time after the date of his commission as he may have actually entered upon such duties: And provided further, That any person held as a prisoner of war, or who may have been absent by reason of wounds or in hospital by reason of disability received in the service in the line of duty, at the date of his commission, if a vacancy existed for him in the grade to which so commissioned, shall be entitled to the same pay and emoluments as if actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was commissioned and actually mustered at such date: And provided further, That this act and the resolution hereby amended shall be construed to apply only in those cases where the commission bears date prior to June 20, 1863, or after that date when their commands were not below the minimum number required by existing laws and regulations: And provided further, That the pay and allowances actually received shall be deducted from the sums to be paid under this act.

Approved February 3, 1887.

This act I had the honor to introduce in the first session of this Congress, and it was considered on the 4th of May last and passed by this House on the third day of the present session.

The Adjutant-General has advised me that in his judgment the number of cases arising under this act will amount to between forty thousand and fifty thousand. This act is amendatory to the act of June 3, 1884, which provided that volunteer officers should take rank and pay from the date of the actual issue of their commissions by competent authority. This act provides that they shall be considered as mustered and shall be entitled to pay thereunder from the date from which they were to rank by the terms of their commissions.

I am informed by the Adjutant-General, in a communication received on Saturday last, that the office is now engaged in adjudicating claims filed in the month of October, 1884. In other words, in two years and eight months the office has succeeded in passing upon the claims filed during the first four months under the act of June 3, 1884.

It is to meet this state of facts that I have offered this amendment, in order that these claims may be passed upon, and these volunteer officers may receive what is justly due them under the law. I submit to the House that it is a practical denial of the rights of these officers under the law not to provide the necessary clerical force to adjudicate their claims.

These men are getting old. Many of them are poor and in need of what is justly their due.

This act gives them no more than the pay which has been their due for more than twenty years for services actually performed for the Government; and yet, when I offer this amendment to provide the means of adjusting their claims, I am met by an objection which prevents its consideration.

How much longer must they wait? As we are passing this bill under suspension of the rules, I can do no more than utter my most earnest protest against the continuance of this injustice, and that I now do.

Mr. Speaker, we passed this morning the appropriation for the payment of pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war, amounting to more than $4,000,000.

This gratuity goes to men who served but sixty days—some of them—men who, if over sixty-two years of age, are suffering under no disability—a service pension. I put that in contrast with the refusal on the same day to respond to the recommendation of the Adjutant-General to provide the absolutely needful clerical assistance for the adjudication of the claims of the officers of the late war.

They have already waited many years, and must still wait for years for the justice that is now denied them.

Mr. CANNON. I yield for three minutes and a half to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect, in the brief time allowed me, to discuss the merits of this bill. I do not rise for that purpose, but to protest against the vicious methods by which we are called upon to pass it through the House.

It is the same old issue. We had it at the end of the Forty-eighth Congress. We had the sundry civil bill pushed through under suspension of the rules without opportunity to read it, without opportunity to know what was in it—under the whip and spur that unless we did so we must have an extra session of Congress.

All this comes from the fact that one committee of this House attempts to become the monarch of the House—to represent not only the districts which have sent its members here, but also to represent, or rather misrepresent, the country, and leave the remainder of the House, so far as these bills are concerned, these important bills, these bills which should have the most deliberate consideration, to accept its dictum and represent no one.

The country itself became tired of this thing, and, inspired by the sentiment of the people, at the beginning of this Congress we adopted a rule providing that there should be no legislation on appropriation bills. But our friends on that side, like all men who have had power and do not like to let it go, have reported to this House at this late day a bill legislating in almost every section from beginning to end, and on that account subject to more than a hundred points of order.

I believe where salaries are fixed by law there is only one thing for an appropriation committee to do, and that is to appropriate the money which the law provides the officer should have. Anything beyond that is not within its jurisdiction; it is to give it the power to raise or decrease salaries in an indirect way when it is for Congress alone to do that.

But they say in excuse that Congress will not do it, that they can not secure the passage of bills to decrease salaries, hence this indirect mode of attempting it. Is this not a fine excuse to make. Congress will not do what they desire, the representatives of the people will not do it, and therefore they propose to usurp the power and do it themselves.

If a collector of customs's salary provided by law be $5,000, they appropriate $4,000 or $4,500. To the incumbent of the office, what does that involve? A suit at law in the Court of Claims for the amount due him. It involves a lawsuit for the Government, a lawsuit which will be costly to the Government as well as to the claimant, although it professes to be done in the interest of economy and reform. Or if the claimant, he whom the Government has promised in its laws a certain sum for his services, which this committee refuses to appropriate, has not the money or the courage to prosecute his suit, then this committee causes him to lose a part of his just and legal dues, and this it pretends to do in the interest of economy, to say nothing of honesty.

But this bill, as it was reported and attempted, last Saturday evening, to be forced through the House, without opportunity of amendment, under the suspension of the rules, was not intended to give any person injured by its provisions an opportunity to find a remedy in the Court of Claims, or anywhere else. It provided in its first section that the compensations thereinafter fixed should be "in full compensation" for the services rendered.

This was a clear, undisputed attempt at legislation wherever compensation for services was changed. It was a deliberate attempt on the part of those reporting the bill to violate the rules of the House and to usurp that power of legislating upon appropriation bills of which the Appropriations Committee were shorn in the early part of the first session of this Congress by the representatives of the people.

But the plan did not succeed. Seeing that a considerable portion of the bill would be ruled out upon points of order, the gentleman in charge of the bill consented to have those words stricken out, and now the committee finds itself in the humiliating situation of having attempted to act in contempt of the rules of the House and usurp a power which it knew did not belong to it, and making a sorry failure in this questionable enterprise.

It has succeeded in some things, however. It has forced the House to consider this and other great bills appropriating millions of dollars without any opportunity to study them and give to them due deliberation. It has succeeded in holding back these bills which have the right of way in the House as weapons with which to attack and overthrow any legislation which might in the mean time be called up for consideration and which might not be entirely to the liking of these gentlemen. It has succeeded in occupying almost entirely the last six days of Congress which are suspension days, and of depriving many wholesome bills and just claims of a hearing in this House, but it has not succeeded in leaving itself in an enviable situation.

At the commencement of the first session of this Congress I introduced a rule requiring the Appropriations Committee, and all committees having appropriation bills in charge, to report within a limited time.

The purpose of that rule was to have these bills early considered, deliberately considered and disposed of, so as to leave the road open for other legislation. That rule failed to receive a majority of the votes of the House, and we are to-day suffering the consequences of its defeat. I hope that when the Fiftieth Congress shall assemble the rules will be so amended as to remedy all this trouble. While I have no hard words to speak, personally, of the gentlemen who control this great committee, I believe they should not have the power, whether usurped or not, to make themselves the imperial commanders of the House.

Every Congressional district in this broad land has the right to equal representation on this floor. The people desire fair dealing here; that their business should be done in an open, business-like way, without any favoritism to any one. When they through their representatives enacted laws they expect them to be obeyed as scrupulously by the highest and strongest as well as the weakest and poorest of our citizens. They do not believe in and will not long consent to the usurpation of their rights, whether they still hold them in their own hands or have intrusted them to others whom they have chosen to represent them; and they will as emphatically condemn and as severely rebuke the one-man power attempted, too often successfully, to be exercised over the legislation in this House, which is their legislation, as they would frown upon any other disregard of the laws.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve the remainder of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. If no other gentleman desires to be heard the Chair will submit the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. I yield eleven minutes of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at the silence of the gentleman from Indiana. His silence throughout this debate has been one of the most marked circumstances connected with it. I had intended the other day to point out the facts connected with this bill, but I refrained from doing it in order that his silence, his only reply to the well-deserved rebuke of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], should be as heavily accented as it deserved to be.

At the beginning of this session the Republican party assisted, with a generosity that was as distinguished as it was patriotic, in making all the changes in the rules which were deemed necessary to give to this Democratic House a plain course to run and be glorified, if glory turned out to be their vocation. The Committee on Appropriations was relegated to its duty of bringing before the House the appropriations for the sustenance of the Government. They were also relieved from a large portion of their labor because of scenes similar to those which have been exhibited during the last three days, although not to such a discreditable extent.

With all of the advantages which these gentleman had, it is amazing to look at the results. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], in a manner that must have arrested the attention of this House, declined, after stating that this bill was presented on the 3d of February, to state when interrogated when they presented it for consideration, thus endeavoring to palm off upon this House, instead of the vital fact, an immaterial matter which they knew interested nobody; and I do not wonder at their repeated want of recollection, because it was not until the 22d day of February that the gentleman from Indiana came feebly to the front with an effort in regard to his bill, and then only in opposition to another appropriation bill, in which effort he did not receive the support but the opposition of his colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]; so that it rests a fact here in the last days of this session, after having—for I will not confine my censure to the Committee on Appropriations—after having dawdled away twelve days on the diplomatic bill, it was only in these last days of the session that this bill of 107 pages is brought here before the House for its consideration.

Now, the business of this country ought to be conducted in an orderly fashion with reference to the rights of the co-ordinate powers. We claim the right to originate appropriation bills, and claim it well, as has been fully shown by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. We claim it because we are fresh from the people; because we are spending the people's money; but yet year after year witnesses the spectacle of a practical abnegation of the very claim which we make with so loud a flourish of trumpets, and so much of affection for the "dear people" we represent. Nor are we content with that, for, after shearing ourselves by our own action of the right of examining the accounts of this nation, we also attempt to shear the co-ordinate body, the Senate of the United States, of their equal right to examine the items of expenditure for this Government, and not only that but you apply the same rule to the President, the President of your own choosing.

I appeal to this House, in order that this event may make somewhat more than a temporary impression upon us, and upon the country, to think of what has been done. I am willing to make all reasonable allowances for the nature of a body like this, for its moods of temper, its moods of recalcitrancy, its disposition to take rude methods to rebuke any suggestion of injustice or any semblance of unfairness.

But every man here knows those moods, for every man must understand, at least to a certain extent, the temper of this body, and it is one of the great facts which members in charge of appropriation bills ought to take into account here, and not deceive themselves by failing to pay attention to it. They ought to bring forward bills of such a character as not to demand what has been twice repeated to-day, the abdicating of all the powers of the House to examine the items, and thus compel a passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules with no such examination or consideration as the Constitution contemplates and as the people demand. And why have we done this?

Have we neglected the grand audit of the accounts of the nation on account of the noble things we have otherwise done? Time fails me to speak of the noble achievements of "both wings" of the Democratic party upon the tariff, one of them convulsed with sorrow because of the sufferings of the people under tariff taxation, shouting for free trade, and the other by pretense of protection preparing at the next election a shield for the Democratic party against the charge of free trade and against the honest indignation of the people of the United States which would wipe them out if they did not put in front as hostages or as prisoners of war always the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the others who follow him. [Laughter and applause.] What other great achievements have we to record? Here is a defenseless country, a country without the power to protect itself from assault, a country without a gun that could reach one-third of the distance of those that may be brought against us; a fair opportunity offered by the generosity of this side of the House to place in their control the expenditure of large sums of money for the defense of the country—money for a Navy, money for fortifications, and money for guns—and they deliberately refuse to avail themselves of the proffer, but vote it down; and they not only deliberately vote it down but they sneeringly "assume the responsibility." [Applause on the Republican side.]

What other great achievements have thus thrust aside the appropriation bills? You all know that as to a bill of particulars as to what has been done. A suspension of the rules, of criticism, no second, and a quick passage would be the most appropriate thing, and also much more soothing to the other side than a discussion of what they have done.

Nor is it alone, I repeat, the Appropriations Committee. But it is the other committees controlled by that side of the House charged with the duty of making appropriations. With one or two exceptions the other bills seem to have been managed in somewhat the same fashion.

Now, I submit to the House that this thing ought to cease; that in some way by our action we ought to show that we do not intend that the last days of the session shall be spent in registering the edicts of a few committees, but that the House of Representatives itself, in its entirety, representing all the people of the United States, shall not be deprived of that voice in the affairs of the country which the Constitution and the good sense of the people demand. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. CANNON. I reserve it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman not wish to occupy that time?

Mr. CANNON. I reserve it.

Several MEMBERS. Let us vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Time is quite valuable, and I have to request that the vote be taken on the pending motion. I wish to say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] he scolds very well; but I could find fish-women in this town that could beat him at that game.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. REED. Three minutes remain to this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who controlled the time on that side did not claim it, and the Chair was proceeding to put the question.

Mr. REED. It was reserved.

The SPEAKER. It was reserved, but nobody took the floor to occupy it.

Mr. REED. I took the floor the moment I heard what the gentleman from Indiana said. I want to reply to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is recognized.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Indiana—and I take his word for it—says he knows fish-women in this town who could make a better scold than I am. I admit the fact, and also congratulate him on the congeniality of his associations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 138, noes 44.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 31 members voting therefor—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the rules were suspended (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), and the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TAXATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. MORRISON. I call up the conference report which I presented on Saturday last, the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of gallons of distilled spirits.

The report and accompanying statement by the House conferees, which were printed in the RECORD of last Saturday's proceedings, were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I observe that the bill which went into conference was not read. Is there objection to the reading of the bill upon which the report was made?

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection to that. Let the original bill and amendments be read.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 4833) as passed by the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The Clerk has not read the Senate amendments. It is really the sum and substance of what this report is based upon.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, which were printed in the RECORD of Saturday's proceedings.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise for the purpose of raising the question of consideration.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire at the proper time to submit a point of order against the consideration of this bill in the House. I conceive I ought to postpone that point of order until after the House has passed upon the motion whether it will consider the conference report or not, but I should like to reserve my right to make the point of order at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. That can be done either now or after the question of consideration is disposed of.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I intend to do it then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House proceed now to consider the report of the committee of conference?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 73, noes 84.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 49 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 143, not voting 75; as follows:

Mr. MORRISON. I object. We have plenty of time.

The Clerk recapitulated the names.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. WHITING for the rest of the day.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HALE with Mr. WADE.

So the House refused to consider the bill.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. LONG.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. GILFILLAN.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. CONGER. Mr. MATSON would vote for the conference report, Mr. CONGER against it.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 8594) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

NON-INTERCOURSE WITH CANADA.

Mr. BELMONT. I rise to make a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate 3173, to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishing men, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask that the statement of the House conferees be read.

The statement was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The undersigned, managers of the conference on the part of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, &c., submit the following statement:

The unanimity expressed in the Senate and the House, respectively, had given the managers on the part of the House every reason to hope that, by mutual concessions, an agreement would be reached in conference which would result in giving such ample authority to the President as might be necessary for a satisfactory settlement of the pending question of the American fisheries on the Canadian coast. It is, therefore, with the deepest regret and disappointment they are compelled to report a disagreement.

The managers on the part of the House entered the conference with the determination that no minor difference should stand in the way of an agreement. They proposed, in order to remove all question on the part of the Senate conferees as to violation of the treaty of 1871, to insert in line 21 of the amended bill, after the word "Newfoundland," as follows:

"Except such goods, wares, and merchandise as are entitled to enter the United States under Article XXIX of the treaty concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 8th day of May, 1871, and may also forbid the entrance of any locomotive, car, or other vehicle, with any goods that may be contained therein, except such as are wholly loaded with and exclusively engaged in the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise entitled to come into the United States under said Article XXIX."

This amendment was not accepted, and it became evident that no proposition that included cars and rolling-stock in the operation of the law would be acceptable to the Senate conferees. The unanimous voice of the House authorizing the President to declare, in his discretion, non-intercourse with Canada by land as well as by sea, did not, in the opinion of your conferees, leave them at liberty to disregard that important principle contained in the House substitute for the Senate bill They therefore declined to recede in conference from the position taken by the House on this point.

The dignified, deliberate, and earnest maintenance of our national rights under treaty stipulations, under public commercial laws and ordinary international comity, is the sole object of the United States. If these rights have been impaired and invaded, and redress, when properly asked for, has been refused, or not accorded, then self-respect as a nation and a sense of duty to our citizens should compel the people of the United States to act as a unit in adopting such measures as will restore the rights of their citizens. If a suspension of commercial intercourse be asserted as the remedy for the withholding of commercial privileges, such suspension should be co-extensive with the attainment of the desired end, and would be useless, or worse, if it fell short of that.

To limit such non-intercourse to a single article of commerce, or to a single mode of communication, would not be just in theory nor adequate in practice. The act of exclusion to be successful should be effective and unmistakable in its extent and results. The opinions which have found expression in the Senate bill, and which have been reflected in the conference, would limit the action of the Government to a prohibition upon the importation of Canadian fish into the United States. The House conferees are of opinion that, if such a prohibitory law be deemed sufficient for a settlement of important political questions as to American rights under treaty stipulations, the obvious and proper method would be to pass a tariff enactment to that effect.

The question to be legislated upon is national in its aspects and not sectional or local. It is not the article fish we are to consider, but the rights of our citizens under international law and our treaties with Great Britain. The rights of the fishermen are national rights, and the whole nation is concerned in resisting their destruction or diminution. It is not the profit or loss of the fishing business that is in question, but the right to fish, to navigate and to trade that is at stake. The establishment of non-intercourse by railroad might possibly inflict hardship upon some of our citizens, but your conferees are unwilling to believe that private interests will be placed above the maintenance of the honor and dignity of the country.

The settlement of the pending question rests between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain. It will continue to be a recurring source of irritation, annoyance, and even danger, so long as it is permitted to remain in the condition of a dispute between our fishermen and the Canadian authorities. The action of the administration has been directed to accommodate all differences and to procure an amicable, just, and honorable settlement. To such overtures no reply has yet been made, although since December 3, 1886, a proposition looking to such an adjustment, which we had been invited to make, has been in the hands of the British Government.

If Great Britain will join in a just and reasonable interpretation of the treaty of 1818 with the United States there will be no difficulty; but should that government continue to sustain its provinces in a misuse of the provisions of that treaty we must prevent it. Non-intercourse applied to essential lines of British railway traffic would be more effective than confining our action to the exclusion of fish alone, which is the sum and substance of the Senate bill.

We deal with Great Britain not Canada, and our measures should be begun with that view and with a determination to continue them until just action is arrived at.

PERRY BELMONT.
J. C. CLEMENTS.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BELMONT. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. RICE. I desire to make a motion which I believe takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. There is no question now that can come before the House except this conference report. After it is disposed of, motions will be in order.

Mr. RICE. This is not the report of the conferees, Mr. Speaker. It is simply a statement made by two gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is a report of a disagreement, and is signed by the managers on the part of the Senate as well as by the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RICE. It is not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is mistaken, but the Chair will examine. [After examining the paper.] This report is signed by the managers on the part of the Senate as well as by the managers on the part of the House. The statement which has just been read, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] probably refers, has been read in the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], and is no part of the report.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, the action which has been taken in regard to this statement was, in the opinion of those who have signed it, a necessity because of the course of the conferees acting for the body at the other end of the Capitol. I do not know how far it is proper to refer here to the action of the Senate, but it is a matter of public notoriety that a report was made by the Senate conferees from which it appeared that there were irreconcilable differences between the Senate and the House. Such is the language of the report made for the information of the Senate.

The majority of the conference committee on the part of the House regret exceedingly that the gentlemen representing the other body should have reached the conclusion that our differences are irreconcilable. It may be so; but as they have made such a statement in a report to the Senate it seemed but right that we, the majority of the conference committee on the part of the House, should make to this body a statement of our grounds of difference. We do not say that our differences are irreconcilable; but we declare that we do not feel at liberty to disregard the expressed will of the House—a will expressed unanimously.

It may be that some gentlemen who have presented views on this question believe that the limit upon the action of Congress should be established by the citizens injured; in other words, that we should limit our action in accordance with the wishes and interests of our fellow-citizens in New England and of the fishermen who have been injured. But your conferees have been of the opinion that the House of Representatives, as shown by its vote, believed this to be a purely national question, not a question to be decided by a retaliatory measure, which should have effect upon a particular product and a particular locality only. We have not believed that in response to Canadian aggressions we should do something not clearly defined, unless it be a prohibition of the entrance of fish from Canada to the United States, for such, with the exception of certain provisions of doubtful interpretation, is the chief purpose of the Senate bill.

Congress never would have taken the step it has taken in this matter had this not been regarded as solely a national question. Otherwise we might have similar action demanded by other sections of the country. If the limit of our action should be decided by the views of the persons injured it might be that our fellow-citizens upon the Mexican border would, through their representatives in Congress, demand that a discretion be given to the President to declare a certain limited non-intercourse in regard to Mexican imports which came in conflict with Texan products. It might be that our friends from California might deem it necessary to give to the President certain discretionary power to declare a limited non-intercourse as to a special class of persons coming to this country.

But, as shown in the statement of a majority of the conferees, which has been read, your conferees have felt it their duty to insist upon the position taken by the House. Any other course would have been considered by them a failure, not only in the appreciation of the dignity of the House itself but of the international importance of the pending controversy between the United States and Great Britain.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this report follow the same course that has been adopted in the Senate. I know no reason why the report of the Senate conferees should have been published in the RECORD unless the same privilege can be granted to the House conferees. Furthermore, the report in the Senate is to be printed as a document; and I ask the same privilege for the House report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, if the gentleman by the term "report" means to refer to the paper which has been signed by two of the managers on the part of the House, that has been read as a part of the debate, and goes into the RECORD as a matter of course.

Mr. BELMONT. So I understand, Mr. Speaker; but the report of the Senate conferees is also to be printed separately as a document.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BELMONT. My request is that the report read here take the same course as the report in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks, as the Chair understands, that it be printed as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. RICE and others objected.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is it that the gentleman desires to have printed, his argument or the report?

The SPEAKER. The paper which was read; not the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. The speech.

The SPEAKER. There is only one report. That is the paper signed by the managers on the part of both the House and the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no objection to the report being printed; but the proposition to print the speech of the gentleman as a document is entirely out of the usual course.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] objects to the request. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] reserve his time?

Mr. BELMONT. I do.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, at this late period in the session, when within a little more than sixty hours the hands of the clock will mark the end of the Forty-ninth Congress, I am very sorry to be obliged to ask the attention of the wearied and overworked members of the House for a few moments on this subject. But the question is one whose importance is sufficient to justify me in the request I make, that I may have the careful attention of gentlemen for a short time only; for I am unwilling to weary them.

Mr. Speaker, the gravity of this subject is admitted by all. The American honor is at stake; there is no question about that. The rights of a large class of our citizens, as we believe and affirm, have been trenched upon and outraged. There is no question about that. We are now in the last days of the session, and have done nothing to vindicate the honor of the nation and the rights of our citizens. What is our position at this moment? There has been a declaration—so the chairman of the committee informs us—that there was an irreconcilable difference between the conferees of the Senate and those of the House in reference to this matter. Four hours on Saturday and three on Monday the conferees were engaged in discussion; and I agree in the statement that an irreconcilable difference was manifested between the representatives in conference of the two Houses.

What is that difference? Let me say this, Mr. Speaker: there was no difficulty in agreeing on all minor questions of phraseology of slight amendments. The Senate conferees were ready to agree to what the House conferees requested on those points. There was but one material difference, only one, and that one difference was as to including cars and locomotives in the proposed exclusion. That point the Senate had voted against after solemn discussion in their first debate, and it was considered here somewhat in our debate.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] has said in the statement which he and my friend from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] have signed, and which has just been read, that the Senate bill excludes nothing but fish, or authorizes the President to exclude nothing but Canadian fish from this country. This statement they took from the morning papers, where I read it some hours ago, and this mistake had somehow crept into this statement. The Senate bill does not simply authorize the President to exclude Canadian fish from the American market, but to exclude all and every product of Canada from the American market. The gentlemen have fallen into that mistake by copying the statement from the morning papers without a sufficiently careful examination by themselves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill authorizes the President, upon certain conditions, at his discretion, to exclude from the American market all Canadian products and from American ports all Canadian vessels. That is the Senate bill. The House bill goes just one step farther, but that a long one, and authorizes the President, under the same conditions, in addition to exclude from this country all cars, rolling-stock, locomotives, and railroad trains coming from Canada. In addition to his authority to exclude all Canadian products and all Canadian vessels, my friend, the chairman of this committee, and his colleague from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], ask this House, or this Congress, also to authorize him to exclue all rolling-stock and railroad cars coming from Canada into this country; in other words, to proclaim absolute non-intercourse between the two countries. That is the difference.

Mr. DANIEL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RICE. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the theory of having cars if we are to exclude everything from them? In other words, if goods are to be excluded by the Senate proposition—and he says the only difference is as to cars—why does the gentleman want to insist cars should come in if there is to be nothing for them to carry?

Mr. RICE. If the gentleman had listened to the debate, or investigated the subject under consideration when it was discussed in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, he would understand it. In these cars, which pass between the two countries by Article XXIX of the treaty of Washington, goods in bond are carried from ports of both countries through sections of the other and returned into those countries.

Mr. DANIEL. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. RICE. I have not got through yet. More than that, these cars carry passengers. They carry men having business in one country to the other, back and forth. They carry persons having relatives and acquaintances. They carry much else than mere goods or produce of Canada, which we would authorize the President to exclude. The gentleman will answer his questions in his own time—the rest of them.

Now, that is the difference. To this proposition of the House conferees to extend this exclusion to everything between Canada and the United States, the Senate conferees state absolutely and positively, "No; we will go as far as the fishermen and their representatives have suggested; we will agree to exclude from this country all Canadian produce, but when you ask us to authorize the President to declare absolute non-intercourse between this country and Canada we say, no."

That is where the division, the irreconcilable difference between the conferees of the Senate and the House occurs. They said no, when asked to declare absolute non-intercourse. They say that is the last step before war. They are unwilling to take that step. They desire to adopt first those measures which are clearly within our treaty obligations, to do which is clearly within the rights of comity between the two nations; that is to say, "You have kept our vessels out of your ports, we will keep your vessels out of ours. We will keep your fish and other products out of our markets." That is what the fishermen and those interested in that industry ask; that is what the representatives of these interests ask, and which they and we say is sufficient, and we refuse to take that further step you insist we shall take.

I am not going to weary the House by the discussion of this question. The Senate is willing to go on a certain line of policy to an extent which it is deemed by those best fitted to know will answer all the necessities of the occasion.

The House is willing to go to the same extent upon the same line, but demands that another step shall be taken in advance which the Senate absolutely refuses to take. Now the question is for this House to say whether because we can not have all and everything that we ask, because we can not get to the extremest point of our desires shall we do nothing?

That is the question before us at this moment. That is the question upon which somebody is to take the responsibility of action. Shall this Congress adjourn having done nothing, or shall it recede from this amendment to the Senate bill and take that which, in the judgment of those best fitted to know, will be sufficient to accomplish the desired result.

Mr. Speaker, this is a grave and important question. Somebody will be very much blamed if Congress refuses to act upon it. I do not know what are the motives that have actuated my fellow-conferees in this matter, nor need I discuss them. There have been publications in the papers which I have read to the effect that the chairman of the committee has certain instructions or communications from the administration or from the State Department, under which he is acting. I can not believe that that is true, for although the Secretary of State was called upon by the subcommittee for his opinion in this matter, yet so far as I am aware that opinion has not been given. It certainly was never communicated to the committee.

I desire to disabuse any person of the idea of any such influence upon the action of the committee. Surely if any communication of that character from the Secretary of State had been received it would have been communicated to the committee and we should all have had the advantage of the information. The statement just read also stated—and it is so stated in the report of the committee—that negotiations are going on between this Government and that of Great Britain which it is hoped will speedily solve all difficulties. From the minority of the committee any information of such negotiations has been withheld.

We know nothing of any communication from the Secretary of State; we know nothing of any negotiations pending between the two governments as reported. If the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, has any light which the rest of us have not obtained, I will not, as old Diogenes is said to have asked Alexander, request him to get out of my light, but I will ask him to let a little of his superior light shine upon me, that I may be guided in my action by what he may communicate.

Now, sir, all the members of this House, and both sides of it, stand upon exact equality in this matter. We are all interested alike. There is no partisanship in it. The men who want this protection are members of all parties, and they ask from all parties the passage of this measure. In the Senate there is no party division. Republican and Democratic conferees stood alike; the conferee, the Senator from Alabama, the senior member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, was as strong, as earnest, and as uncompromising in his refusal to accede to the request of the House conferees as any other member of the conference. So that here only is there a suggestion of division upon party grounds in this matter.

I call upon the members of this House to rise above all party considerations and take action here which will sustain the administration in the manly, able, and patriotic position it has taken upon this subject. I call upon them not to be led away by any party or personal appeals or influences from taking such action at this critical moment as is demanded. We are told, and we know it, that should this Congress adjourn without action it is probable blood will flow along the borders and will stain the waters in contention before another Congress shall meet.

Does my friend from New York desire that that shall follow, and therefore would he omit to do that by which this nation may be prevented from being led into a war with Great Britain? I trust not. Does he desire to omit that which national honor demands should be done and which the interest of the fisheries demands should be done? I hope not. New York, the imperial State, which sends him here, has too much at stake. She runs all along the lake line. Her great metropolis fronts the ocean, and is exposed to the first attack of war, come from whencesoever it may; and I call upon him to remember the words of that great statesman of New England, whose magnetic words were wont to echo in yonder halls, the mightiest ever heard within them, that wise men sometimes change their opinion; the strongest oak sometimes sways, the greatest wisdom sometimes retreats from an extreme point which it desires but can not attain; and I ask the gentleman from New York, in view of the necessities of the case, in view of the emergencies by which we are surrounded, to withdraw his opposition to the Senate bill and let us have that measure of relief.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move, as I believe it is a motion having precedence at this stage of the question, that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate bill and concur in the same; and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order at the proper time.

Mr. BELMONT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has forty minutes of his time remaining.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory, requested a conference on the disagreeing votes thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLATT, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. BUTLER managers on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1449) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry B. Jay;

A bill (H. R. 3600) for the removal of the charge of desertion from John Rockwell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (S. 3353) granting an increase of pension to David L. Pool.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is now long after the usual hour for adjournment; and I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the pending bill [Mr. BELMONT] whether he will not consent that it may go over until to-morrow. We were in the House yesterday over fifteen hours, and we have been here since 10 o'clock to-day, and it is now half past 5.

Mr. BOUTELLE, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Let us finish this.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances and on account of the lateness of the hour I make the motion that the House now adjourn.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get in a conference report, which will occupy but a minute.

The SPEAKER. There is a conference report now before the House.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will withhold his report for a moment I will ask unanimous consent that a recess be taken until half past seven this evening, the evening session to be for the consideration of bridge bills not objected to.

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

Mr. CRISP. I hope gentlemen will not object. I will withdraw any bill that is objected to.

Mr. DANIEL. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks unanimous consent that a recess be now taken until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

Mr. DUNN. With the understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the Memphis bridge bill is not to be considered, I shall not object.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if I could to get the bill considered that I have been pressing here industriously for several months past, but it has been found that one man upon this floor and the Committee on Appropriations have been allowed to exclude all but their favorite measures from consideration. Nevertheless, in order not to stand here like a dog in the manger, I will not object. [Cries of "Good!" "Good!"]

Mr. STRUBLE. The understanding is that the bills to be considered at the evening session are those upon the Calendar and none others?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Bills for the construction of bridges only?

Mr. CRISP. Bridge bills only.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And the understanding is that no business is to be transacted but the consideration of bridge bills?

The SPEAKER. That is what the order means.

A MEMBER. No suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. No suspension of the rules, and no other business than bridge bills.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And no conference reports?

The SPEAKER. No. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The order, then, is that the House now take a recess until half past 7 o'clock; the evening session to be for the consideration of bills authorizing the construction of bridges unobjected to by any member upon the floor, not including what is known as the Memphis bridge bill, and that there shall be no other business transacted and no suspensions of the rules.

The House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7.30 p. m., Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1887.

Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session this evening, under the special order made this afternoon, for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Commerce of bills to authorize the construction of bridges.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COOSA RIVER.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3853) to authorize the Talladega and Coosa Railroad Company of Alabama to erect a bridge across the Coosa River, with the Senate amendments thereto.

The amendments are mostly formal, the only substantial amendment being, according to my recollection, a change in the phraseology of the right to amend. I ask that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 9858) to authorize the Louisiana North and South Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River, in Louisiana, and I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COOSA—EAST AND WEST RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 34) to authorize the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River, and I ask that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE GREAT KANAWHA.

Mr. CRISP. I call up Senate bill 3039, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same. The House Committee on Commerce have reported a bill identical with this, and I ask that the Senate bill be substituted for the one reported by the House committee. Once or twice in the previous history of Congress a bill for this purpose has passed one or the other House. This bill was prepared in the Engineer Department, and it contains all the provisions that are necessary to protect navigation.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT SIOUX CITY.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask to take up for present consideration Senate bill No. 3160, which is a precise duplicate of a House bill which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3160) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway Company across the Missouri River at Sioux City, Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. STRUBLE. I am compelled to object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] whether there is any public objection to this bill. The bill proposes the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River for the convenience of the gentleman's district. Will he state what objections he has to the bill?

Mr. STRUBLE. I will cheerfully state my reasons for objecting. I object to the bill because there is already in existence a charter under which prominent business men of my State have commenced operations for the building of a bridge which will answer all the demands of commerce; and at their suggestion I make this objection.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the gentleman whether the charter to which he refers has not been in existence for a period of more than three years, during which time not a step has been taken towards constructing the bridge. Is there not being pursued a "dog in the manger" policy? Is not that charter for sale; and so long as it is not bought, is it not used as a means of obstructing the business of the country and preventing the gentleman's constituents, and the people of Iowa generally, from getting cheap transportation for their produce across that river?

Mr. STRUBLE. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will say I am aware that this charter has been in existence some time. As to whether those who control the charter are attempting to use it for purposes of sale, I have no advice; but from the character of the men who are now acting under that charter I feel justified in saying that the insinuation involved in the interrogatory is unjust to those gentlemen and not warranted by the facts. That they are acting in good faith in respect to this matter I entertain not the least doubt. I know the men; and they are gentlemen of eminently high standing.

Mr. SCOTT. If there were five bridges across the Missouri River at Sioux City, would not the interests of the gentleman's constituents be better promoted thereby in the securing of cheap tolls across the river at Sioux City than if there should be one bridge there monopolizing the entire traffic across the river at that point.

Mr. STRUBLE. Oh, that any be so.

Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. As at present advised, I object.

BRIDGE OVER CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 2958) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a free bridge by the county of Davidson, Tennessee, over the Cumberland River. This bill, which has been passed by the Senate, is identical in its provisions with a bill which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS EAST RIVER.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to report from the Committee on Commerce, for present consideration, the bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island. It is exactly similar in its provisions to House bill No. 10914, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE BETWEEN KANSAS CITY AND SIBLEY, MO.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the City of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. This bill contains all the usual provisions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Commerce with amendments. If there be no objection the amendments will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE BETWEEN OMAHA AND COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Mr. CRISP. I ask the present consideration of the bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an amendment to this bill, which will be read.

Mr. CRISP. That amendment is merely the usual provision that all other railroad companies shall have the right to use the bridge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LYMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent to substitute this bill for House bill No. 10295, the two bills being similar, and pass the same.

There being no objection, the Senate bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, and asked unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the bill of the House, No. 10664, of the same title.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the Senate bill to be read the third time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT FORT MADISON.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up the bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points; and ask to consider the same with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT PIERRE, DAK.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.; and ask to put it on its passage, with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KLEINER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT YANKTON, DAK.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak., and ask to put it on its passage with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE SUNFLOWER, YAZOO, AND TOMBIGBEE RIVERS.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers in Mississippi.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT WINONA, MINN.

Mr. CRISP. I call up House bill No. 10146, authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River and a certain island therein, and move to pass the same with amendments.

Mr. WILKINS. I would like to know the character of the amendments the committee recommend to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be read at length.

Mr. CRISP. I will state to the gentleman that the amendments in this case, as in other bills to which the committee has offered amendments, are simply to insert the customary provision directing the Secretary of War to cause proper steps to be taken to prevent the bridge being an obstruction to commerce, and also reserving to the United States the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.

Mr. WILKINS. Do all of these bridge bills which we are passing to-night contain that provision making the selection of the site and the character of the bridge subject to the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. CRISP. They do.

Mr. DUNHAM. That has been stated already several times in the course of the evening.

Mr. CRISP. And I repeat that all of the amendments acted upon to-night by the House are simply to bring them within the rule and make them conform to that requirement. If any bills have been passed without that provision they have escaped the scrutiny of the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. Where is this bridge located?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. BAYNE. But where is the point at which it is proposed to locate the bridge?

Mr. CRISP. At or near the city of Winona, in Minnesota.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER THE TENNESSEE RIVER AT MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of the Muscle Shoals Canal, and for other purposes, and move to pass the same with the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, we are spending a great deal of money on that river to improve its navigation; why should we now obstruct it with a bridge?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me state to the gentleman that these bills are drawn very carefully, and provide that the bridges shall be so constructed as to prevent the possibility of their being detrimental to navigation. The bills specify that they shall be a certain width and a certain height, and as a further precaution in favor of navigation we provide that they shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe. The engineer officers engaged upon the work of improving the Tennessee River have been very particular. They have filed a report with the Secretary of War stating the kind of bridge that should be built.

Mr. MILLS. Can steamboats pass under the bridge in high water?

Mr. WHEELER. Most of the bridges on that river are provided with draws, and they are of sufficient width for purposes of navigation. But in this case the bill provides that the Secretary of War shall prescribe its height, which may be sufficient to permit boats to pass under it without the necessity of a draw.

The part of Alabama in which these bridges are to be located is undergoing a great change. Population is flowing in, railroads are being constructed, cities are springing up like magic, iron furnaces are being built in great numbers, coal mines are being opened upon a scale which even the people of Pennsylvania would call stupendous. Beds of iron ore are being developed so rich and abundant as to attract people from all parts of the United States and Europe. It is believed that the banks of the Tennessee River present advantages for making iron which are not found in any other locality, and hence this newly awakened spirit of industry.

Already many of the practical iron-makers of the North, with that clearness of perception and promptness of decision which have done so much to give its pre-eminence to that section, have diserned the superior advantages which their special industry will enjoy in Alabama, and are even now taking a leading part in developing these immense resources of that State, and when we add to these the great fertility of our soil, all must admit the necessity for these additional facilities for transportation and commerce.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAINT LOUIS RIVER.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up the bill (S. 2611) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that we have passed a similar bill to this which has already become a law; a House bill which went over to the Senate and was passed by that body.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the bill called up by the gentleman from Georgia will be indefinitely postponed.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS TOMBIGBEE RIVER.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss., with amendments by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Commerce were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce a bill which I have been authorized to report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is competent for the gentleman to make that report by the order under which the House meets this evening. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to call up the bill for present consideration?

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered now.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

Mr. CRISP. I ask that there may be laid upon the table the various House bills identical in their provisions with the Senate bills which have been passed during the evening.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE AT GRAND TOWER, ILL.

Mr. CRISP. We have now disposed of all the bridge bills which have been reported except the one that I now call up, the bill (H. R. 11231) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not desire that bill to be considered to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to the consideration of the bill, which under the order of the House carries it over.

Mr. WILKINS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection so that we may consider this bill.

Mr. MATSON. I desire also to record my objection against this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to know what the objection is based upon.

Mr. MATSON. My objection to the bill is based upon this fact, that the height of the bridge is placed at 50 feet, while steamers that require a height of 90 feet have to pass this bridge.

Mr. REAGAN. It is so important that this bridge should be constructed that I think it would be better to amend the bill so as to satisfy those gentlemen who object; and I am satisfied a height of 50 feet is not sufficient. I beg to inquire of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], if there is any objection to raising the height of the bridge to, say, 60 feet.

Mr. CRISP. There would be no objection, I think, on the part of the committee to any amendment which increased the height of the bridge, because, of course, the only object of the committee is to protect navigation. In their judgment this bill protected it.

Mr. REAGAN. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if it will remove his objection——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I object to the consideration of this bill to-night.

Mr. CRISP. Under the agreement made with reference to the meeting of the House this evening I feel obliged to withdraw the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to say one word on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will indulge the gentleman from Arkansas, although debate is not strictly in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This matter will have to come up for consideration at one time or another, because we who live west of the Mississippi River must get across that river somehow or other. We can not wade the stream, and it is too expensive to tunnel it. To secure this object we are willing to conform to the most extreme conditions that any one in the country can impose upon us. There are two classes of people who are in antagonism to the interest we have in this matter. If railroad companies could have things altogether their way they would destroy river navigation. If steamboat companies could have everything their way they would destroy railroad communication. The people in my community live on the river. They want to have both railroads and steamboats. They want to live and to let live. They would reprobate in the extremest terms any action I might take, if I should take such action, to restrain the freest and most unrestricted navigation of this river. At the same time they have no sympathy with a dog in the manger policy that would lay down conditions which would cripple the whole railroad system. I ask gentlemen who have objected to this bill what conditions would satisfy them?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the gentleman from Arkansas I will state that this is not one of the kind of bills which can be passed at a special evening session when no quorum is present, and I, as one member of the House, will not consent that this bill shall be considered to-night.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, the bill is withdrawn, and that is the end of it for the present.

Mr. CRISP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 1, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, Mr. President.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HALE (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.). I beg leave to interrupt the reading of the Journal in order to ask that the naval appropriation bill may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, Mr. President. Let the reading of the Journal go through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent. Objection is made, and the reading of the Journal will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SHERMAN (at 12 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.). I suggest that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent being necessary, the reading of the Journal will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LAFAYETTE—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 531, entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Lafayette, Ind."

This bill appropriates $50,000 for the purpose indicated in its title.

It is represented that a deputy internal-revenue collector is located at Lafayette, but no information is furnished that he has an office there, which is, or ought to be, furnished by the Government. It is not claimed that the Federal business at this point requires other accommodation except for the post-office located there.

As usual in such cases, the postmaster reports, in reply to inquiries, that his present quarters are inadequate, and, as usual, it appears that the postal business is increasing. The rent paid for the rooms or building in which the post-office is kept is $1,100 per annum.

I have been informed since this bill has been in my hands that last spring a building was erected at Lafayette with special reference to its use for the post-office, and that a part of it was leased by the Government for that purpose for the term of five years. Upon the faith of such lease the premises thus rented were fitted up and furnished by the owner of the building in a manner especially adapted to postal uses, and an account of such fitting up and furnishing is before me showing the expense of the same to have been more than $2,500.

In view of such new and recent arrangements made by the Government for the transaction of its postal business at this place, it seems that the proposed expenditure for the erection of a building for that purpose is hardly necessary or justifiable.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 28, 1887.

Mr. HARRISON. I regret that the President of the United States has denied to this flourishing Indiana city what he has called in a previous message "Federal decoration." I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

AGREEMENTS WITH CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 17th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, two agreements made with Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota under the provisions of the act of May 15, 1886. [24 Stat., 44.]

The papers are presented for the consideration and action of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1887.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 24, 1887, all reports made by Mark Harden, special agent, since July, 1886, in regard to any alteration in the dates of liquidation of warehouse entries in the custom-house at Boston, Mass., and other reports and correspondence connected therewith; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. HOAR, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in reply to a resolution of January 14, 1887, relative to re-adjudication of private land claims in New Mexico and Arizona; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the naval appropriation bill be taken from the table, receive its second reading, and be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BELMONT, Mr. W. R. COX, and Mr. HITT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. GREEN, and Mr. WHITE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the respective committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

A bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth;

A bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TUCKER, Mr. SENEY, and Mr. PARKER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COBB, Mr. VAN EATON, and Mr. PAYSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SWOPE, Mr. NEECE, and Mr. CONGER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEMPHILL, Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL, and Mr. ROWELL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés;

A bill (H. R. 10731) for the erection of a public building in the city of Binghamton, N. Y.; and

A bill (H. R. 5541) to prevent the employment of convict labor and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of materials for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE COLE.

The message likewise announced that the House had passed resolutions commemorative of the life and character of Hon. W. H. Cole, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Maryland, and transmitted the same to the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the message on the bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors just received from the House of Representatives be laid upon the table, and I shall submit the conference report on that bill as soon as the morning business is disposed of.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a petition of Sedgwick Post, No. 7, Grand Army of the Republic, of Peacedale, R. I.; and a petititon of Charles C. Baker Post, No. 16, Grand Army of the Republic, of West Wickford, R. I., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON presented a resolution adopted by Bruce Post, No. 273, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; a resolution adopted by Kendrick Post, No. 441, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; a resolution adopted by Mich. Campbell Post, No. 444, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; a resolution adopted by Lookout Post, No. 133, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; a resolution adopted by J. H. Danseur Post, No. 104, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; and resolutions adopted by Dan Pratt Post, No. 50, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, presented a memorial of Lieut. Arnold Lobaugh Post, No. 297, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Sergt. H. C. Ackley Post, No. 469, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented a resolution adopted by Henry Dobson Post, No. 182, Grand Army of the Republic, of Fremont, Mich., urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BOWEN presented a petition of Colorado Springs Post, No. 22, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Colorado; a petition of Upton Post, No. 8, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Colorado; and a petition of Joe Hooker Post, No. 16, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Colorado, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of Tim Meaher, of Mobile, Ala., setting forth a claim for the value of cotton taken unlawfully and sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Tim Meaher, of Mobile, Ala., making claim for services rendered troops in the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Tim Meaher, of Mobile, Ala., making claim for value of injury done to steamboats by United States troops in Mobile Bay by an explosion; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of various bankers in the city of New York, praying for the payment of certain alien tax claims; which, with the accompanying copy of letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, March 1, 1887.

Senator CALL, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our attorney, Mr Neill, is instructed to hand you our petition relative to appropriation for refund of alien tax claims. We pray you present to Senate.

NEW YORK, February 23, 1887.

To the honorable United States Senate:

We, the undersigned, agents and bankers for a number of non-resident aliens of the United States, whose claims have been filed by us, examined and allowed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and transmitted to Congress, and referred to your honorable committee for appropriation, as recited in House Executive Document No. 21, respectfully present this our petition.

During the period covered by these and similar claims we were and are still in very many instances the duly authorized financial agents and bankers of a large number of non-resident aliens, the owners of bonds and stock of American railroad companies and other American securities. It had been our business for years to negotiate abroad American loans and Government and other bonds and securities of this country. It was the custom then, as it is now, for these aliens who had purchased such bonds upon the recommendation and credit of our banking-houses to look to us to secure the honest and full payments of the bonded and other obligations due them. We were and are their agents in this country to collect for them the interest and dividends due on their bonds and stock. It was to our interest and credit to protect their rights and to see that they received in full their interest and dividends due them on the bonds and stock they had purchased mainly through our recommendation.

During the period when this Government exacted an income tax from her citizens the same tax was illegally exacted from these aliens. This tax was taken directly from us as their agents; that is to say, when we applied to the railroad corporations for payment of interest due on their bonds, being authorized to do so, the corporations illegally withheld a portion of this interest arbitrarily from the amount due our foreign correspondents, and paid the same over to the Government. The Supreme Court having decided that this was an illegal exaction, we duly filed our claims for refund directly against the Government. And the claims now recited in House of Representatives Executive Document No. 21, with the single exception of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company (and this seems to be a recoupe), constitute a part and embody the principal of the claims now due us on behalf of our alien correspondents.

We desire to ask your attention to our communication under date of May 24, 1886, addressed to the Hon. Daniel Manning, Secretary of the Treasury, a certified copy of which, furnished by the Treasury Department, has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations by our attorney, Mr. T. W. Neill, and to ask that it be made a part of this petition.

The Supreme Court has decided that these taxes should be refunded to the corporations, and to this effect is the opinion of the Attorney-General. (7 Wall., 262; 15 Opin., 67.)

This because the taxes in question were illegally collected directly from the corporations. This refund made in this manner will of course be for the benefit of the parties from whom the corporations directly and illegally withheld the same tax, namely, to the aliens or their agents, &c. And we are directly responsible to our alien customers who have authorized us to look after their financial interests in this country,

These aliens are our foreign correspondents; they look to us for a proper accounting to them or their heirs, executors, guardians, &c., and our books show our transactions with each of them, and our credit and standing in the financial community, and their confidence and trust in us seems to be a sufficient guarantee to the Government of the United States that money illegally exacted from us on their account, if refunded either to the corporation at our request or to us, will go to their proper credit.

In conclusion, we pray that your honorable committee will make this just appropriation in the form and manner as transmitted to you by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.

And we shall ever pray.

NON-RESIDENT ALIEN REFUNDING CLAIMS.

[Copy of letter from claimants' agents and bankers, &c., to Secretary of Treasury, certified copy of which has been furnished the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, having reference to House Executive Document, No. 21.]

NEW YORK CITY, May 24, 1886.

SIR: Several years since, as agents and bankers for a number of non-resident aliens of the United States, we filed in the Treasury Department their claims for the refund of taxes illegally exacted from them.

These taxes were, by direction of the Government, withheld by various corporations in this country from interest on bonds owned by said aliens and paid over to the Treasury. The questions in the case have been judicially settled, and in many of the cases the taxes have been allowed and already refunded by your Department. The claims here referred to have been fully established and allowed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and his allowances transmitted to your Department for payment.

It is held by the Supreme Court, in the case of non-resident aliens, that said taxes were illegally exacted by the Government, and illegally withheld by the various corporations from the interest due on their bonds. In the cases before you, as a matter of convenience and to facilitate and simplify the refunding of these taxes, the names of the respective corporations have been joined or substituted as claimants in lieu, and on behalf of the many alien claimants. In this manner, as suggested, the refunding will be more regular and the tax paid back as it was received through the agency of the corporation.

As advised, the adjusted claims in question now before your office awaiting payment, and in which our foreign correspondence are interested, are:

|---|---|
| In name of Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway Company allowance | $5,146 41 |
| In name of Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway Company allowance | 7,400 92 |
| In name of New York Central Railroad Company allowance | 9,275 82 |
| In name of Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway Company allowance | 2,089 69 |
| In name of Pennsylvania Railroad Company allowance | 4,852 80 |
| In name of Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway Company allowance | 796 20 |

We respectfully request that drafts for payment of above may be issued and delivered to our attorney, Mr. T. W. Neill, 1767 P street, Washington, D. C., who has charge of the prosecution of said claims. We ask that copies of the lists of alien claimants (certified by your Department), upon whose account the drafts are based, may also be delivered with the drafts in order to facilitate and insure the distribution of the money refunded to the proper parties.

These claims have been allowed under the provisions of section 3220, Revised Statutes, and it is held by the Supreme Court that an allowance of this character is a final settlement of the case and fixes the liability of the Government. (96 U. S., 567; 102 U. S., 397; 104 U. S., 728.)

This letter will be presented by our attorney, who will submit that the law provides for the payment of these allowances out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and that to relegate any further question as to their payment to any other tribunal is in conflict with the doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court and without warrant in law.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servants,

MORAN BROTHERS.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 917) for the relief of Henry S. Cohn, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 735) granting a pension to Margaret C. Bupp, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2757) for the relief of Florida Kennerly, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 680) for the relief of the heirs of the late William A. Burt, inventor of the solar compass adopted and used by the United States Government for fifty years in making the original survey of the public domain, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CULLOM, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill providing for the payment of 25 per cent. in addition to the amount paid for day labor to the employés of the Government Printing Office, such as compositors, &c., who have been and are exclusively employed on the night force during the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, reported it without recommendation, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, with the accompanying papers; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3042) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri Valley Railway Company through the Yankton Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Dakota, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1988) for the relief of Laban Heath & Co., of Boston, Mass., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the credentials of FRANCIS B. STOCKBRIDGE, Senator-elect from the State of Michigan for the term beginning March 4, 1887, to report back the same with a recommendation that they be placed on the files of the Senate, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged and the credentials placed upon the files of the Senate if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

SENATOR FROM INDIANA.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred a paper purporting to be the credentials of DAVID TURPIE, certifying to his election as Senator from the State of Indiana for the term beginning March 4, 1887, to report the same back with a recommendation that they be placed on the files of the Senate and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred resolutions of the joint assembly of the two Houses of the Legislature of Indiana, contesting the validity of the election of DAVID TURPIE as United States Senator, to report the same back with the recommendation that they be placed on the files of the Senate, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report a resolution and request that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows.

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit during the coming recess of Congress for the purpose of continuing the investigation ordered by the Senate by the resolutions of January 26 and 28, 1887; and that the necessary expenses be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or by the chairman of a subcommittee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses if there be no objection.

Mr. COKE. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. HOAR. This is a unanimous report. I will state to the Senator from Texas—I suppose in so doing I shall not state anything that is improper to be stated—that while I suppose the examination of witnesses will be nearly or quite concluded before the adjournment of the Senate, although it may take a few hours after the adjournment, depending upon the condition of our business here, it will be much more convenient to the members of the committee on both sides to have the evidence printed and indexed and their report made at a later time than to have that duty imposed upon them in the three days remaining. It is the unanimous agreement of the committee.

Mr. COKE. I interpose no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave of the Senate to modify the resolution by inserting the words "with all the powers conferred by the said resolutions."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the modification suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts will be made in the resolution. The Chair hears no objection. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

WEIL AND LA ABRA CLAIMS.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a resolution emanating from the committee. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That in consequence of the inability of the Senate to act upon Senate bills Nos. 2207 and 2208, "to amend act for the distribution of awards under a treaty with Mexico," so as to give to said measures proper consideration, the President of the United States be requested to suspend further payments under the awards named in said bills to the representatives or persons claiming under Benjamin Weil and the La Abra Silver Mining Company, respectively, until the question of fraud in obtaining said awards by the claimants respectively, or their agents and attorneys, shall have been duly investigated by the courts of the United States under the direction of the President, or under the further direction of Congress.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3356) to regulate the compensation of watchmen in the Executive Departments of the Government; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. CALL, Mr. CAMERON, Mr. MITCHELL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, it was

Ordered, That Hon. William Ward, of Pennsylvania, have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relating to a claim for services performed by him in connection with the United States revenue-marine steamer William H. Seward, no adverse report having been made.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs are directed to examine into the condition of the Indian tribes along the northern borders of the United States and especially the Indians on the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota; and to investigate the conduct of the Indian agents and their subordinates and employés at any of the agencies in that quarter, with a view to ascertain whether any of them have neglected their duties or have abused their authority in their dealings with the Indians. And that said committee examine into the distributions of annuities, or other appropriations of money or property made for the benefit of the Indian tribes by said agents. The expenses of said committee in executing this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, who shall be the present chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the chairman of any subcommittee appointed by the order of said committee, to be audited by the committee to audit the contingent expenses of the Senate.

2. That said committee or subcommittee shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses on oath touching the matters which they are hereby empowered to investigate, and may hold their sessions during the recess of the Senate at any place in the United States.

REPORT ON CONGO COUNTRY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 500 copies of the report of Lieut. E. H. Taunt on the Congo country sent to the Senate by the Secretary of the Navy on February 1, 1887, with the accompanying map, be printed for the use of the Senate.

A. H. LAZARE.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the letters of counsel for A. H. Lazare to the Secretary of State, dated respectively June 8, 1886, and September 20, 1886, and also the award of Hon. William Strong, arbitrator, against Hayti in favor of A. H. Lazare, be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, coming over from yesterday under the rule:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing, as at present constituted, be authorized to sit during the coming recess, and to prosecute the investigations into the public printing and the codification of the laws on printing and binding as ordered by a resolution adopted by the Senate on the 29th of June, 1886.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, coming over from yesterday under the rule:

Resolved, That the Senate hereafter meet at 11 o'clock in the morning until otherwise ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. What became of the resolution reported from the Committee on Appropriations several days ago, authorizing the meeting of the Senate at 11 o'clock in the morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported by the Senator from Iowa went to the Calendar, and was not called up on the day succeeding its introduction.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the resolution will be adopted. It has always been usual before this period of the session to meet at 11 o'clock; and not to do so now, especially in view of the complaints made against the other House, it seems to me, would be finding fault with others when probably we are not doing as much ourselves as we should.

Mr. ALLISON. We ought to have been meeting at 11 o'clock some time ago. I reported a resolution to that effect, and I supposed it would be laid before the Senate on the succeeding day, as resolutions usually are.

Mr. SHERMAN. That resolution was laid before the Senate, but was not acted on and went over.

Mr. ALLISON. This ought to have been done sooner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed, not having been at that time in the occupancy of the chair, that the resolution having been reported went to the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio has been agreed to, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was objected to yesterday, and came over under the rule, and is now before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I knew it was laid before the Senate, but I thought it had been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the private pension bills on the Calendar, favorably reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears no objection, and the first private pension bill favorably reported on the Calendar will be announced.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Order of Business 2289, next to the bill just acted on, being the bill (H. R. 3600) for the removal of the charge of desertion from John Rockwell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, is of a kindred nature to these pension bills. I hope the Senate will allow the bill to pass. It was reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. CULLOM. We can go to the Calendar of House bills after awhile.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection to letting this come in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am willing to agree to that, because most of these matters of desertion that have been reported favorably upon relate to pensions really. If my friend from Ohio and the Senate will agree to take them all up, there is one from Vermont which I think is a quite clear case. It is really a pension matter, is reported by my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and I should like to have it considered in the same way.

Mr. SAWYER. Had we not better first go through the pension bills?

Mr. SHERMAN. In order not to waste time, I will agree that as soon as the pension cases are through to go on with the desertion cases.

Ms. SAWYER. That will do.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE S. HAWLEY.

The bill (S. 3350) granting an increase of pension to George S. Hawley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of George S. Hawley, late first lieutenant of Company E, Twenty-third United States Colored Troops, to $72 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID L. POOL.

The bill (S. 3353) granting an increase of pension to David L. Pool was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of David L. Pool, late of Company K, First Regiment New York Cavalry, to $50 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY RENFRO.

The bill (H. R. 2358) granting a pension to Mary Renfro, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Mary Renfro, mother of Mark C. Renfro, deceased, late a private in Company D, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, on the pension-roll according to the rules and regulations governing such cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS RELATIVE TO CHARGES OF DESERTION.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I ask that five or six bills in regard to the removal of the charge of desertion be taken up and passed under the same rule.

Mr. EVARTS. I beg the Senator from Ohio to allow me to call up——

Mr. SHERMAN. You can do that after these bills are disposed of.

Mr. EVARTS. I wish to call up the bill to provide for an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, and it is very important that it should be passed not only to-day but as early in the day as can be; within the coming half hour, if possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. We shall get these private cases passed while we are talking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills removing the charge of desertion.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask that my bill be called up immediately afterwards.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can make his motion after these bills are disposed of. The Chair hears no objection to the cases called up by the Senator from Ohio, and the bills mentioned by him will be considered in their order. The first in order will be stated.

FRED. B. BARNES.

The bill (H. R. 8591) directing the Secretary of War to cause the name of Fred. B. Barnes to be entered as a private on the muster-roll of Company I, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY LINEBAUGH.

The bill (H. R. 4260) for the relief of Henry Linebaugh, late of Company A, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that Henry Linebaugh was enlisted and sworn into the United States service as a private soldier in Company A, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers, on the first of July, 1864, but before his command was mustered into service was captured and held a prisoner of war, and so was never mustered into service, nor was able to rejoin his command until his term of service expired; and that he was never borne on the rolls of his company, yet by no fault of the soldier. Therefore, the bill directs the Secretary of War to cause the name of Henry Linebaugh to be placed on the roll of Company A, of the Third Regiment of Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers, and to give him an honorable discharge, to date at the time of the discharge of the regiment.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to call attention to the bill which is No. 2318 on the Calendar, being the bill (H. R. 7643) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have not reached the order referred to by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. No. 2318 in the Order of Business is a bill very similar in character to that just passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall reach that in a minute. We are going on regularly.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

GEORGE D. PAUL.

The bill (H. R. 6937) for the relief of George D. Paul was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

In view of the faithful services rendered by George D. Paul as a member of Company A, of the Fourth Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers, during the war of the late rebellion, the bill provides that he is to be regarded in the administration of the pension laws as though no charge of desertion had been made against him upon any records of service prior to that in the Fourth Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

T. J. PAYNE.

The bill (H. R. 1710) for the relief of T. J. Payne was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion made against T. J. Payne, late a private in Company F, Second Tennessee Cavalry, and to place him on the muster-rolls of the company.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE LEMON.

The bill (H. R. 5056) for the relief of George Lemon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the records of the War Department in such a manner as to relieve of the charge of desertion the name of George Lemon, formerly a member of Company G, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM FIGLEY.

The bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, to add to the bill "as of date October 5, 1863, for enlistment and muster in Company I, Eleventh Kentucky Cavalry;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the records of the War Department the charge of desertion against William Figley, late a private in Company A, Eleventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and that he give to the said Figley an honorable discharge as of date October 5, 1863, for enlistment and muster in Company I, Eleventh Kentucky Cavalry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

JAMES W. KINGON.

The bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That the Secretary of War and the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and required, notwithstanding the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the general court-martial convened pursuant to "Special Orders No. 118, extract," June 28, 1865, issued by command of Bvt. Brig. Gen. E. Opdyke, Headquarters Second Division Fourth Army Corps, and the approval thereof by Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph Conrad, commanding Second Division, Central District of Texas, August 26, 1865, to audit and pay to Sergt. James W. Kingon, Company H, Forty-second Regiment Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry, the amount of all pay, compensation, and allowances withheld from him by reason of said proceedings, findings, and sentence of said court-martial and the said approval thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize payment to Sergt. James W. Kingon of amount withheld by reason of sentence of general court-martial."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

JOHN ROCKWELL.

The bill (H. R. 3600) for the removal of the charge of desertion from John Rockwell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY DURKEE.

The bill (H. R. 8620) granting relief to Henry Durkee was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 8, before the word "day," to strike out "twentieth" and insert "sixteenth;" in line 9, after the words "until the," to strike out "eleventh" and insert "eighteenth;" and in line 10, after the words "day of," to strike out "April" and insert "May;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to issue to Henry Durkee a discharge from each of the above-named regiments under the name of Henry Durkee, and is hereby directed to correct the records so as to make it appear that Henry Durkee served in Company B, Second Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 16th day of February, 1862, until the 18th day of May, 1862, and also served in Company E, Fifth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 27th day of August, 1864, until the 17th day of May, 1865: Provided, That before the discharges are issued to Henry Durkee he shall file satisfactory proof with the Adjutant-General of the Army that he is the identical person who served in Company B, Second Wisconsin Infantry, and Company E, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry, under the name of Henry Grant.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported to amend the preamble in line 3, before the words "day of," to strike out "twentieth" and insert "sixteenth;" in line 4, after the words "until the," to strike out "eleventh" and insert "eighteenth;" and in the same line, after the words "day of," to strike out "April" and insert "May;" so as to make the preamble read:

Whereas Henry Durkee was enrolled and served as a private in Company B, Second Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 16th day of February, 1862, until the 18th day of May, 1862, when he was discharged, and also afterwards enrolled and served as a private in Company E, Fifth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 27th day of August, 1864, until the 17th day of May, 1865, when he was discharged, both of said enrollments and terms of service being under the name of Henry Grant, the same being his stepfather's name; and

Whereas since his discharge he has assumed his right name, to wit, Henry Durkee: Therefore.

The amendments were agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

PHILIP TAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments; in line 5, after the word "charge," to strike out "of desertion" and insert "deserted September 21 (and October 10), 1863;" and in line 9, after "Volunteers, and," to strike out the words:

That an honorable discharge be granted the said Philip Taylor, with all the pay and other emoluments due him at date of expiration of his term of enlistment.

And to insert:

To substitute therefor "discharged July 24, 1863, to enlist in Company D, Second Maryland Cavalry;" and to issue to him an honorable discharge from said Company B, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, as of date July 24, 1863.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the records to be so amended as to remove the charge "deserted September 21 (and October 10), 1863," from the military record of Philip Taylor, late a member of Company B of the One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and to substitute therefor "discharged July 24, 1863, to enlist in Company D, Second Maryland Cavalry;" and to issue to him an honorable discharge from said Company B, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, as of date July 24, 1863.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

JOHN A. LONDON.

The bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments; in line 8, after the word "bounty," to strike out "due him under the laws of the United States;" and in line 13, after the word "sixty-two," to insert:

And immediately thereafter discharged for wounds received in the service in the line of duty.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum of money to John A. London, of Butler County, Kentucky, late a private in Company A, Twelfth Kentucky Regiment of Cavalry, on account of bounty, as he would have been entitled to under the laws of the United States had he been mustered into the United States service with Company A, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, on the 12th day of November, 1862, and immediately thereafter discharged for wounds received in the service in the line of duty.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That seems to be out of the line of the mere matter of the mistake of an army record. I should like to hear the report read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL February 22, 1887:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

The Adjutant-General of the United States Army made the following report in this case, to wit:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 4, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith letter of Hon. J. LYMAN, of the House Committee on War Claims, transmitting copy of H. R. 834, for the relief of John A. London, and requesting to be furnished with such information as the records of the Department may afford in regard to the man as a member of Company A, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, and to report as follows:

It appears from the records of this office that John A. London, third sergeant Company A, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, was enrolled August 12, 1862, to serve three years. The data are shown by the muster-in roll of that company, dated November 12, 1862, with his name stricken off, the man not being present for muster-in. His name is taken up on subsequent rolls with the remark: "Absent; wounded at Owensborough, September 20, 1862, and left at Owensborough, Ky." The records do not show that the man ever joined the service after being wounded, September 20, 1862.

The records of this office do not show that application has ever been made for completion of the records or for a discharge in this case.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. C. KELTON, Assistant Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The company and regiment in which claimant was enrolled went into camp at Owensborough, Ky., awaiting muster-in, and whilst so waiting were attacked, the colonel killed, and claimant severely wounded in left breast and shoulder. His company was duly mustered in on November 12, 1862, but claimant, being wounded and absent, was not mustered in, and was not thereafter fit for duty and never mustered in. Your committee, upon these facts, believe claimant entitled to such bounty as he would have received had he been duly mustered in November 12, 1862, and immediately thereafter discharged for wounds received in action in the service in the line of duty, and report the bill back to the Senate, recommending its passage with the amendment indicated therein.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the bill be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. There ought to be an additional amendment, which does not seem to have been printed. In line 13, after the words "12th day of November, 1862," I move to insert:

And be entered on record as mustered of that date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all satisfactory.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I desire at this time to make a report. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, to report it with sundry amendments. I ask that the amendments be printed and the bill placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I object to its consideration this day, Mr. President, now and here.

Mr. HALE. I will try to call it up as soon as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed and placed on the Calendar.

ORRIN R. M'DANIEL.

The bill (S. 3333) for the relief of Orrin R. McDaniel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Orrin R. McDaniel, late an enrolled soldier of Company H, Sixty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, upon the records of that company as enrolled December 26, 1863, and discharged February 14, 1864, for disability, and to grant him an honorable discharge accordingly, as of date February 14, 1864, for disability.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. BOLTON.

The bill (S. 3334) for the relief of George W. Bolton, alias Charles W. Andrews, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion from the record of George W. Bolton, alias Charles W. Andrews, late a private in Company B, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of the date when his regiment was mustered out.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC CRAWFORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to call attention to Order of Business 2318, which is a bill of this class. I ask that it be considered now. It is a bill to pay an officer for services actually rendered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that bill will be considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Order of Business 2298, House bill 7176, comes before that in regular order. We shall reach the Senator's bill presently.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

The bill (H. R. 7176) for the relief of Isaac Crawford was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that Company F of the Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry was, its time having expired, mustered out of service, so far as the records of the company show, on the 30th of November, 1864, but on the same day, and before disbandment, was ordered from Knoxville, Tenn., to the neighboring county of Greene, to repel a force of the enemy; and that Isaac Crawford, a member of the company, while strictly obeying orders, was captured in actual conflict and taken as a prisoner of war to Richmond, Va., and there held until exchanged on March 1, 1865. Therefore the bill directs the Adjutant-General of the Army to grant an honorable discharge to Crawford, to date from March 22, 1865, in place of the discharge granted him dated November 30, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

CAPT. JOHN BURKHART.

The bill (H. R. 7643) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to John Burkhart, late captain of Company F, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, in the late war, the pay and emoluments of captain of that company from March 1, 1865, to June 22, 1865, deducting from the sum found due him as the pay and emoluments of captain of the company for the period specified the sums of money that have been paid to him for military service, either as a private or otherwise, rendered by him during the period specified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY B. JAY.

The bill (H. R. 1449) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry B. Jay was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion now standing upon the records of the War Department against the name of Henry B. Jay, late of Company C, Seventy-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge, with the same pay, bounties, and benefits he would have been entitled to if the charge of desertion had not been entered against his name.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WELLS C. M'COOL.

The bill (H. R. 3930) for the relief of Wells C. McCool was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that on the 1st of December, 1862, Wells C. McCool, formerly of Guthrie County, Iowa, and now of Salem, Nebr., was regularly mustered into the service of the United States as first lieutenant of Company A, Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry Volunteers; that on the 25th of February, 1863, he was sentenced by a court-martial to be dismissed from the service of the United States, with the loss of all pay and allowances; that he has never received any portion of his pay and allowances as such lieutenant; that the sentence of the court-martial was not approved or promulgated until about April 30, 1863; that McCool was therefore kept in the service until that time; that on the 12th of September, 1863, McCool re-enlisted in Company I, Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, as a private soldier, and served faithfully as such until the close of the term of service of his company, and was mustered out with his company and regiment on the 10th of August, 1865; that the slight act of insubordination which caused his dismissal was his only unsoldierly act during his entire term of service; that his disabilities on account of the dismissal were removed by the President on the 22d of August, 1867; and that he was afterward commissioned by the governor of Iowa as an officer in the State troops of the State, and faithfully served as such until his removal from the State.

The bill therefore proposes to appropriate $542.50, the amount of the pay and allowances of Wells C. McCool as first lieutenant of Company I, Twenty-ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, from December 1, 1862, to April 30, 1863, to be paid by the proper officers of the United States to McCool, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assignees.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

SECOND JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. EVARTS. If this Order of Business is exhausted, I now move to take up House bill 8599.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, after the word "that," at the end of line 7, to strike out "the justice of the Supreme Court allotted to the said circuit, or;" so as to read:

That there shall be appointed for the second circuit, by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in addition to the present circuit judge, another circuit judge, who shall have the same qualifications and shall have the same power and jurisdiction therein that the present circuit judge has under existing laws, and who shall be entitled to the same compensation as the present circuit judge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 11, after the word "judge," to strike out the words:

A circuit judge may hold a district court in place or in aid of the district judge when requested by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add to section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That the applications and proceedings therein provided for by sections 2011, 2012, 2013, and 2014 of the Revised Statutes shall be made and taken before the senior circuit judge of the second circuit; but in his absence or inability to act under said sections, or any of them, such applications and proceedings may be made and had before the junior circuit judge in said circuit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out sections 2 and 3, as follows:

SEC. 2. The regular terms of the circuit court for the southern district of New York shall hereafter be held on the first Monday of every month. At any of said terms the different judges may hold courts separately at the same time for the hearing of any causes or proceedings pending in said court, as the same may be assigned by the judges of said court, or by a majority of them. Criminal causes and matters shall be heard at the same time as now provided by law. Any term may be extended by the order of a judge for the completion of an unfinished trial or hearing.

SEC. 3. That at two at least of said terms annually in the southern district of New York, and as much oftener as the business shall make it necessary, courts shall be held for the hearing and determination of appeals and writs of error from the district court of said district, including appeals in admiralty and in equity and reviews in bankruptcy, and also for the hearing of motions for new trial in civil cases and in criminal cases in the circuit court, and motions in arrest of judgment. Such courts shall be held by three judges authorized to hold the circuit court, one of whom may be a district judge. The circuit justice, if present, shall preside thereat; if he be not present, the circuit judge present who is senior in office shall preside. No judge shall sit in review of a cause tried before him. The decisions of the court may be reviewed as now provided by law. In the case of a division of opinion upon the hearing of any cause or question, the opinion of the majority shall be taken as the decision of the court. But upon any such hearing where a division of opinion shall arise, if the adjudication involves a legal question of sufficient importance to require that the final decision thereof shall be made in the Supreme Court, upon a certificate thereof signed by said judges, or a majority of them, a review upon writ of error or appeal may be had thereon in the Supreme Court. For that purpose the circuit court shall state the question upon which the division of opinion has arisen, with the facts upon which the same arises; and the said question shall thereupon be decided in the Supreme Court, and enforced as in other cases where the judges of the circuit court are divided in opinion. The like appeals, writs of error, or reviews in causes arising in the district court of any other district of said circuit may be heard before the said judges sitting to hear appeals in the southern district of New York, upon consent of the parties to the controversy, or their proctors or attorneys, or upon the order of the senior circuit justice. The decision of such judges shall be certified to the circuit court of such other district, and thereupon the decree of the circuit court of such district shall be entered in accordance with such decision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, let the amendments be read, or rather let the original bill be read, and then the amendments, so that we may see exactly what we are doing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont desire the bill to be read at length?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. If the Chief Clerk is to read the bill, I should like to have it read so that I can hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appeals to the Senate to be in order. The Chief Clerk will report the amendments as they are reached in the bill that were agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments have been agreed to in Committee of the Whole, and will be reported separately on the question of concurrence if the Senator from Vermont desires.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I wish to see exactly how the bill stands. I want to know precisely the form in which the bill stands as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary has already read the bill as it would stand with the amendments made in Committee of the Whole; and the Chair was about to put the question to the Senate whether it would agree to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I understand it.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EVARTS. I move that the Senate insists on its amendments, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. EVARTS, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. GEORGE were appointed.

CHICAGO, KANSAS AND NEBRASKA RAILWAY.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2335, House bill 8594.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8594) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to explain to the Senate this bill, which evidently is an important one, and to tell us in what way the Indian rights are protected and preserved, so that we shall understand what we are doing.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress, after Congress had decided that they would assert the right of eminent domain in authorizing railroads through the Indian Territory, the Committee on Indian Affairs took some pains to prepare a form of bill which they thought would secure to the Indian all his rights where land was taken and where property was taken, following the analogy so far as they could of the taking of property for railroad uses in the States with this exception, that they fixed a round sum that should be paid for every ten miles of the railroad, $50.

They then provided that if the Indians were not satisfied with that, they should have an opportunity to appeal to the district courts in the adjacent States, in Kansas and Arkansas, with such provision as was necessary to carry out that idea.

They provide for a commmission to ascertain all damages to individuals and also all damages occasioned by the taking for the public use of this land. A commission is to be appointed, one member by the President, one by the chief of the tribe, and one by the railroad company, and if their award is not satisfactory, as indicated within sixty days, I think, either party can appeal to the court, and the damages ascertained in the manner provided and according to the forms of procedure in the State either of Kansas or Arkansas, as the case may be. It is provided that the railroad company shall pay the costs in all cases except where the damages are reduced, and in that event the costs are to be paid by the party appealing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you provide for the payment of the land damages to these private owners, directly to them?

Mr. DAWES. I am not able to answer directly that. It is either to the Secretary of the Interior to be paid to them. Where it goes through the Five Nations it is provided that payment shall be made directly to the treasurer of the nation. Where the railroad is to go through the land of the tribes that do not belong to the Five Nations and have no established government, I am quite certain it is provided that the money is to be paid to the Secretary of the Interior for their use to be applied to the purposes of education and civilization, and that the construction, the plans, the surveys, and the operation of the road shall be at all times under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As to the unorganized tribes, where there is no private ownership it would be entirely right, I think, to provide that the money should go to their general use; but if there be a private owner, then of course his property can not be taken from him for the public use without due process of law and without full compensation to be paid to him. My inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in whose fidelity and carefulness I have the greatest possible confidence, was to know whether in the case of private ownership, or that kind of private ownership which the usages of the Indian nations allow, if an Indian's farm was cut through, just as one might be in Massachusetts or Vermont, the damages he was to have were to be paid directly to him or to somebody else, the Secretary of the Interior or whoever it might be. I have not had time to look at the bill sufficiently to quite understand it.

Mr. DAWES. I have not looked at this form of language for some time, and I speak from an indistinct memory. The bill was prepared with the idea of securing to every Indian compensation according to the forms prescribed in the two States named for the taking of private property for public use.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that every private right——

Mr. DAWES. Every private right as well as every other is protected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that every private right is respected just as it would be in a State?

Mr. DAWES. That is the intention of the bill. If it has failed to carry out that idea it has failed of the intention, and I do not think that it has failed.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that this matter has received very elaborate consideration heretofore, and has resulted in practically a form of a bill for all Indian reservations. It has received the sanction of the Interior Department, the sanction of the President, the sanction of the Attorney-General, and practically the sanction, I think, of all the bodies that have had to do with the Indians heretofore. So practically there is nothing left except the one question of the propriety of the route proposed. I know it has been the design of this bill to conform to that plan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from Kansas whether he understands the scope of this bill as the Senator from Massachusetts does, in respect of private rights; whether the bill provides, as a State bill would do for a railroad in a State, completely to pay to the private owner or the private occupant of lands the damages that may be justly determined to be due to him?

Mr. PLUMB. It does so pay them to him, and section 3, which is now before me, says this:

Full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And then it provides for the means of accomplishing that end?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir; fully.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MAHONE. I believe the agricultural appropriation bill is in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The Chair will lay before the Senate at this time the bill (H. R. 10912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, the House of Representatives having disagreed to the amendments of the Senate and asked for a conference thereon.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

COURT AT DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for a term of court at Duluth, Minn. It will take no time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was going to move that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 2983, which is a simple bridge bill that passed a former Congress and by a mistake in a name did not become a law, for it described the wrong place. It was reported long ago and should have gone with the bridge bills that passed two or three days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Vermont as wishing to displace the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN]?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; I did not mean that at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for a term of court at Duluth, Minn.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "jury," to strike out "shall" and insert "may;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter, and until otherwise provided by law, there shall be held annually, on the second Monday in July, a term of the district court of the United States for the district of Minnesota at the city of Duluth, in said district, said term to be in addition to the terms now required by law to be held at the cities of Saint Paul and Winona, in said district; and a grand and petit jury may be summoned to serve at said term of court hereby established.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary is one merely in regard to calling a jury before the district court. I have consulted with members of the committee, and in view of the conference had with them I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I simply wish to say that the amendment moved by the Committee on the Judiciary was, as we all thought, a wise and desirable one; but after the action of the Senate in respect of bills of this character, I have told my friend from Minnesota that I did not feel justified in undertaking to get the Senate to put this bill in a conservative shape to save public money and to administer justice in the way it ought to be done. I merely state this in order that I may not be considered as consenting to the passage of any of these bills, or almost all of them that have passed—some were right—in regard to this matter of holding courts in the various States. I merely say this, not having the power to oppose the passage of this bill, so as not to be held responsible myself for the extravagance and expense that all these bills lead to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAN-HANDLE OF IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 2340, House bill 2889.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory,

Mr. PLATT. Before the bill is read, let me make a statement in a few words. This bill annexes what is called the pan-handle of Idaho to Washington Territory. It was in the bill for the admission of Washington Territory as a State considered and adopted by the Senate. The House of Representatives passed a separate bill of annexation, and the Committee on Territories has now reported favorably to the passage of the House bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut what provision is made for causes civil and criminal pending in these counties?

Mr. PLATT. When the bill is read the Senator will see. We think there is a very careful provision in it for that purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right; let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. At the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], I move to amend, in section 7, line 2, after the word "matters," by inserting "excepting criminal proceedings;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That in respect of all cases, proceedings, and matters, excepting criminal proceedings, pending in the supreme or district courts of Idaho at the time of the passage of this act, arising within the limits hereby annexed to Washington Territory, the supreme court of Washington Territory and the district court for the fifth district of said Territory shall be the successors of said supreme and district courts of Idaho; and all the files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating thereto shall be transferred to said supreme and district courts of Washington Territory, respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Then at the end of the section I move to add, as a separate paragraph, these words:

All crimes heretofore committed in the territory by this act annexed to the Territory of Washington shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLATT, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. BUTLER were appointed.

Mr. PLATT subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to have the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory, which was passed and has gone into conference, resumed, for the purpose of making a verbal amendment in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Get unanimous consent to make it without a reconsideration.

Mr. PLATT. Or, I ask unanimous consent to make a verbal amendment in the bill which was passed this morning, and which is rendered necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator will state the amendment he proposes to make.

Mr. PLATT. I propose to amend by striking from section 7, in lines 7 and 8, the word "indictment," and after the word "proceedings," in line 8, to insert the words "except in criminal matters."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that amendment being made at this stage of the proceeding? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be so entered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, &c.; and

A bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 28th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1170) granting a pension to Nancy C. Smith;

An act (S. 2308) granting a pension to Henry Lafner; and

An act (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Fla., a port of entry.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2101, being the bill (S. 3230) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C.

Mr. PLUMB. I considered myself under instructions to move at 2 o'clock—but I have not troubled the Senate for a quarter of an hour after that time—to move to consider the bill to forfeit certain lands granted to the State of Michigan, placed on the Order of Business by consent of both sides. If I can be recognized after the Senator's bill is acted on, and it will not take much time, I shall not now interpose.

Mr. BUTLER. It will take no time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Kansas to make his motion now if he desires.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A little while ago, before my friend from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] made his motion, I had moved to take up Order of Business 2069, but my friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was in advance of me with a prior motion. I have thought on reflection that I have no right to interfere with the regular order of business agreed upon, and therefore I have refrained from making this motion about a local matter of interest to my State, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina will let the regular order go on that has been agreed upon.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course I have no desire to interfere with the regular order of business, but I should like very much after the Senator from Kansas gets through with the bill he has in view that I may be recognized for the purpose of calling up the bill I have mentioned.

Mr. CULLOM. I have been trying for a week to get up a little bill, and I hope I shall have the same privilege that the Senator from South Carolina asks at the hands of the Senate.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 391.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 8, after the word "thereby," to strike out "shall be considered and treated in all respects the same as if said grant had never been made" and insert "are restored to the public domain;" so as to read:

That all lands granted to the State of Michican under the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and the lands covered thereby are restored to the public domain.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the vote is taken on that I ask for a separate vote on the striking out and the insertion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "thereto," in line 8, it is proposed to strike out "shall be considered and treated in all respects the same as if said grant had never been made."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to insert in lieu of the committee amendment:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting such lands, if any there be, as have been heretofore earned by the construction of any portion of said road under said act of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill be read as it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as it stands amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all lands granted to the State of Michigan under the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and the lands covered thereby: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting such lands, if any there be, as have been heretofore earned by the construction of any portion of said road under said act of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PALMER. I have an amendment to offer, which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

And provided further, That whereas it is desirable that the portion of said road already built shall connect with a projected line of railroad running east and west, being an extension of the Marquette, Houghton and Ontonagon Railroad, it is hereby enacted that should said road from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line be built to a point intersecting the line of said Marquette, Houghton and Ontonagon Railroad within two years from the passage of this act, then and in that case so much of the grant as would be applicable to said additional road, not exceeding in distance 20 miles, shall be exempt from the operation of this act.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Michigan to withhold his amendment for a moment until I can move the remainder of the committee amendments.

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 10, the words, "are restored to the public domain" should be inserted after what I have offered.

Mr. COCKRELL. So that it will read, "and the lands covered thereby are restored to the public domain?"

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to say in regard to the amendment that this grant was made thirty years ago and while it was in a section of country which was for many years practically inaccessible; at the same time if there had been any necessity for the railroad, and if there is great necessity for it now, it would have been long since built or would be now in process of construction, which I think is not the case.

It is in my judgment against public policy, which I do not need to argue, longer to continue these grants of public land to aid in the construction of railroads. Wherever there is a necessity for the construction of railroads in these days, money is easily found for their construction without aid other than such as is derived from the appreciation of the business to be benefited by their construction. Capital is willing to go into enterprises of that kind without grants of land. After the lapse of this great length of time I think this grant ought to be forfeited, as to all that part which has not been heretofore earned at least.

I may say further that this action would have been recommended by the Committee on Public Lands two sessions ago except for the great contention as to what would become of the land after the forfeiture took effect. There are three classes of persons contending for these lands. The Senate Committee on Public Lands has long been troubled as to the relative rights of these various classes; and while that matter was under consideration time went by and the bill was not reported. This bill, as reported, does not confirm either, but leaves them all as they are now, in the same condition they are as at present. The House of Representatives, having given us an opportunity to secure the passage of this bill, I think it should be passed.

I may say that the effect of the bill in regard to the claimants of this land is the result of the amendment adopted by the committee and agreed to by the Senate. As the bill came from the House it seemed at least to confirm the lands that were forfeited to one class of the claimants that I have spoken of. It may not have done so, but that was the fear of the committee that it did, and consequently the bill was amended so as to prevent that.

While I myself might be willing to say that the class of people who would get these lands in case the House bill were passed as it came here ought to have them, the committee did not care to enter upon that subject, and consequently adopted amendments calculated to leave the whole question open to be settled by the courts or otherwise hereafter.

I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment of the Senator from Michigan as proposed will not be adopted.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I regret that this bill should have been reported to the Senate at so late a period of the session. I do not suppose that I shall be suspected of favoring railroads or railroad grants. It is certainly an unpopular and an impolitic and possibly at this time an ungracious position to take. I am not now speaking for the railroads, but I am speaking for the people who are to be the chief beneficiaries of this amendment.

The road now runs from the town of Ontonagon, in that hyperborean region known as the south shore of Lake Superior, against a stump 20 miles south. This amendment is intended to give a connection with a projected line which will run from Saulte Ste. Marie to Duluth, Lake Superior. It may not be over 10 miles, it may be 20 miles; but the amendment merely provides for that portion of the grant which would be applicable to 20 miles of the road or 120 sections. It seems to me the people on Lake Superior are deserving of consideration.

Forty years ago I was at that town and it was one of the most promising places upon Lake Superior. Since then other points have obtained railroad connections, while this town has dwindled, or remained in a lethargic state, made sick by hope deferred, people going there and expecting a railroad but never getting it, till finally, six years ago, a grant was conferred upon the Ontonagon and Brulé Railroad Company and they went on to build the road. The Legislature of the State of Michigan at that time instructed their Representatives in Congress to secure if possible an extension of the time of the grant, and they have done all they could in the premises; but in this carnival of land-grant forfeitures it seems to be the intention that the statute-book shall be swept clear of all railroad grants.

The persons who are pressing this proposed forfeiture are not citizens of Michigan. A great majority of the citizens of Michigan as far as I know are in favor of the retention of the grant and of the building of the road. Without the grant the road will not be built, and the 20 miles which are already built will be ineffective and of no account to the people of Ontonagon. It is on their account that I speak, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

As a rule I agree with the general principles which the Senator from Kansas has announced as guiding the Public Lands Committee, but I think that all rules have exceptions; and if there is a point where an exception can be made it is for the people of Ontonagon, who have to hibernate seven months in the year, for snow falls in October and it does not go off till May. Under those circumstances I hope that the general policy of the Public Lands Committee and of the Senate will not be followed, but that the amendment may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall have to call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I have but a word or two to say about the amendment. I have no criticism to make in regard to the policy which Congress seems to have adopted, and which perhaps is demanded to some extent, the general policy of restoring railroad land grants to the public domain for the benefit of purchasers for settlement. I wish simply, however, to have the Senate remember that this grant made years ago to the State of Michigan to help build a road in the Upper Peninsula was made because the road did not lie upon any ordinary lines where railroads could be builded. It is through a region which, until within a few years since, was supposed to be entirely worthless, except for its copper and iron production.

I know the character of the country. I have been on the geological surveys of that State, over the whole region where this road is to go, over forty years ago. It has been found latterly that part of the region lying south of the copper range contains really some very valuable farming lands. Settlers have gone into that region, some upon the adjoining lands of this railroad grant. It contains also valuable pine lands in the southern part. In the Upper Peninsula, until within a short period, that whole region (which was given to the State of Michigan in consideration of its surrender of the Toledo district, as it is called, which was attached to Ohio when Michigan was admitted into the Union), which has proved vastly valuable in its copper and iron product, has had no railroad within the limits of the peninsula from the Straits of Mackinaw to the Montreal River, or from the lake down to the Wisconsin line.

To promote the building of a railroad from the Straits of Mackinaw to connect at the west at the Montreal River with the Northern Pacific, the Legislature of Michigan donated the land to whoever would build the railroad from the Straits of Mackinaw, connecting it with the land belonging to Michigan in the Upper Peninsula, and that within a few years past. It has been necessary to give whatever aid the State could give, and it was thought necessary to give whatever aid the General Government could give to encourage the building of a road through a wild, rocky, diversified region, where the wants of trade and of commerce would not for years and years, perhaps, secure the building of any road.

Yet that whole country has been settled along the lake shore, and in the mineral regions, and in that very region of Ontonagon, the Houghton region, and the Kewenaw district there is produced in the State of Michigan nearly one-third of all the copper produced in the world. The settlers in this Ontonagon region up the river, and upon the east branch and the west branch south of the copper range, which extends back 12 or 15 miles from the lakes, have no means of communication. Those who traversed that country as I did forty years ago, and as I have within the last fifteen years, know how difficult it is even to provide a wagon road for communication. The State of Michigan has given to these people year after year, even to secure the means of communication in that region by a wagon road, the specific taxes which are raised upon mining companies in the Upper Peninsula. Our State has done all that it could to encourage some means of communication between the citizens of this far-off land and the world at large.

Under all kinds of adverse circumstances, with continual hostile attempts at legislation against this road in the wilderness, against the attacks of those who want the land for the pine that is upon it, against the attacks of those who have a general desire to take away from all railroads lands which have been granted where the roads have not been built, a company has succeeded in one way and another, by private subscriptions and stock subscriptions, and donations of the poor people of that region in money and in labor, in building this road along the line some 20 miles. Running east and west at a distance of 35 or 40 miles south of the lake shore there is a road which has been built from the Straits of Mackinaw by Marquette, the great iron region, by L'Anse, at the head of Keweenaw Bay, which connects the iron and copper mines together, on through Lake Agogebic, connecting with the newly discovered Agogebic Lake iron mines, whose outlet is at Ashland, in Wisconsin. The road is built from these mines westerly to Ashland, connecting there with the Northern Pacific. Between these two is a strip of comparatively short distance which is being built now to connect Michigan proper with its upper peninsula and with the Northern Pacific.

The object of this amendment is to enable this company, even at this late day, to build the road beyond the 20 miles already built and connect at 15 or 20 miles with the great east and west line, giving an outlet to the west and an outlet to the east to a region which has no other means of communication even for its mails in the winter except by dog-trains, as it has been for forty or fifty years.

In obedience to the resolution passed almost unanimously by the Legislature of Michigan, my colleague and myself have been instructed to favor the extension of time, or whatever measure may be necessary to enable this road in the wilderness to go on and finish its connection with other roads; and that is the object of the amendment.

I have nothing to say about the feeling or disposition to take away from the great lines which have had the ability to make their roads the land grants where they have not used them, but this road in this place and in this wilderness can not be built without aid from the State of Michigan and without this aid from the Government. It is but a small portion of the road which was to be built under the grant, and with the exception of the amount which the amendment will still leave for the road all the rest of that grant from this point to the Wisconsin State line will be forfeited and thrown into market. It is a small thing to ask.

It is not in violation of any rule which has been adopted by the Senate or by the House in regard to continuing the right to use these lands for a road. It is perhaps more than any other place in the United States a case where there is absolute necessity, if we will give to the several thousand people living on the borders of Lake Superior an outlet by land during the winter months to the rest of the world. There is no communication now. There is a wagon-road along the shore down to Houghton; and there is a wagon-road along the shore to Indian River, 20 miles west, at the foot of the Porcupine Mountains. Aside from those means of communication there is no means of communication back into the country; or to the settlers who live up along the river there is no means of communication for at least five or six months of the year.

Most of the railroad grants to the other States went through fine, level prairie; they went through regions where roads would of necessity have been built, and where thousands of miles have been built without any grant at all, because the building of them would pay for their construction. This is a place where one company after another has undertaken, even with the land grant, to build that road in the wilderness, and all have failed and given it up. It has been sold, and the State has given to one company after another aid to encourage it to build the road. What they ask now is this little addition to build the road of ten or fifteen or twenty miles—I can not state the exact distance—of a part of the grant which has been there for years subject to the use and to the occupation of whatever company among several companies would take it as an inducement to help build some way out to the rest of the world.

I do not appeal to the Senate with any questions of sympathy for those people in the wilderness; but when I hear men talk about restoring lands to the public domain for the benefit of actual settlers, I think sometimes of my friends whom I have known struggling in that region for the last forty years against all odds, building their homes, cultivating their land, finding that instead of being wild, cold, barren lands they produced, as in New Hampshire and in Maine, products suitable to that climate, and that they can live there, and do live there, and are growing up by hard labor and toil, building themselves homes in our Lake Superior wilderness.

Sir, it has been thought until within a few years that except for the mineral lands and the copper and iron mines there, and except for the accessible pine, that whole region was as utterly barren as the frozen face of the moon; but enterprising men, bold emigrants, have gone into that region with the hope that some time there would be a railroad which would communicate with the outer world, and have made their homes there. Citizens from many other States—men from New England and from New York, and from Ohio and from Southwestern States—have come up into that region, and by hundreds and thousands, along the shore and back in the country, have built themselves homes. Many of them were miners who went to the mines for copper and for iron in that region; and as one copper mine after another gave out they have selected places, or while they were at work there they selected places, and built themselves homes through a region twenty-five or thirty miles back from the lake and stretching along forty or fifty miles.

In their behalf I ask Senators, whatever their prejudices may have been, to forego them in behalf of that region where the value of the lands and the facilities for construction have prevented and which, without aid from the State of Michigan or without this remaining aid of the Government of the United States, will prevent them from having an outlet.

Several of these men purchased the alternate sections of this land, or parts of them, for their homes, under the pre-emption laws, and they paid the Government $2.50 an acre because the Government promised aid in building a railroad past their homes.

The alternate sections that were purchased in this region off the mineral lands were bought at that price, and they were reserved from homestead exemptions under the law. The people there have paid the Government two dollars and a half an acre charged by the Government, because one-half of the land had been given for railroad purposes and the Government wanted to make its dollar and a quarter an acre good on those wild lands as on the fertile prairie lands of the West. They have a right to expect that this Government, as far as it can consistently, will aid in the building of the road along by their premises where they have paid double price for their land. They do expect it, and they expect that my feeble voice will be raised in behalf of them against the prejudice and against the clamor, because it is just, because it is right, and because capital did not go into that region to build roads for profit which would accrue, but because this road has been built so far, and will be built hereafter, by the urgency of settlers who have no other outlet from their homes for their produce or their travel or their visits of affection to the countries and the States from which they came.

I have watched with a great deal of interest through many years the constant and persistent attacks which this poor road in the wilderness has had in common with all other roads, on the theory and the principle that the original grants were wrong, and that they should be taken from the companies who had not fulfilled their part of the contract. I agree with much that is said on that subject, but this road in the wilderness will never be invested in by capitalists, expecting it to be profitable; and I submit that this highway, this outlet, this only outlet, from the nature of the country, with the Porcupine Mountains on the one side and the Copper Range on the other, this only outlet through the valley of the Ontonagon to meet the other road which runs south of these ranges is the only probable, and I might say the only possible means that the people inhabiting the valley of the Ontonagon have now or ever will have of having direct railroad communication with the rest of the world.

Mr. President, I appeal to Senators in these last closing days of the session and in the last closing days of my service here, to give this amendment favorable consideration and to admit it, not for the sake of violating any principle which has been adopted or believed in by Senators here, but to admit it as the last act of kindness and of charity to a people who have gone into the wilderness, and upon my own assertion I say who have no other means of railroad outlet except through the valley of the Ontonagon to meet one of the other roads which capital will build, because that will be a connecting link of the Northern Pacific and the lake down into our State through the straits of Mackinaw, built now almost to this point, reaching it at the west and reaching it at the east by the filling in of a small portion of yet unbuilt road, and the remaining 10 or 15 or 20 miles of this road can reach to and communicate with the great East and the great West, and along a region of country settled by as intelligent, as earnest, as bold, as resolute a people as dwell upon this continent, who have shown their industry and their labors.

Men, women, and children there have shown their willingness to endure the hardships of the wilderness in a far-off country, really as remote now from intercourse with the rest of the world as Alaska. In their behalf I ask that the amount named in the amendment, which is nothing in the great, vast mass of the public lands, may be given to the road of these settlers, for it is their road that is being built for the men who have homes there. I have no doubt if Senators were familiar with that region, if they were familiar with the people, if they knew how little intercourse, during the cold months of winter, they can possibly have with their friends in the rest of the United States, there would not be one vote against extending the time for building this road, and giving the company the few sections of land which will enable it to make connection with the rest of the world.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I submit the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a vote on the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment and I hope the Senator will not press his report until a vote is taken.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let me submit the report, and if it leads to debate, I can give way for a vote.

Mr. PLUMB. Can not the Senator yield long enough simply to let us take the vote, and then it will be out of the way?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will yield as soon as the report can be taken up, if the amendment is to lead to no further debate.

Mr. CONGER. Let the vote be taken and then claim the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Minnesota proposes to make a conference report.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a privileged question.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have sent to the desk the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator to yield that a vote may be taken on this railroad bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire action on the conference report at this time?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will yield if a vote can be taken on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], and as he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore refrain from voting.

Mr. PALMER (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to change my vote that I may be able to move a reconsideration. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—23.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Bowen, | Evarts, | Maxey, | Payne. |
| Brown, | Farwell, | Miller, | Riddleberger, |
| Butler, | Frye, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Sabin, |
| Cameron, | Gibson, | Mitchell of Pa., | Sherman, |
| Cheney, | Gray, | Morgan, | Stanford. |
| Conger, | Hoar, | Morrill, | |

NAYS—31.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Cullom, | Mahone, | Van Wyck, |
| Beck, | Edmunds, | Palmer, | Vest, |
| Berry, | George, | Plumb, | Walthall, |
| Call, | Hale, | Saulsbury, | Whitthorne, |
| Chace, | Harris, | Sawyer, | Williams, |

| Blair, | Gorman, | McMillan, | Sewell, |
| Camden, | Hampton, | McPherson, | Voorhees. |
| Dawes, | Harrison, | Manderson, | |
| Dolph, | Ingalls, | Platt, | |

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to make any speech on this subject. I merely wish to say, as there probably will be no yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill, that I am opposed to all bills——

Mr. PALMER. I should like to enter a motion to reconsider, if the Senator from Florida will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Then I move the adoption of the conference report which I have submitted on the river and harbor bill.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report on the river and harbor bill submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is impossible for the Senate to understand the bill reported in that way. It would be a great deal better that the Senator from Minnesota should state the changes which have been made so far as possible. It is impossible for us to know what part of the report was contained in the bill as it passed the House, and what part in the Senate amendments, and what is new.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If the reading of the report may be dispensed with at length, I will make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the report can not be dispensed with except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. After the Senator shall have made his statement, if it be satisfactory I will ask that the reading of the report be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course it will be perfectly in order to make any statement before the report is read.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill as it came to the Senate from the House appropriated $7,458,250. The Committee on Commerce increased the bill $2,927,050. The Senate made an additional increase of $235,000. So the aggregate amount of the total Senate amendment was $10,620,300. That is as the bill went into conference.

The committee of conference have made a decrease in the bill of $706,500. The total amount of the bill now, as reported by the conference committee, is $9,913,500. The decrease made in the bill by the conference committee is made by amending a large number of the items of the bill and reporting it back as a single amendment. I have the specific changes made. They are decreases of the Senate amendments. I can send the list to the desk that it may be read.

Mr. VEST. Send the list to the desk.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I send the list of amendments that were made in conference to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report of the conference committee read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan in presenting the conference report was making an explanation preceding the reading, a part of which is a statement that he sends to the desk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will now read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

10 Strike out $25,000 and insert $20,000, Rockland Harbor.
15 Strike out $50,000 and insert $40,000, Mount Desert.
19 Strike out $25,000 and insert $20,000, Back Cove.
22 Strike out $7,000 and insert $5,000, York Harbor.
26 Strike out $10,00 and insert $6,000, Little Harbor.
30 Strike out $10,000 and insert $5,000, North Hero and South Hero.
35 Strike out $6,000 and insert $7,000, Lynn Harbor.
35 Verbal amendment.
37 Strike out $20,000 and insert $15,000, Nantucket Harbor.
39 Strike out $20,000 and insert $15,000, Newburyport Harbor.

223 Strike out $50,000 and insert $40,000, Cleveland Harbor.
228 Strike out $3,000 and insert $1,000, Huron Harbor.
236 Strike out $30,000 and insert $25,000, Sandusky Harbor.
264 Strike out $35,000 and insert $30,000, Grand Marais Harbor.
266 Verbal amendment, Ludington Harbor.
283 Strike out $10,000 and insert $8,000, Saint Joseph Harbor.
283 Strike out $5,000 and insert $4,000, Saint Joseph Harbor.
328 Strike out $80,000 and insert $60,000, Milwaukee Harbor.
346 Strike out $50,000 and insert $40,000, Duluth Harbor.
357 Strike out $100,000 and insert $75,000, Humboldt Harbor.
376 Strike out $80,000 and insert $70,000, Yaquina Bay.
388 Strike out $10,000 and insert $7,500, Narraugus River.
392 Strike out $25,000 and insert $20,000, Pawtucket River.
397 Strike out $15,000 and insert $10,000, Green Jacket Shoals.
430 Strike out $20,000 and insert $15,000, Passaic River.
483 Strike out $25,000 and insert $20,000, Chincoteague Bay.
514 Strike out $10,000 and insert $5,000, Nansemond River.
514 Improving Nomini Bay and Creek: Continuing improvement, $5,000.
521 Strike out $175,000 and insert $165,000, Great Kanawha River.
535 Strike out $140,000 and insert $130,000, Cape Fear River.
536 Strike out $15,000 and insert $10,000, Cape Fear River.
612 Strike out $125,000 and insert $115,000, Saint John's River.
696 Strike out $150,000 and insert $125,000, Arkansas River.
807 Strike out "opposite" and insert "above."
808 Strike out "including," and after "Bay City" insert "and $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for."
870 Strike out $115,000 and insert $100,000, Illinois River.
924 Strike out all after the word "appropriated" down to and including the word "Michigan," in line 934.
968 Strike out $150,000 and insert $125,000, Cascades of the Columbia.
980 Strike out the word "such" and insert "the," and in same line strike out "by means of a boat railway," and in line 981 strike out the word "and" after "falls."
1005 Strike out $300,000 and insert $225,000, Columbia River.
1008 Strike out $80,000 and insert $50,000, Lower Willamette.
1025 Strike out $300,000 and insert $275,000, Missouri River.
1066 Strike out $20,00 and insert $15,000, reservoirs.
1098 Strike out $200,000 and insert $175,000, Mississippi River, Illinois to Ohio.
1109 Strike out $200,000 and insert $175,000, Mississippi River, Illinois to Ohio.
1114 Strike out $1,500,000 and insert $1,400,000, Mississippi River, below Ohio.
In section 2, after line 48, insert "Ohio River, with a view to protecting the channel opposite Cairo;" and in line 91 of same section strike out the letter "r" in Weymouth.

Mr. PLATT. Is the item of $5,000 for improving Nomini Bay and creek an addition?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir; that is an addition.

Mr. PLATT. What is the item in line 924?

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is a proviso in the appropriation for the survey of the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the effect of it?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is merely to leave the proviso for the survey.

Mr. CULLOM. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will now be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before that goes on, as this is a matter of great importance and nobody can understand the present state of the bill, I move that the further consideration of the report be postponed until to-morrow, and that the House bill, and the Senate amendments, and the conference amendments be printed in such a way as to show exactly what is the situation of these appropriations. We may as well test the sense of the Senate upon knowing what we are doing, in that way as in any other, and save a little time of the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the further consideration of the report be postponed until to-morrow and that the bill be printed as indicated by him.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I trust that will not be done. The report is a very plain one, and the changes which are made by it are indicated by the paper just read at the desk. I have already stated the total reduction and the gross amount of the bill. The total decrease by the conference committee was $706,500, and the total amount of the bill now is $9,913,800. The changes which have been read at the desk are decreases in the increases made in the Senate upon the House bill and upon the amendments made by the Senate to the House bill. But one new item has been added, which is the Nomini Creek item, to which attention was called, it being a very small amount of $5,000; and two surveys are inserted, one of which requires no appropriation and is merely the change of a word.

Mr. CONGER. There has been no change in the items of the House bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. There has been no change in the items of the House bill, and the report is one which can be understood perhaps with more ease than any conference report on an appropriation bill made to the Senate. There is no difficulty whatever in understanding it, and any further explanation that is desired can be given in a word.

Mr. VEST. I hope the motion of the Senator from Vermont will not prevail. I think that, all things considered, the conferees on the part of the Senate have done their duty fully and have been as successful in the conference with the managers on the part of the House as it was possible to expect. The items in the bill in which my State was particularly interested have been cut down. However, they have not been cut down in any undue or unjust proportion, but simply in the decrease generally made in the whole bill; and if we propose to have any river and harbor bill at all we ought to concur in this report. To agree to the motion will endanger the bill itself, and I certainly hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill differs from the other appropriation bills of the Government because it does not belong to its necessary autonomy. It is merely the sporadic, or I should rather say the epidemic action of Congress from session to session in appropriating money for the benefit of the various States and their people, and contractors, &c., and for sundry very important national objects; there is no doubt about that, but for so many more which are not national that certainly we ought to have a chance to understand it. The principle of acting on conference reports on a regular appropriation bill like the legislative bill or whatever, does not apply.

I of course have no expectation that the Senate will be willing to know just how this thing stands, seeing it every Senator for himself, and that this motion of mine will be carried; but my humble and simple opposition to this method of doing things can be just as well expressed by getting the yeas and nays on this particular motion as on any other, and I shall hope that somewhere and in some department of the Government the matter will have time enough given to it to scrutinize it before it becomes a law.

I noticed, but was obliged to be absent at the time when it came up, a very curious phrase in the House bill and in the Senate amendment, which was a substitute for the whole House bill, giving back to the State of Ohio all or a great part of the assets that the act of last year required her to turn over to the United States along with the Muskingum Canal, a very convenient and well-arranged little programme which would hardly attract notice, and which repealed so much of the act of last year as requires the State of Ohio to do certain things in regard to turning over with the Muskingum Canal the assets that had already been raised and belonged to it. There may be some very good reason for that, but I do not quite see it. We did not see it a year ago. That illustrates some of the characters and features of the bill that we have before us now.

I wish to repeat my affirmation that I will go as far as any other gentleman on this floor would go to provide out of the National Treasury for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States that are national, and belong to the nation for national purposes. As I say, I can just as well put in my feeble, and I am sorry to say ineffectual, protest against this sort of business by asking for the yeas and nays on this motion as on any other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the further consideration of the report until to-morrow with the order to print.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am inclined to vote against this motion, but in order to strengthen myself, I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont whether there is anything in the conference report doing more than merely reduce some figures in order to get this general agreement?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are two or three instances where the conferees between the two Houses have put in places that were not brought to the attention of either House. I understand that they are small and immaterial, but they cover a very important principle in our proceeding.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood there was one harbor that got $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And two other objects about surveys, or whatever, which cover the whole principle of conferees invading the things that are in disagreement between the two Houses. Each one of these amendments may be right, and as to the others I do not know until we can see how the whole scheme is.

Mr. HAWLEY. My impression was that whatever there was in the original bill in the way of general legislation and instruction remained the same, but that the items were merely cut down a certain figure, that they had taken off a certain per cent.

Mr. FRYE. That practically is the whole thing.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no change in the legislation of the bill, so to speak. I am satisfied to vote against postponement. I am satisfied with the reductions.

Mr. DOLPH. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to say that this report reduces the amount of the Senate amendments.

Mr. McPHERSON. To certain amounts, the items in the appropriations which reduces the aggregate of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are all taken off from the Senate side.

Mr. McMILLAN. They are all taken off the amendments made by the Senate, but still leave an increase upon the House bill on all those amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 57; as follows:

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK.

SENATOR FROM INDIANA.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to interrupt the proceedings to make an inquiry. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] this morning reported back the credentials of the Senator-elect from Indiana, Mr. Turpie.

Mr. HOAR. The claim.

Mr. PLATT. The claim. I should like to ask the Senator what the effect of that report was. I understood at the time that the effect of the report was simply to remit the whole proceedings to the next session of the Senate and to the Committee on Privileges and Elections as it should be then constituted. If, however, it in any way affects or bears upon the question whether the credentials are to be accepted, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider. Therefore I inquire what the Senator understands to have been the effect of his report?

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that I may answer the question of the Senator from Connecticut at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. Under the rules of the Senate all papers committed to any committee are to be returned to the files of the Senate at the expiration of the Congress and the function of the committee itself expires with the Congress. If the credentials of Mr. Turpie had been retained by the Committee on Privileges and Elections without action until noon of the 4th day of March, under the operation of that general rule precisely the thing would have happened then that happened this morning; that is, the paper would have gone back to the files of the Senate and the committee would have been discharged from its consideration. The only alternative to that course would have been an assumption by the committee or by the Senate at the present session to deal with the credentials of a gentleman claiming to be a Senator-elect before the time had arrived for the beginning of his term, and before he had presented himself to be heard upon the subject.

The Senate is a continuing body, which was organized at the beginning of the Government in 1789, and that organization is to continue, as we fondly hope, until time shall be no more, certainly until the destruction of the American Constitution. It is therefore possible that it might be within the constitutional power of the Senate to determine in advance the right of a Senator to a seat on this floor, and it would be a violation of all constitutional precedent, and it would be, in my judgment a violation of the sense of justice and propriety of the Senate and of the American people.

The effect, therefore, of this report is simply to remand to the action of the Senate, to be taken after the 4th of March, without prejudice, without being in the least affected by any action now any question which any person may see fit to raise, and that is all—no prejudice, for no prejudice against any person who may conceive himself to be entitled to a seat on this floor hereafter will arise or has arisen in consequence of the report of the committee or of the action of the Senate in accepting it.

Mr. PLATT. I so understood the matter, and, with the explanation which has been given, I have no desire to move a reconsideration.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. MILLER. I move the adoption of the following order to print a bill:

Ordered, That the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes, as passed by the Senate, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The order was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, and Mr. MILLER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY (in behalf of Mr. SEWELL) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DAMAGES TO SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, who were directed by a resolution of the Senate of December 8, 1886, "to investigate the accident which occurred in a freight elevator of the Senate wing of the Capitol in July last, whereby two employés of the Senate were seriously injured, and report their conclusions as to the responsibility for the same to the Senate at the earliest day practicable, together with a resolution providing for the payment to the persons so damaged of such sums as the committee may deem proper to cover the expenses, loss, and damage incurred thereby, if the committee shall be of opinion that compensation ought to be made," reported the following amendment to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

For compensation to J. M. Coombs for injuries received by the breaking of the gearing of the freight elevator under the sidewalk of the Senate wing of the Capitol, $2,500; said amount to be in full for all damages and for medical and all other expenses incurred and to be incurred by said Coombs on account of said injuries.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8594) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THOMAS B. NALLE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While the conference report on the river and harbor bill is laid aside for a moment, I ask leave to report from the Committee on the Judiciary a disability bill, which I have just discovered seems to be technically necessary to remove the disabilities of a gentleman in order that he may get a Mexican pension, and which has been delayed because the committee could not ascertain in what branch of the service of the United States he was until this moment by telegram; and at the request of a gentleman in the other House, and of the Senator from Virginia, I ask leave to report the bill at this time and put it on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received if there be no objection. The title of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11199) for the relief of Thomas B. Nalle.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove all legal and political disabilities imposed by virtue of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon Thomas B. Nalle, of the State of Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I simply wish to say that this gentleman has petitioned, but his petition did not state that he was a purser in the Navy, which I have just been able to discover. I am informed from the Navy Department that his accounts are settled and that he does not owe the United States anything, but that technically he was a naval officer as distinguished from a civilian, and, therefore, is still under disability.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. BECK (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.). I do not think anybody in the Senate cares for hearing this report read any longer.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to say that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] wishes this bill read through.

Mr. BECK. But he is not here.

Mr. MCMILLAN. He said he had to withdraw from the Chamber, and asked me if I would see that the report was read through.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire if it is not within the power of the Senate to protect itself from hearing read over what has been already read in its presence more than once to suit the whim of an absent Senator? I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold on the case now before the Senate that the Senator from Vermont having requested the report of the conference committee to be read, the reading must be continued.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is but little more of it. I hope it will be read through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been interposed and unanimous consent has been withheld. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary continued and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

Improving Ouachita River, Louisiana and Arkansas, and Black River, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $7,500.

Improving mouth of Brazos River, Texas: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Improving Buffalo Bayou, Texas: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Improving Arkansas River: Continuing improvement, $125,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall expend the appropriation under this head with reference to the final improvement of this river, as contemplated in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the year ending July 1, 1885, and as authorized in the bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors approved August 5, 1886, and in House Executive Document No. 90, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, said methods to be applied, as the Secretary of War may direct, at such points between Wichita, Kans., and the navigable mouth of the Arkansas River, at its junction with the Mississippi River, as he may deem best for the interests of commerce. And all moneys now to the credit of different sections of the Arkansas River, other than appropriations for the operating of snag-boats, shall be available for use under this head; and in future the engineer in charge of this work and the Secretary of War shall make report upon the progress and needs of this work under this head, instead of reporting upon disconnected projects, as heretofore. Nothing herein contained shall be understood to prevent the Secretary of War from applying any part or all of the funds previously appropriated for use at Fort Smith, Dardanelle, in Pine Bluff Reach, or from expending not exceeding $4,000 to remove the bar in front of Van Buren, or from allotting not exceeding $8,000 as a contingent fund for expenditure in Pine Bluff Reach.

Improving Saint Francis River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Improving White River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

For removing snags, wrecks, and other obstructions in the Arkansas River, $15,000.

Improving Black River, Arkansas and Missouri, $2,500.

Improving Big Hatchee River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Improving Caney Fork River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $1,500.

Improving Clinch River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $2,500.

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky, below Nashville: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky: Continuing improvement above Nashville, $100,000; with a view to secure a uniform depth in the channel of 4 feet, commencing with the lock at or near the lower island at Nashville.

Improving French Broad River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Improving Hiawassee River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $1,000.

Improving South Forked Deer River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Improving Tennessee River, Tennessee, above Chattanooga: Continuing improvement, $2,500.

Improving Tennessee River at Big Mussel Shoals, Little Mussel Shoals, Elk River Shoals, and Colbert Shoals, Alabama: To complete improvement at those localities, $125,000.

Improving South Fork of Cumberland River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $2,500.

Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Improving Tradewater River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Improving the Falls of the Ohio River, at Louisville, Ky.: Continuing improvement, according to the last plan of the engineer in charge, $75,000.

For the purchase of the improvements known as the Green and Barren River improvements, $150,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a full and absolute conveyance of said improvements, together with rights of way, easements, piers, docks, and appurtenances of every nature belonging to or connected with said improvements, by the owner or owners thereof, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall have certified to the Secretary of War that the title is perfect.

Improving Muskingum River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $50,000; and so much of the act of August 5, 1886, as provides that said act should not take effect until "any balance of money appropriated by said State for the improvement of said river, and which is not expended on the 15th day of July, 1886," should be transferred to the United States, is hereby repealed; and so much of the sum of $20,000 appropriated for the improvement of said river in said act as is unexpended is hereby made available for the care, protection, and improvement of the locks and dams and other property on said river.

Improving Detroit River, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $35,000.

Improving Saint Joseph River, Michigan, from its mouth to Berrien Springs, $2,000.

Improving Saint Clair Ship-Canal, Michigan: Continuing improvement $18,750.

Improving Saint Mary's River, Michigan: Continuing improvement on new lock, dam, and approaches, $100,000.

Improving Saint Clair River, Michigan: Continuing improvement by removing Middle Ground, in the river opposite Port Huron, $15,000.

Improving Hay Lake Channel, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Improving Saginaw River, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $25,000; of which $12,500 are to be used above Bay City, and $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the channel in front of West Bay City.

Improving Chippewa River, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement from the Dalles Dam to its mouth, $7,500.

Improving Fox River, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement below Montello, $50,000; of which $5,000, or so much as may be necessary, may be expended in dredging the south channel at the outlet of Lake Winnebago.

Improving Saint Croix River, Wisconsin and Minnesota: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Improving Wabash River, Indiana and Illinois: Continuing work on lock and dams at Grand Rapids, and on the river from Grand Rapids to its mouth, $25,000; and the further sum of $9,500, $7,000 of which is to be used at or near Grayville, and $2,500 on the river above Vincennes.

Improving White River, Indiana: Continuing improvement, $5,000; no part of which is to be expended until the bridges are so changed as not to obstruct navigation.

Improving Calumet River, Illinois and Indiana: Continuing improvement, $12,500; of which sum $4,500 are to be expended between the Forks and one-half mile east of Hammond, Ind.: Provided, however, That no part of said sum, nor any sum heretofore appropriated, except the said $4,500 for the river above the Forks, and $11,250 appropriated by the river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, to be used between the Forks and one-half mile east of Hammond, Ind., shall be expended until the entire right of way as set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 9, second session Forty-seventh Congress, shall have been conveyed to the United States free of expense, and the United States shall be fully released from all liability for damages to adjacent property-owners, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War; and if any of the owners of real estate required to be taken or that is damaged for the purpose of straightening or widening that portion of the Calumet River for which the appropriation herein is now made, can not be induced to convey to the United States such real estate so required, and release their claim for damages caused by said improvement, or should the owner or owners be incapable of conveying and releasing, or should his or her name or residence be unknown, or he or she be a non-resident of the State of Illinois, it shall then be the duty of the United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois to immediately file a petition in any court having jurisdiction thereof, in the manner and as authorized by the laws of the State of Illinois in such cases, for the purpose of ascertaining the just compensation to be paid to the respective owners of the land taken or damaged: Provided, however, That the other owners of property and parties interested in said improvement shall first execute a bond to the United States, to be approved by the Secretary of War, for the payment of the costs of such proceedings, and to pay any judgment that may be rendered therein; and on failure to do so the proceedings shall be dismissed.

Improving Illinois River, Illinois: Continuing improvement $100,000.

And for the purpose of making and maintaining a continuous water way from the waters of Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River, to be not less than 160 feet in width and 7 feet in depth at low-water mark, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Illinois and Des Plaines Rivers from the city of La Salle to Lake Joliet, with a view to the improvement of said rivers by a system of locks and dams, of such height and dimensions as will maintain a water way of the depth and width aforesaid between said places, and of a capacity for steamboats equal to that now furnished by the locks and dams now constructed and being constructed on the Illinois River.

And the said Secretary of War is also authorized and directed to cause to be surveyed and located a canal of the width and depth hereinbefore mentioned from Lake Joliet to the waters of Lake Michigan at or near the city of Chicago, with locks of the same size as those on the Illinois River; that is, 350 feet in length and 75 feet in width. And in the survey and location of said canal it is hereby provided that the Illinois and Michigan Canal, or so much or such parts thereof as may be deemed advisable, may be included in the location and construction of the same, it being the intention to have said canal constructed on the shortest and best line from Lake Joliet to such point on Lake Michigan as may be determined upon by the said Secretary of War, having due regard to the cost of construction.

And the said Secretary of War is also further authorized and directed to cause to be located, on such line as he may approve, from the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin to the Mississippi River at or above the mouth of Rock River, a canal, to be constructed 80 feet wide at the water-line and to have a depth of not less than 7 feet of water, with locks 170 feet long and 30 feet wide, and also a necessary feeder for said canal; said canal to be known as the Illinois and Mississippi Canal.

The Secretary of War shall cause to be made and submitted to Congress detailed plans for the construction of said canals and feeder, and for the improvement of the Illinois and Des Plaines Rivers from La Salle to Lake Joliet, together with estimates of the cost of such construction and improvement.

And for the purpose of making said surveys and locating said canals and feeder, in addition to any unexpended balance which may remain of the amount appropriated in the river and harbor act, approved August 5, 1886, for defraying the expenses of the board of engineers therein authorized and directed to report upon the acquisition and improvement of the Illinois and Michigan Canal and the construction of the Hennepin Canal, which may be used for that purpose, the further sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Improving Gasconade River, Missouri: Continuing improvemet, $2,500.

Improving Osage River, Missouri: Continuing improvement by snagging and removing obstructions, $2,500.

Improving Black River, Arkansas and Missouri, up to Poplar Bluff, Missouri: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Improving Little River, Missouri and Arkansas, from Hornersville to the junction of Little River with Saint Francis River, $5,000.

Improving Saint Francis River, Missouri and Arkansas, from Greenville to the Arkansas State line, $5,000.

Improving Red River of the North, Minnesota: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Improving Yellowstone River, Montana and Dakota: Continuing improvement, $12,500.

Improving Mokelumne River, California, by removing obstructions, $1,500.

Improving San Joaquin River and Stockton and Mormon Sloughs, California: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Improving Sacramento and Feather Rivers, California: Continuing improvement, $10,000; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to use for snagging and dredging operations only $30,000 of the money heretofore appropriated for improving said river, in addition to the amount authorized by the act of August 5, 1886, for improvement of rivers and harbors.

Improving canal around the Cascades of Columbia River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $125,000.

Improving the Upper Columbia River, including Snake River, Oregon and Washington Territory: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to appoint a board of three engineers from the United States Army whose duty it shall be to thoroughly examine the obstructions to navigation in the Columbia River at the Dalles and Celilo Falls, and at Three and Ten Mile Rapids, and to report to the Secretary of War, on or before the first Monday in December next, as to the feasibility and advisability of overcoming the obstructions at the Dalles and Celilo Falls, by widening to a navigable status for large-tonnage river-boats, the channel of said river at Three and Ten Mile Rapids, accompanied by careful and detailed plans, with estimates of the cost and a statement as to the usefulness of such improvements to navigation and of their relations and value to commerce; and said board shall also report, at the same time, as to any other plan or project for overcoming said obstructions at said points, whereby said obstructions to navigation may be removed, which in the judgment of said board may be deemed either more desirable than the above or worthy of consideration by the Secretary of War and Congress, and shall report detailed plans, with estimates of the cost of such proposed improvement or improvements, and as to their relations to commerce and usefulness to navigation; and said board shall report which of said projects is by it deemed most advisable. And the Secretary of War shall transmit said report to Congress, at its next session, with his own views and those of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army thereon; and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the cost of making said examination and survey and the expenses of said board.

Improving the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon, $225,000.

Improving Lower Willamette River, and Columbia River below Portland, Oreg.: Continuing improvement, $50,000; of which $5,000 is to be used on the river in front of Portland.

Improving the Upper Willamette River above Portland, Oreg.: Continuing improvement, $7,500.

Improving Coquille River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $12,500.

Improving Umpqua River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Improving Chehalis River, Washington Territory: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Improving Cowlitz River, Washington Territory: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Improving Skagit, Stellaquamish, Nootsack, Snohomish, and Snoqualmie rivers, Washington Territory: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City: Continuing improvement, $275,000; of which one-half, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, at Atchison, Fort Leavenworth reservation, Arrow Rock, and Omaha, Plattsmouth, Eastport, Brownsville, and Sioux City; of which sum $5,000 may be used between the southern limits of Saint Joseph and the head of Lake Contrary, if in the judgment of the commission it be necessary. And all the expenditures of this paragraph shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Improving Missouri River from Sioux City to Fort Benton: Continuing improvement, under the direction of the Secretary of War, $50,000.

For removing obstructions in the Missouri River, $11,000.

Improving the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $175,000; of which sum $25,000 shall be used in enlarging the canal basin near the locks at Louisville, Ky., as recommended in the Engineer's report for 1885, at page 1804; also a sum not exceeding $20,000 may be used for the improvement of Davis Island dam, if necessary; also $25,000 in removing the rock obstruction at the mouth of Licking River; also $7,500 of said Ohio River appropriation may be expended in constructing an ice-pier, pursuant to the present or prospective plans of the Chief of Engineers, at or near Portsmouth, Ohio: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to obtain, if he can do so without cost to the United States, a perpetual lease or conveyance of the riparian rights of the property-owners at said locality, in the event said ice-pier shall be located where there is no improved landing place: And provided further, That at said locality, if there is an improved landing, he shall first obtain a relinquishment of wharfage rights and dues in favor of water craft seeking protection from damage by ice; and no part of this appropriation shall be used for such purpose until the foregoing conditions are complied with.

For continuing operations upon the reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi River, $15,000; to be expended in care and maintenance of dams built, increasing the lift of the Pokegama reservoir, in survey of Sandy Lake and River, and in securing the title, for reservoir purposes, to the low lands below the Pokegama reservoir.

For operating snag-boat on Upper Mississippi River, $10,000.

Improving Mississippi River between Aitken and Grand Rapids: Continuing improvement, $7,500.

Improving Mississippi River from Saint Paul to Des Moines Rapids: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

Improving Mississippi River at Des Moines Rapids Canal, under the modified project, $15,000; and the sum of $20,000, together with the sums heretofore appropriated for that purpose, to be used in the construction of a pier connecting the outer wall of said canal with the pivot-pier of the bridge at Keokuk, Iowa, in accordance with the report and plans of Captain McKenzie, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, submitted March 18, 1882.

Improving Mississippi River from Des Moines Rapids to mouth of Illinois River, including Quincy, Hamburg Bay, Quincy Bay, and the removal of the bar at the mouth of Whipple Creek: Continuing improvement, $66,000.

Improving Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois River to the mouth of the Ohio River, including the completion of the work at Alton, and, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the protection of the Illinois shore opposite the mouth of the Missouri River: Continuing improvement, $175,000; of which $12,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in extending the work for the protection of the eastwardly bank of the Mississippi River at Cairo, and the prevention of its wash or erosion, commencing at the southerly end of the present Government revetment work and continuing down stream, and $12,500 for continuing improvement at Cape Girardeau, Missouri, and Montona Point, Illinois: Provided, That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may use not to exceed $25,000 of said sum of $175,000 to correct the current of the river and improve the channel at Saint Louis.

Improving Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $1,400,000; which sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, and for the salaries and traveling expenses of the members thereof: Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended to repair or build levees for the purpose of reclaiming lands or preventing injury to lands or private property by overflows: Provided, however, That the commission is authorized to repair and build levees if, in their judgment, it should be done as part of their plan to afford ease and safety to the navigation and commerce of the river and to deepen the channel: And provided further, That no work of bank protection or revetment shall be executed in said reaches or elsewhere unless, in the judgment of the commission, the completion of the permeable contracting works, and the establishment of a uniform width of the high-water chanel, will not secure the desired stability of the river banks: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the construction of revetment works where the banks are caving at Greenville Reach, Delta Point, in front of the cities of Vicksburg, Memphis, Hickman, Columbus, and Plaquemine: And provided further, That contraction works shall be built at the same time in the wide portions of the river immediately above the said revetment works. Of the amount herein appropriated for the Lower Mississippi, $75,000 are to be expended in continuing the work in progress at New Orleans; $100,000 for the rectification of the Red and Atchafalaya Rivers by preventing further enlargement of the latter stream and restricting its outlet capacity, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red or Old River into the Mississippi; $50,000 in improving navigation in the Greenville Reach by preventing the bank at Greenville from further caving; $50,000 for improving the river at Vicksburg, and $25,000 in completing the work on the river at Memphis; also $50,000 for work on the river at Hickman, $25,000 for work on the river at Columbus, Ky., and 40,000 for work on the river at Plaquemine, La.

For examinations and surveys at South Pass, Mississippi River, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1875, $10,000.

For survey of the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to its headwaters: Continuing survey, $25,000.

For gauging the waters of the Lower Mississippi River and its tributaries, as provided for in joint resolution of February 21, 1871, $5,000.

For continuing the removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions in the Mississippi River, $35,000.

For gauging the waters in the Columbia River, $1,000.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion, to cause examinations or surveys, or both, to be made, and the cost of improvements to be estimated, at the following localities, to wit:

For the survey of the channel in Pensacola Bay to Milton, Fla., and estimate for a deep-water channel.
For the survey and estimate for the Northwest Channel at Key West, Fla.
For survey of bay and outer bar at Saint Angustine, Fla.
For the survey of the Alafia River, Florida.
Charlotte Harbor and Caloosahatchie River, Florida.
For a survey and estimate of an inland channel through Mosquito Lagoon and Indian River to Jupiter Inlet, Fla.
For the survey of the Mobile River from Mount Vernon Arsenal to the channel in the Bay of Mobile, to ascertain the depth and width of the channel, and what obstructions, if any, exist, that would prevent a ship drawing 25 feet water from reaching Mount Vernon Arsenal from Mobile.
Coosawatchie River, South Carolina.
Broad River, South Carolina.
Survey of Bogue Phalia, in Mississippi, especially the part known as the Narrows.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the money herein appropriated for improvements, other than surveys and estimates, in carrying on the various works, by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government. Where said works are done by contract, such contract shall be made after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such manner and form as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidders, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require, conditioned for the faithful prosecution and completion of the work according to such contract, and for the prompt payment of all liabilities incurred in the prosecution thereof for labor and material.

"SEC. 4. For examinations, surveys, and contingencies, and for incidental repairs, for which there is no special appropriation, for rivers and harbors, $100,000: Provided, That no survey shall be made of any harbors or rivers until the Chief of Engineers shall have directed a preliminary examination of the same by the local engineer in charge of the district, or an engineer detailed for the purpose; and such local or detailed engineer shall report to said Chief of Engineers whether, in his opinion, said harbor or river is worthy of improvement, and shall state in such report fully and particularly the facts and reasons on which he bases such opinion, including the present and prospective demands of commerce; and it shall be the duty of the Chief of Engineers to direct the making of such survey if, in his opinion, the harbor or river proposed to be surveyed be worthy of improvement by the General Government; and he shall report to the Secretary of War the facts, and what public necessity or convenience may be subserved thereby, together with the full reports of the local engineer. Said reports of preliminary examinations and surveys shall be made to the House of Representatives, and are hereby ordered to be printed when so made."

And the Senate agree to the same.

M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ALBERT S. WILLIS,
NEWTON C. BLANCHARD,
THOS. J. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

The report was concurred in.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave at this time to call up the bill (H. R. 10233) to convey to and confirm in the city of Aurora, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois, a small island in Fox River located within the limits of said city.

Mr. TELLER. There is already a bill before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. There will be no discussion about this little bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care. I think the bill before the Senate had better go on, and we can take that up afterwards.

Mr. CULLOM. Is there a bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I hope as soon as that is disposed of the Senate will allow me to call up this little local bill to which there will be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, and so forth.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe the question now before the Senate is whether we will reconsider an amendment that was voted down preceding the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the pending question to be the motion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment that he offered was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I was on the Committee on Public Lands that reported this bill, and was satisfied with the bill as reported as being the best one that could be obtained from that committee at the time; but I have always been satisfied on this Ontonagon question, which has been before the committee in one form or another for about seven or eight years—I have always been satisfied that injustice was to be done to the State of Michigan in the forfeiture of this land grant.

The circumstances of the situation in North Michigan are rather peculiar, and this country has a great deal more interest in that region than we are apt to suppose. There is a good deal of activity in the United States now to procure steel for the purpose of making ships and guns, and the like, and it is well known that the best mines for Bessemer metal in the United States lie in the northern peninsula of Michigan. It is a very inaccessible sort of country, and it is almost impossible to get at the ores in that region of the world except by lines of railroad reaching from Lake Superior down to the ore-beds. These ore-beds and their great value as being ores low in phosphorus, good Bessemer ores, have led to the building of a railway east and west across the northern peninsula of Michigan. That railway is about 50 miles, as I understand the distance, south of Ontonagon. Ontonagon is on Lake Superior and is a very good bay. This railroad company, whose lands we are now about to forfeit, has struggled on in the midst of a great many adversities for the purpose of trying to connect the Bay of Ontonagon with the Wisconsin State Line and the system of railways that penetrates to that line from the south. It has proceeded now until about 40 miles of the line are completed. Under this grant this railroad company is entitled absolutely under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to one hundred and twenty sections of land as a gift from the Government, whether one foot of road had ever been built or not. It was also entitled to lands progressively as the road might be built. Forty miles, as I understand, of this road have been constructed, and the company is now proceeding in the best way it can to construct the rest of the line.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to correct the Senator from Alabama by saying that only 20 miles have been built.

Mr. MORGAN. Twenty miles have been built.

Mr. PALMER. What we ask for is the extension of the limit of time for the grant for two years that we may complete an additional 19 miles.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, let me ask the Senator from Michigan, what is the distance between Ontonagon and the east and west line of road that is connected with that country?

Mr. PALMER. I understand it is 39 miles. It may, by changes of the lines, be less. It may be made less hereafter, but now it is 39 miles.

Mr. MORGAN. So that there are only 19 miles of the road remaining now to connect with that line?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Nineteen miles remain. From that railway crossing from the point of junction of those two railroads to the northern line of Wisconsin, I suppose is about 50 miles?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. We have the case then. This bill forfeits 50 miles, or thereabouts, of this railway grant, and the amendment proposed by the two Senators from Michigan would save this company the lands opposite to about 19 miles of unconstructed road. The amendment, as I understand it, contemplates that this company shall have two years within which to complete its line to the point of junction with that east and west road, the name of which I do not know. Now I submit to the Senate in connection with the facts that I have just been stating, the importance of these iron mines to the people of the United States, the difficulties that have environed the building of this road, the struggle that is now being made to get this road down to a point of connection with the east and west line—for the road we are forfeiting is a north and south road—in view of all these circumstances, I ask the Senate now is it not exactly just and fair that we should accord to the Senators from Michigan what they claim under this amendment?

There is one reason connected with all this agitation about the forfeiture of the Ontonagon land-grant which has always impressed me with the idea that the Congress of the United States is doing wrong to lend its assistance to this act of forfeiture; and if I believed that the act of forfeiture itself would operate to pass the title back into the United States absolutely, without the right of any person to inquire into the effectiveness of our legislation for that purpose, I would vote against the bill. I would feel bound to do it, because I have understood this question from the beginning down to the last word that has ever been spoken before the committee.

The main object of getting this legislation is to try to settle through an act of Congress the titles to certain lands in the peninsula of Michigan. While I am entirely willing that the Government of the United States should do right in respect of every purchaser of land under it and every grantee of land under it, I am not willing, nor have I ever been, to resolve the Senate of the United States into a judicial tribunal to settle, as it is supposed we have the power to do, once for all, the title to any man's land, taking a tract of land from one man and giving it to another. But I will not pursue that line of remark any further because the amendment in this case yields up 50 miles of this railway land-grant to the forfeiture that is claimed by the gentlemen who are so anxious to have a forfeiture declared, and it asks to save only the lands opposite the 19 miles of unconstructed road.

Mr. President, during this session of Congress the Senate has voted upon two propositions here by practically a unanimous vote. One is the confirmation of a grant made to the Backbone Railroad in Louisiana. The Senate found in that case sufficient reasons for departing from that rule which seems to obtain now in the minds of the Senate very largely, that every railroad grant that has not been completed shall be forfeited absolutely, and in the case of the Backbone land grant in Louisiana the Senate voted, and the House of Representatives afterwards voted, that we would compose the difficulty in that part of Louisiana arising out of this land grant, a grant to a company that many of us had believed had no rights at all.

The other case to which I refer is a case in Florida. There a question arose as to whether the land grant had ever been effectual or not. The Committee on Public Lands reported a bill to the Senate for the purpose of carrying that question into the courts of the United States and there having it decided; and that committee declined—and no amendment was offered in the Senate to change its action—that committee declined to report a bill for the forfeiture of the part of the lands that was opposite the uncompleted parts of that railroad.

So, then, here are two cases where the Senate has distinctly departed from the rule requiring an absolute forfeiture of all lands under all circumstances and conditions of every railroad company that had not completed its road within the period limited by the original act of grant. I maintain that this is a case of far greater equity than any case that has been presented to this body. To whom did these lands belong originally? Not to the United States Government. They belonged to the States of the American Union and they were granted by deeds and other conveyances, usually by deed and acts of admission into the Union, to the Government of the United States, to be held by the Government in trust for the States.

When the United States Government becomes possessed of these lands and grants them, as was done in this case to the State of Michigan to enable that State to connect its northern bays along Lake Superior with its southern line, and the people who were encouraged by this legislation have gone on to construct a railroad there, I maintain that when an equity is set up by that State to the enjoyment of these lands, it ought to be respected; and when the two Senators from that State come to us and inform us that to destroy this railroad grant for the 19 miles yet remaining to be completed is to stop the road or to embarrass it very greatly, and that the road is necessary for bringing out valuable material, and the people of that country are interested and in which the United States Government as a Government is interested in getting hold of these valuable Bessemer ores in that country, I think it is as little as the Senate of the United States can do to hear this petition, for it is nothing else, set up by the Senators from that State for the little residuum of that grant after we take 50 miles of it and condemn it for public use.

The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has been in this body for six years, and whenever any measure came up in respect of the forfeiture of this land grant, animated alone by the desire that his State should have prosperity, and that it should be able to connect its fertile valleys in the south with its bays and its iron ore on the north, he has appeared before the committee time and again with the utmost anxiety arguing and laboring for the preservation of this grant of land. I respect his assiduity and his patriotism, and I never have been able to deny to myelf the thorough conviction that he was representing a right of his State in the matter, and something that we ought not to take away from that State.

Now let me ask of what benefit will this land when forfeited be to the Government of the United States? Who is going to get it? When you projected this grant you put the provision in that was common in all the land grants of the country, that the odd-numbered sections retained by the United States, or the even numbered, whichever it was, should be sold for two dollars and a half an acre. If that law had been maintained, if that system had been kept up, there would not be a railroad in any of the States east of the Mississippi River that would have cost the United States Government one cent of expenditure. On the contrary, the Government of the United States out of the enhanced price of two dollars and a half an acre would have got back every dollar in value of the land in the odd sections which it yielded up into the hands of those States for these works of internal improvement.

Under this grant of lands to Michigan for the benefit of this railroad company settlers went in there, induced by our promise that these lands should remain a grant for that railroad company, and that a railroad would be built through that region. They have settled within the limits of the grant, and many of them have paid two dollars and a half an acre for their lands. Then afterwards we changed our policy; and how did we change it? We changed it so as to give to every foreigner who might approach these shores, and who in an hour after landing might make an oath that he had an intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, the right to take the public domain from our children and receive it at the value only of about $16 per 160 acres, I believe it is, the mere cost of the survey and of getting the title out of the office. We turned away from these men who have paid us two dollars and a half an acre for this land upon our promise that this grant should stand for the building of conveniences of railways into their midst; and for mere political capital, for the mere sake of pandering to the foreign vote of this country, we give away the whole public domain to aliens as well as to citizens, they paying for it the mere price of the fees to get the title out of the office.

Where does this land go when you take it away from the State of Michigan, whose citizens have been thus struggling to build this road? It is to be frittered away into the hands of these very men. You break the morality of your engagement, if not the actual letter of the bond, and take the land out of the hands of the State of Michigan and forfeit it, merely with the desire to give it away to foreigners who may come here and settle on our domain.

I will not lend my vote to any such project as that. I will respect the rights of the people of that State. I will respect the voice of her Senators; yes, I will respect their petitions that have been laid before this body and this committee now year after year trying to save this railroad company in its efforts to benefit the people to whom we have promised benefits under the land grant; and more than that, to benefit very greatly the commerce of the United States, and, still above that, benefit very greatly the very Government of the United States.

I should think that it was an unseemly thing to do in the face of these petitions of these two Senators to take this little modicum of land that lies opposite the 19 miles of uncompleted road and make it a sacrifice to that public sentiment that tries to buy the applause of mankind by making concessions to their cupidity. We can get votes enough without doing that. The people of the United States are not an unjust people. They do not want their representatives to stand on the floor of the House or of the Senate and bribe popular sentiment with largesses and large blocks of public land. They do not applaud a man merely because he may join his voice in a howl against railroad companies. They want to know of a Senator here whether he has got the manhood to do that which is just and right in the face of God and man. What is claimed of us is no more than that, and I trust that the Senate will reconsider its vote and will adopt this amendment, and will consent to limit this land forfeiture by taking 50 miles of the land grant and still leave to the State of Michigan 19 miles with which it can go on and complete this very important road.

Mr. TELLER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the motion to reconsider do lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. PALMER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Chair please again state the question so that we may all understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to agree to the amendment proposed by him. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—29.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ISLAND IN FOX RIVER.

Mr. CULLOM. I move now to take up the bill H. R. 10233. It is a local bill, and I think there will be no discussion about it.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 10233) to convey to and confirm in the city of Aurora, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois, a small island in Fox River located within the limits of said city, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator if he is willing that that bill may be laid aside for a moment until we pass some bridge bills?

Mr. CULLOM. This bill will not take two minutes, I think, and then I shall be out of the Senator's way.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. M. HOBBS.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2368, being the bill (H. R. 118) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk informs the Chair that the bill is not in the files of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. I am sure it can be found in a moment; I have a copy of it here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. While the bill is being looked for the Chair will recognize the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

EMILE GUERIN AND CHERI P. MAJOR.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask to take up House bill 6330, Order of Business 2198.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6330) to confirm to Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of what is the object of the bill. If the United States does not convey anything, why make a deed?

Mr. MAHONE. This a part of a tract of land which was held under a Spanish grant prior to the acquisition of Louisiana by the United States, and the grants as then held were simply pocket titles of the Spanish Government. This pocket title has been lost, as is established by proceedings in this case before a Louisiana court, and it is now asked by the parties who desire to sell the land that they may have a quitclaim to this land from the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. M. HOBBS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the bill which was moved by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has been found, and if there is no objection it will be laid before the the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 118) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs. It appropriates $973.44 for the benefit of J. M. Hobbs, of Bentonville, Benton County, Arkansas, for tobacco furnished the Indian Department, under contract with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in 1860.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BECK. Before the bill was passed I rose to make a remark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs pardon of the Senator from Kentucky. Supposing that he desired to call attention to some other bill, the Chair proceeded to put the question on this. The order for the passage of the bill will be reconsidered.

Mr. BECK. It was just because the Chair so thought that I spoke as loud as I did. We are now in a general scramble as to who shall get up bills first. I desire to suggest to the Senate that we take up the House bills favorably reported, under the Harris rule, for the rest of the evening, and all will stand a better chance than by having a general scramble.

Mr. VANCE. Beginning where we left off the last time.

Mr. BECK. Let us begin there. ["Right!" "Right!"] Perhaps I am behind some of the others, and because I am behind I should like it to be the regular order to call up the House bills where we left off on the last call of the Calendar, but if that can not be done, I will not make any objection to any other course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take this occasion to say that the rules require that the Senator first addressing the Chair shall be first recognized, but when a large number are simultaneously addressing the Chair at the same instant, it is impossible to enforce the rule. The Chair is, therefore, left to the principle of natural selection and endeavors to so arrange the recognitions as to accommodate both sides of the Chamber alternately as far as possible. Is there objection to the passage of the bill that is now before the Senate? The Chair hears none, and the bill is passed.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that, recognizing fully the right of the Chair to do what he has done and the right of gentlemen to do just what they are doing, I suggested whether it would not be better, by unanimous consent, to go on regularly and avoid just that sort of thing which I know the Chair regards as embarrassing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a request which I believe, if listened to, will expedite our business and receive the unanimous approval of both sides of the Senate, and it will improve every hour without loss of time, of to-day and to-morrow at least. I would propose that, by the unanimous consent of the Senate, a vote be taken on what is called the Des Moines grant bill, and next a vote be taken on a bill to settle private land claims reported by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and, third, on what is called the Fourth of July bill, reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], be taken up and acted upon to-night. It probably will not excite any discussion, but it takes a long time to read it.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to any suspension of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. And that to-morrow we go on under the rules already adopted. It seems to me that is a fair proposition. To-morrow morning we go on under the Harris rule, and in two hours, from 11 o'clock to 1, we can take up a great multitude of bills to which is there no objection.

Mr. CULLOM. I remind the Senator that the Mahone rule, or the change of rule made on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, requires that we should take up Senate bills to-morrow, as we have had House bills up to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply say that to prevent a scramble we had better do what I propose. There is not a bill on the Calendar that I know of in which I have any local interest or any more than the general interest of every other Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I submit that to proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under what we call the Harris rule will be the most practicable thing we can do. We shall get rid then of twenty, thirty, or forty bills that can be enrolled and sent on their course, and after that we can take up the regular order of bills agreed on.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me suggest that we have had an agreement in which both sides of the Chamber have entirely concurred and desire to be carried out. So far as the subjects of that agreement are disposed of it relieves the situation; and the next bill in the order of agreement is what is known as the Des Moines River land bill. It will excite no discussion, I think; it will be passed soon and can be gotten out of the way. Of course in the meantime we can pass many House bills, but in an irregular way, which will take some time. I think if we adhere to the order of business already agreed on we shall get on as well.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas will be agreed to. I do not believe that it will take five minutes to dispose of the Des Moines River land-grant bill, and I desire very much to get a vote on that bill. It is the next in the regular order of business, and I therefore desire to move that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 2237, being Senate bill 2965.

Mr. HARRIS. I very much hope the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio will be acquiesced in by the Senate, and let us consume no more time in this controversy as to what we shall consider. His suggestion is in accordance with agreements heretofore made, and we shall make greater progress in that way than we can in any other. I very much hope the Senate will consent to it.

Mr. VANCE. If it be in order, as these suggestions amount to nothing, I will make the motion that we proceed to take up the Calendar and consider unobjected House bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent. The action of the Senate can only apply to a single question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to state that the motion I have made is in harmony with the suggestion submitted by the Senator from Ohio, as the bill included in my motion would be the first one in order if the Senate agree to his suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submits to the Senate the request for unanimous consent, which was presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], that after the vote has been taken upon the two measures to which he has alluded the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills under what is known as the Harris order. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT YANKTON.

Mr. CONGER. It would seem that for two or three hours gentlemen have been recognized to present bills here, and they have got through substantially, and those who have been striving to catch the favorable eye of the President are met by a proposition to forsake the usual way of standing in a row and take the chances and to take another rule. It was with great gratification I heard the Chair state that it was necessary for the Chair to pursue a kind of a rule of natural selection and recognize, according to the eternal fitness of things, those who ought to be recognized, and I took it at once that the Chair intended to intimate that the Senator from Michigan would now be recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Michigan if he addresses the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. I have been trying to have a bridge bill taken up to construct a bridge at Yankton, Dak., across the Missouri River, which, if it can pass the Senate, having been recommended by the Committee on Commerce, there will be a possibility of its passing the other House at this session and becoming a law. I have no interest in it other than to perform my duty, having reported the bill, and I ask the Senate to consider it that it may be sent on its way to the other House. It is a bill which the people of the West seem to think is of very great importance to their interests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Michigan to move to proceed to the consideration of a bill.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3354) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I supposed I had the floor to move to proceed to the consideration of the next Order of Business. However, if this will not take considerable time, I will yield.

Mr. CONGER. There will be no objection to it. It will take no time but the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c., and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. VAN WYCK, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

EMILE GUERIN AND CHERI P. MAJOR.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which it passed the bill (H. R. 6330) to confirm to Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands. The bill purports to have been reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims on the 14th of February, 1887, without amendment. I am a member of that committee; I received no notice of any meeting of that committee in the month of February, and I should be glad to know when that committee met, and what there is about this bill. If it be the one that I think it possibly may be, it was considered several sessions ago and reported adversely. Therefore, in order to have time to look into it and to know how this has happened, I enter a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to say one word. The bill came here and was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims. The Senator from Vermont was requested to consider the bill as a subcommittee. He did not have time to do so, and it was referred to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] to consider it. When he considered it the other members of the committee were seen without a call of the committee, and they approved of it, and it was reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And there was not any meeting of the committee?

Mr. RANSOM. There was no formal meeting of the committee. Each member of the committee had been seen in reference to it. I met the Senator from Vermont and told him of the conclusion the committee had come to. The bill was called up and debated ten days ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not happen to be present.

Mr. RANSOM. The bill was called up and debated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will see further about it.

Mr. RANSOM. I should state that when the Senator from Louisiana reported the bill it was at my request.

Mr. EUSTIS. I made the report to the Senate at the request of the chairman of the committee.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit an order, and ask unanimous consent for its adoption merely to promote the order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution of the Senator from Ohio will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That this evening, after recess, the following bills will be considered in their order:
First, the Des Moines bill.
Second, the private land bill.
Third, the Fourth of July claims appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VANCE. I object.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought it was to be added that we were then to go on under the Harris rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is to be done to-morrow.

Mr. HAWLEY. To-morrow is a long way off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope my colleague will withdraw his objection to taking up the three bills indicated by the Senator from Ohio. I think we shall get along more rapidly in that way.

Mr. VANCE. I think we shall get along more rapidly by taking up the Calendar of House bills as reported and, as was observed, until the Calendar was almost finished.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator from Ohio would extend the motion by saying that to-morrow, after the ordinary morning business, House bills favorably reported shall be continued till 1 o'clock I think that would meet the objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would have no objection to that, only I found that there was a disagreement among Senators around me, some preferring to take up Senate bills rather than House bills. I think it would be better to take up House bills, but I do not wish to add that point of disagreement to my motion.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator from Ohio will so modify his order, I will withdraw my objection. I want House bills to have some chance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will add to my order:

And that during the morning hour to-morrow the Senate will proceed under the Harris rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To that I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think this interruption has consumed more time than would have been required to dispose of the Des Moines land bill.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate take a recess at 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the Senator will not propose that now.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not propose to take a recess now, but I move that at 6 o'clock this evening the Senate take a recess from 6 until 8.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us wait until 6 o'clock comes and see about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion is in order, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order for a future time. It would be in order to take effect at the present moment without a resolution. I should like to see what is to come up at 6. We may wish to sit right along.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2965) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River Lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee propose to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That any person or persons who have heretofore or may hereafter settle upon and improve any tract of public land, or land the title of which is supposed to be in the United States at the time of such settlement, with the intention of perfecting their title to the same under any of the land laws of the United States, shall be permitted, either they, their heirs or assigns, to plead in support of their title to said land, against any other party or parties claiming the same, the title of the United States to said land as fully and completely as might be done by the United States Government itself.

Mr. PLATT. Is this the same bill which the Senate passed last year?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is a modification of the bill with respect to the time within which the Attorney-General is required to commence suit for the purpose of enforcing the title of the United States. There was also an additional section to the bill which would authorize the settler to plead in support of his title—the title of the United States—but the Committtee on Public Lands have reported in favor of striking out that section from the bill, and inasmuch as I desire to get a vote upon the bill and get it through the Senate, I shall not object to the adoption of that amendment.

In other respects there is no difference between this bill and the one which passed both Houses at the first session of the present Congress. I do not wish to enter upon a discussion of it. It has been thoroughly discussed and is perfectly understood by members of this body, and without consuming time I should prefer to have a vote.

Mr. EVARTS. When this bill in substance, not identically the same, was before the Senate at the last session, I discussed, in the interest of claimants from the State of Iowa, the merits of this bill. Large and important interests, represented rightfully under the laws and Constitution of the United States, held by constituents of mine in the State of New York had made controversy concerning this bill at previous sessions of Congress. My efforts then to prevent the passage of the bill were not successful, and when the matter was again introduced into this body by the veto, which is the only stage that it was brought to my notice, it passed here notwithstanding the veto of the President; but it failed to pass in the other House.

In the arrangements made for expediting business this bill comes promptly forward. At this stage of the session I shall not think it my duty to repeat at length the argument that was made before. The whole subject is understood upon both sides. The bill I regard as unconstitutional, as very dangerous to the peace of settlers and the quiet of titles which it undertakes to promote, and in all respects is a bill faulty in character and fraught only with mischief.

I shall vote against the bill, and I hope that all who agree with me in this view of the bill and all the Senate who are familiar with the arguments on both sides and with the nature of the provision, will vote against the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But one word in reply to the Senator from New York. There has been a controversy for years in respect to the rights of these settlers. The Senator from New York thinks the bill unconstitutional; I do not. He thinks the settlers upon these lands, who have spent more than a quarter of a century in making homes and raising families, have no rights; I differ from him, as they do. They ask, and I ask for them, that this question of difference be submitted to the courts; and that is all there is of it. It will be a judicial determination of the rights involved in this proceeding.

Mr. EVARTS. The difficulty about that is that the bill itself settles certain rights in advance of the courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10396) "making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in line 4, page 3, of the bill, the words "$10,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$377,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out from said amendment the words "Mahé (Seychelles)."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
PERRY BELMONT,
ROBERT R. HITT,
WM. R. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11202) making appropriations to pay pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RECESS.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask the Senator from Iowa to delay that motion for a little while and let us see how we get along with this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill the Senator from North Carolina has called up will remain the business before the Senate this evening.

Mr. RANSOM. I think we shall get through in a little while. However, I shall not insist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to entertaining the motion of the Senator from Iowa now? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. RANSOM. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, or corporation, or their legal representatives, claiming lands within the limits of the territory derived by the United States from the Republic of Mexico, and now embraced within the Territories of New Mexico, Wyoming, Arizona, or Utah, or within the States of Nevada or Colorado, by virtue of such lawful incomplete Spanish or Mexican grant, concession, warrant, or survey as the United States are bound to recognize and confirm by virtue of the treaties of cession of said country by Mexico to the United States, which, at the date of the passage of this act, have not been confirmed by act of Congress, or otherwise finally decided upon by lawful authority, and which have not become complete and perfect, in every such case to present a petition, in writing, to the judge of the district court of the United States in a State or Territory for the judicial district in which such lands may be situate, setting forth fully the nature of their claims to the lands, and particularly stating the date and form of the grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey under which they claim, by whom made, the name or names of any person or persons in possession of or claiming the same, or any part thereof, otherwise than by the lease or permission of the petitioner; and also the quantity of land claimed and the boundaries thereof, where situate, with a map showing the same, as near as may be; and whether the said claim has heretofore been confirmed, considered, or acted upon by Congress or the authorities of the United States, or been heretofore submitted to any authorities constituted by law for the adjustment of land-titles within the limits of the said territory so acquired, and by them reported on unfavorably or recommended for confirmation, or authorized to be surveyed or not; and praying in such petition that the validity of such title or claim may be inquired into and decided. And the said courts, respectively, are hereby authorized and required to take and exercise jurisdiction of all cases or claims presented by petition in conformity with the provisions of this act, and to hear and determine the same, as hereinafter provided, on the petition and proofs, in case no answer or answers be filed after due notice, or on the petition and the answer or answers of any person or persons interested in preventing any claim from being established, and the answer of the district attorney, where he may have filed an answer, and such testimony and proofs as may be taken; and a copy of such petition, with a citation to any adverse possessor or claimant, shall, immediately after the filing of the same, be served on such possessor or claimant in the ordinary legal manner of serving such process in the proper State or Territory, and in like manner on the district attorney of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the United States attorney for the proper district, as also any adverse possessor or claimant, after service of petition and citation, as hereinbefore provided within thirty days, unless further time shall, for good cause shown, be granted by the judge or court to whom said petition is presented, to enter an appearance and plead, answer, or demur to said petition; and in default of such plea, answer, or demurrer being made within said thirty days, or within the further time which may have been granted as aforesaid, the court shall proceed to hear the cause on the petition and proofs and render a final decree according to the provisions of this act; and in no case shall a decree be entered otherwise than upon full legal proof and hearing; and in every case the court shall require the petition to be sustained by satisfactory proofs, whether an answer or plea shall have been filed or not.

SEC. 2. That all proceedings subsequent to the filing of said petition shall be conducted as near as may be according to the rules of the courts of equity in the proper Territory or courts of the United States in the States, except that the answer of the attorney of the United States shall not be required to be verified by his oath, and no continuance shall be granted unless for good cause shown; and the said court shall have full power and authority to hear and determine all questions arising in said case relative to the title of the claimants, the extent, locality, and boundaries of said claim, or other matters connected therewith fit and proper to be heard and determined, and by a final decree to settle and determine the question of the validity of the title and the boundaries of the grant or claim presented for adjudication, according to the law of nations, the stipulations of the treaty concluded between the United States and the Republic of Mexico at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the 2d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1848, or the treaty concluded between the same powers at the city of Mexico, on the 30th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1853, and the laws and ordinances of the government from which it is alleged to have been derived, and all other questions properly arising between the claimants or other parties in the case and the United States, which decree shall in all cases refer to the treaty, law, or ordinance under which such claim is confirmed or rejected; and in all cases the party against whom the judgment or decree of said district court may be finally rendered shall within six months be entitled to an appeal to the supreme court of the proper Territory, and from the supreme court of a Territory, and if the case be in a United States court in a State, from that court to the Supreme Court of the United States, which shall be taken and allowed within one year, and in the manner now prescribed by law for taking appeals from said courts; which Supreme Court shall retry the cause, as well the issues or questions of fact as of law, and may hear testimony in addition to that given in the court below, and may amend the record of the proceedings below as truth and justice may require; in which Supreme Court of the United States every question shall be open, and its decision shall be final and conclusive; and should no appeal be taken as aforesaid, the judgment or the decree of the said district court shall in like manner be final and conclusive, as shall also be the decision of the supreme court of the Territory unless appealed from; and all the courts aforesaid shall advance the hearing of cases under this act as far as the same may be done consistently with the public interest.

SEC. 3. That the testimony which has been heretofore lawfully and regularly received by the surveyor-general of the proper Territory or State, or by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon all claims presented to them, respectively, shall be admitted in evidence in all trials under this act when the person testifying is dead, so far as the subject-matter thereof is competent evidence; and the court shall give it such weight as, in its judgment, under all the circumstances, it ought to have.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States, the surveyors-general of such Territories and States, or the keeper of any public records who may have possession of the records and testimony pertaining to any land-grants or claims for land within said States and Territories in relation to which any petition shall be brought under this act, on the application of any person interested, or by the attorney of the United States for either of said Territories or districts, to furnish copies of such records and testimony, certified under his official signature, with the seal of office thereto annexed, if there be a seal of office; which copies, if the originals are not within the jurisdiction of the court, shall have the same effect as testimony that the originals would have if produced. The legal fees shall be paid for such copies by the parties applying for the same, except the attorney of the United States.

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall extend only to such claims as may be presented and filed within three years from the date of its passage; and all petitions under this act may be presented in vacation or term time, but the final hearing on the same shall be had and the final decree rendered only at the regular terms of the district courts; and the judges of said district courts and the supreme courts in the said Territories are hereby authorized, in vacation in all cases arising under this act, to grant all orders for taking testimony, or otherwise to hear and dispose of all motions, and do all other things necessary to be done to bring the same on to a final hearing.

SEC. 6. That upon the final decision in accordance with this act of any claim prosecuted under it, in favor of the claimant or claimants, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court in which such final decree is had to transmit a duly certified copy of the decree to the surveyor-general of the proper State or Territory, who shall thereupon cause the lands specified in said decree to be surveyed at the expense of the United States. Triplicate plats and certificates of the survey so made shall be returned into his office, one of which shall remain in his office, and one, duly authenticated, shall be delivered, on demand, to the party interested therein, and one shall be sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; on receipt and approval of which survey and plat by said Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior, the President of the United States shall issue a patent to said claimant, subject to the provisions of this act; but one-half the necessary expense of making such survey and plat shall be paid by the claimant, and shall be a lien on said land, which may be enforced by sale of so much thereof as shall be necessary for that purpose, after a default of payment thereof for six months next after the approval of such survey and plat; and no patent shall issue until such payment.

SEC. 7. That the clerk of the court in which such petition may be filed shall, and he is hereby directed, when any petition or claim is filed under the provisions of this act, before any proceedings thereon, subject to the direction of a judge, to require reasonable security for all costs and charges which may accrue thereon in prosecuting the same to a final decree; and the district attorney, clerk, marshal, and witnesses shall severally be allowed such fees for their services and attendance as may be allowed by law for like services and attendance in the United States courts for the proper State or Territory.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the attorney of the United States for the proper Territory, in every case when the decision or decree of the district court is against the United States, to appeal the cause to the supreme court of the Territory; and if the decision of the latter court be against the United States, a copy of the record and decree, with a statement of the legal questions involved, shall be forthwith transmitted by the district attorney to the Attorney-General; and in like manner he shall transmit a copy of the record and decree in any case decided against the United States in the district court in a State; and unless the Attorney-General shall otherwise direct, the district attorney shall appeal the cause to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 9. That if in any case it shall so happen that the lands decreed to any claimant under the provisions of this act shall have been sold or granted by the United States, it shall be lawful for such claimants, or their legal representatives, at any time within one year after the rendition of the final decree in their favor, to execute, and file in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a release to the United States of all right, title, or claim to the land so sold or granted by the United States; and thereupon there shall be issued by the said Commissioner (under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior), to such claimant, or his legal representatives, scrip for an equal amount of acres so released, in quantities not exceeding 640 acres each, which scrip shall be assignable in such form as may be prescribed by said Secretary, and shall be receivable, acre for acre, in payment for any public lands in said Territories or States in the State or Territory in which the land grant or claim for which scrip is issued shall be located, that may be subject to private entry at the minimum price.

SEC. 10. That the provisions of this act shall extend to any city lot, town lot, village lot, farm lot, or pasture lot held under a grant from any corporation or town, any grant which may be entitled to confirmation under this Government, for the establishment of a city, town, or village, by the Spanish or Mexican Government, or the lawful authorities thereof; but the claim for said city, town, or village shall be presented by the corporate authorities of the said city, town, or village, or, where the land upon which said city, town, or village is situated was originally granted to an individual, the claim shall be presented by or in the name of said individual, or his legal representatives.

SEC. 11. That all claims which are by the provisions of this act authorized to be prosecuted shall, after three years from the taking effect of this act, if no petition in respect to the same shall have been filed as hereinbefore provided, be deemed and taken, in all courts and elsewhere, to be abandoned, and shall be forever barred: Provided, That minors, married women, and persons non compos mentis shall have one year after the removal of their respective disabilities within which to make their claims under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. That all the foregoing proceedings and rights shall be conducted and decided subject to the following provisions, as well as to the other provisions of this act, namely:

First. No claim shall be allowed that shall not appear to be upon a title lawfully and regularly derived from the Government of Spain or Mexico, and one that at the date of the acquisition of the territory by the United States the claimant would have had a lawful right to make perfect had the territory not been acquired by the United States, and that the United States are bound upon the principles of public law, or by the provisions of the treaty of cession, to respect and permit to become complete and perfect.

Second. No claim shall be allowed that shall interfere with or overthrow any just and unextinguished Indian title or right to any land or place.

Third. No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any gold, silver, or quicksilver mines or minerals of the same, unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of such mines or minerals to the grantee, or unless such grantee has become otherwise entitled thereto in law or in equity; but all such mines and minerals shall remain the property of the United States, with the right of working the same, which fact shall be stated in any patents issued under this act. But nothing in this act shall authorize the working of any mines therein by any person except the confirmee or his assigns, until Congress shall provide by law therefor.

Fourth. No claim shall be allowed for any land the right to which has hitherto been lawfully acted upon and decided by Congress, or under its authority.

Fifth. No proceeding, decree, or act under this act shall conclude or affect the private rights of persons as between each other, all which rights shall be reserved and saved to the same effect as if this act had not been passed; but the proceedings, decrees, and acts herein provided for shall be conclusive of all rights as between the United States and all persons claiming any interest or right in such lands.

Sixth. No confirmation of or decree concerning any claim under this act shall in any manner operate or have effect against the United States otherwise than as a release by the United States of its right and title to the land confirmed; nor shall it operate to make the United States in any manner liable in respect of any such grants, claims, or lands, or their dispositions, otherwise than is herein provided.

Seventh. No confirmation shall in any case be made or patent issued for a greater quantity than eleven square leagues of land to or in the right of any one original grantee or claimant, or in the right of any one original grant to two or more persons jointly, nor for a greater quantity than was authorized by the respective laws of Spain or Mexico applicable to the claim.

SEC. 13. That section 8 of the act of Congress approved July 22, A. D. 1854, entitled "An act to establish the offices of surveyors-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," and all acts amendatory or in extension thereof, or supplementary thereto, and all provisions of law inconsistent with this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 14. That all the public lands of the United States in the Rio Grande Valley and elsewhere in the Territory of New Mexico, and in the State of Colorado, occupied and possessed by persons who, or whose ancestors or grantors, became citizens of the United States by reason of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and occupied by any person or persons who have been in the actual bona fide occupancy or possession of said land, by themselves or their ancestors or grantors, for fifty years next preceding the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn from entry and sale under the laws of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general of New Mexico to investigate the rights of the parties claiming such parcels of land, and to report all the facts to the Secretary of the Interior. Said surveyor-general shall have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and take testimony relative to such occupancy or possession: Provided, That all claims under this section shall be filed with the said surveyor-general within two years after the passage of this act: And provided further, That no claim shall be so heard or examined exceeding eighty acres in quantity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. TELLER. I do not propose to discuss this bill. It has been discussed at length on former occasions. I only propose to say that if I did not believe that it was possible to get through a committee of conference a better bill than this I should insist upon being heard at length, although we are so near the close of the session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I gave my opinion at length upon this subject previously; I do not remember when, perhaps two years ago. Seldom have we had before us a bill that in my judgment is worse in a matter of this description. Its exceptions are not sufficient. It compels a great many people who own lands in these Territories, whose title was derived from Mexico, to go into court to prove their title. They may have been upon it forty-nine years and their ancestors one hundred years ago, but they are still compelled to go to the United States courts, and if the decision be in favor of them it is the duty of the United States attorney to appeal to the next higher court, and if the decision still be in favor of them the United States attorney is compelled to appeal it, and if the decision then again be in favor of the old settlers the record is to be sent up to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it is to be tried again unless the Attorney-General here says to the contrary.

The directions are to carry these cases for any small area of land up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court is given direction, or the right to try all questions of fact as well as all questions of law, and those who do not come into this arrangement, no matter what are the excuses except the usual ones, within three years are forever barred from any right in those lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the Senate takes a recess until 8 o'clock.

---

EVENING SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 8 o'clock p. m.). The hour of 8 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes its session.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I ask that that bill be read at once and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3357) for the relief of Mary Shay, mother of Miles Shay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BOWEN. I submit an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill and move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that amendment read to see what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 1337:

"For freight and transportation charges on gold coin and bullion between the different mints and assay offices of the United States, $15,000: Provided, That no charge for transportation shall be made against any person or persons depositing gold for sale or coinage at any mint or assay office in the United States under the provisions of sections 3519, 3544, 3545, and 3553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MANUFACTURE OF ORDNANCE AND GUNS.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire consent to offer a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That 2,000 copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document, No. 157, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the document?

Mr. GORMAN. A document in relation to the manufacture of ordnance and guns. The document has been exhausted. There are no longer copies in the document-room.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that if he names the number it may be extra copies and may require the concurrence of the two Houses. If he says merely that it be reprinted, then it can go as a Senate resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator will find that it comes within the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I have no objection.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

JOHN W. MEARS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5477, Order of Business 2282.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we ought to have the regular order, Mr. President. The private land claims bill is the pending business.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We might as well pass this bill while we are waiting for the other bill to be proceeded with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the title be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5477) to restore to John W. Mears a fine improperly imposed on him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

Mr. SHERMAN. It had better be read in full before any one objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is, directed to pay to John W. Mears the sum of $200, being amount of a fine improperly imposed upon and collected from him, and which was turned into the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside and that this bill be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall not object on this occasion, but afterwards I will call for the regular order.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island;

A bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (S. 2958) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of of free bridge by the county of Davidson, Tennessee, over the Cumberland River;

A bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls and to prescribe the dimensions of the same; and

A bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the substitute which has been read. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOWEN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following:

That any person or corporation who claims or may claim title to any real estate to which the United States has not issued a patent may commence in any court of competent jurisdiction and prosecute to final decree a cause in equity to quiet title to such real estate, to define and settle the extent and boundaries of the same, and to determine the nature of such title, as to whether the same includes agricultural or mineral rights, or both.

SEC. 2. That in all causes which may be commenced and prosecuted under the preceding section the United States may be made party respondent, and all proceeding shall be conducted, as near as may be, according to the practice and rules of courts of equity in the States or Territories where such causes may be commenced, except that the answer of the attorney of the United States shall not be required to be verified by his oath.

SEC. 3. That appeals may be taken by either party from the decree of the court of original jurisdiction which may determine any cause under the provisions of this act, and in which the United States is a party, directly to the Supreme Court of the United States; and in all cases where such decree is adverse to the United States the same shall be deemed and held to stand appealed to said Supreme Court without an act on the part of any one. All other decrees may be appealed from, within one year from the date of their entry, in the same manner provided for by law and the rules of courts in other causes; but no bond shall be required except for costs.

SEC. 4. That all causes which may be commenced and prosecuted under the provisions of this act in which the United States is a party shall take precedence to time of hearing over all other civil causes on the dockets of all courts of original jurisdiction, as well as in the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 5. That any person in whose favor a final decree shall be entered by the Supreme Court of the United States, under the provisions and in pursuance of this act, shall be entitled, upon payment of usual and lawful fees, to one or more copies of such decree, duly certified under the hand and seal of the clerk of said court, and may file one of such certified copies in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; whereupon the President of the United States shall execute and deliver to said person, his heirs or assigns, a patent for the real estate described in such decree; and if for any cause such patent shall not be so executed and delivered, such decree shall be received as evidence in all courts of a title in fee-simple.

SEC. 6. That no decree entered under the provisions of this act shall conclude or affect the private rights of persons as between each other, except such as may elect to and do become parties to the record in causes where such persons bring themselves in, by cross-bill or otherwise, for the purpose of having their rights determined, but such decrees shall be conclusive as between the United States and all persons whose rights are litigated and determined as parties to the record.

SEC. 7. That in all causes commenced and prosecuted under this act the complainant's bill shall except all lands lying within the boundaries of his claim held by private persons under the homestead, pre-emption, or mining laws of the United States, and shall expressly waive all claim and right to such lands so held, and all final decrees in favor of complainants shall except such lands so held from the operation thereof, as shall likewise all patents issued in pursuance of such decrees; but the complainant shall nevertheless be entitled to a money decree for an amount equal to the Government price of such lands so excepted, which money decree shall be paid to the claimant, his heirs or assigns, by the United States, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon presentation to the proper officers of the Government of a certified copy, the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall prevent claimants of real estate who have proceeded under existing laws of the United States, and who shall, at the date of the passage of this act, be applying to Congress, by bill, for confirmations of grants of the character provided for in the treaty concluded between the United States and the Republic of Mexico at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the 2d day of February, A. D. 1848, or the treaty concluded between the same powers at the city of Mexico on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1853, from proceeding in their efforts to procure such confirmations. Any of such claimants may, however, avail themselves of the benefits of the provisions of this act either before or after failure to secure such confirmations. All other of such claimants shall be entitled to proceed under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to commence and prosecute, in the name of the United States, proceedings to reform the boundaries of any grant of land heretofore confirmed by Congress, upon being satisfactorily informed that such boundaries were unlawfully or fraudulently extended beyond the area described in the original grant before such confirmations were had.

SEC. 10. That section 8 of the act of Congress approved July 22, A. D. 1854, entitled "An act to establish the offices of surveyors-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," and all acts amendatory or in extension thereof or supplementary thereto, and all provisions of law inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] to the amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BOWEN. This is the same amendment which I offered to this bill before. I do not propose to discuss the amendment. I simply wish to suggest to the gentlemen in charge of the bill that, if they can, they show me why or how or where it has ever before been required that a man in possession of land under color of title should commence suit within a certain number of years, or failing to do it lose his title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—ayes 7, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have been waiting for a quorum. I am willing to be courteous and take it for granted that there is one present. I shall not follow the example of my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and raise the question. I do not intend, as I said before the recess, to occupy time in arguing this case or discussing this bill. I do not pretend to argue it. My criticisms upon it are very much the same as they were a year or two ago, but I want to point out a few features of it that seem to me quite exceptionable. The first one is a grammatical mistake which the committee can correct, I suppose, without much trouble.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the Senator referring to?

Mr. HAWLEY. On page 15.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of the House bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; the committee amendment. I will pass over the intermediate phrases to show what I mean by this being a verbal criticism.

That it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, or corporation, or their legal representatives, claiming lands * * * by virtue of such lawful incomplete Spanish or Mexican grant, concession, warrant, or survey as the United States are bound to recognize and confirm by virtue of the treaties of cession of said country by Mexico to the United States, which, at the date of the passage of this act, have not been confirmed by act of Congress.

"Such warrant or survey" as may be not even confirmed, such as "have not been confirmed," referring to several nominatives when there is only one in that case. This directs the owners of land in four Territories and two States claiming from "Spanish or Mexican grants, concessions, warrant, or survey," as the case may be, "to present a petition, in writing, to the judge of the district court of the United States in a State or Territory for the judicial district in which such lands may be situate, setting forth fully the nature of their claims to the lands, and particularly stating the date and form of the grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey under which they claim."

In most of the country covered by the bill when we received these people from Mexico in 1848, we know what sort of a population it was and the general nature of their titles. They owned land in small village lots or in almost illimitable areas, great Spanish grants, somewhat indeterminate probably in outline, doubtless not marked by metes and bounds in many cases, and the title consisted of some old parchment. There were no halls of record, no formal books, as we have in the New England and to a large extent in almost all the other States, in which all deeds are copied. They carried these parchments with them wherever they camped, stored them as best they might in their adobe houses, and after a generation or two they forgot them, and probably they went for kindling. In many cases it will be extremely difficult for many people who have lived for generations on what they considered their own land in these Territories to bring forward any paper or cite any imaginable grant under which they hold it.

The father was there, and the grandfather; and that is probably as far as most of them could go in remembering what their title is. But they are to come up within three years and file a petition involving the employment of a skillful land-lawyer there. The bill is admirably adapted to the legal profession. They must come up within three years and state particularly—the date and form of the grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey under which they claim, by whom made, the name or names of any person or persons in possession of or claiming the same, or any part thereof, otherwise than by the lease or permission of the petitioner; and also the quantity of land claimed and the boundaries thereof, &c.

These petitions may be presented at any time during the vacation of court, at any time between terms:

And it shall be the duty of the United States attorney for the proper district, as also any adverse possessor or claimant, after service of petition and citation, as hereinbefore provided, within thirty days, unless further time shall, for good cause shown, be granted by the judge or court to whom said petition is presented, to enter an appearance and plead, answer, or demur to said petition.

All of which may be done during the vacation, though it is provided that no final decree shall be entered save during the term of the court.

There shall be after the first hearing in the courts six months allowed for an appeal to the supreme court of the proper Territory and from the supreme court of the Territory, or if the case be in the United States district court in a State, from that court to the Supreme Court of the United States; and a year is allowed in which to take that appeal, of which the United States may take advantage as well as the petitioner. The Supreme Court shall retry the case, as well the issue on questions of fact as of law, and may hear testimony in addition to that given in the court below, may amend the record, &c.

I am not a practitioner in the Supreme Court, and have not been enough of a lawyer for twenty-five or thirty years to speak very definitely about this, but my impression is that I have never seen the Supreme Court of the United States examining witnesses to any great extent to try questions of fact. It is not frequently seen there, and it will be an interesting spectacle to see some one of these humble greasers from New Mexico, who has lived on four or five hundred acres of land that would not be worth $3 an acre here, employ a lawyer in New Mexico to come up here, a thousand miles or more, with fifteen or twenty witnesses, to prove that he got that land from his grandfather. By the time they get here and try the case they will have to sell the land to get money enough to go home with, or pass the hat for a subscription.

Again:

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall extend only to such claims as may be presented and filed within three years from the date of its passage.

And after that the deluge, so far as most of them are concerned, for there is no further door open to them except to appeal to the equity of Congress, I suppose. But there is one step I omitted to mention before they start in the proceeding. It is the duty of the judge—

To require reasonable security for all costs and charges which may accrue thereon in prosecuting the same to a final decree.

A security in most cases which consists of a few stray cows and a mustang or two in the case of the poorer people.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the attorney of the United States for the proper Territory, in every case when the decision or decree of the district court is against the United States, to appeal the cause to the supreme court of the Territory—

It is to be taken for granted that the citizen is wrong; that he unrighteously wins on the first trial—

to appeal the cause to the supreme court of the Territory, and if the decision of the latter court be against the United States, a copy of the record and decree, with a statement of the legal questions involved, shall be forthwith transmitted by the district attorney to the Attorney-General; and in like manner he shall transmit a copy of the record and decree in any case decided against the United States in the district court in a State.

* * * * * * *

And unless the Attorney-General shall otherwise direct, the district attorney shall appeal the cause to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The rule is an appeal for a third trial and that a trial upon questions of fact involving the summoning of the original witnesses.

SEC. 11. That all claims which are by the provisions of this act authorized to be prosecuted shall, after three years from the taking effect of this act, if no petition in respect to the same shall have been filed as hereinbefore provided, be deemed and taken, in all courts and elsewhere, to be abandoned, and shall be forever barred.

That is to say, the United States takes possession of the lands within three years if the uneducated greaser down there has not heard of this law and has not filed his petition.

One or two other features deserve notice:

SEC. 14. That all the public lands of the United States in the Rio Grande valley and elsewhere in the Territory of New Mexico, and in the State of Colorado, occupied and possessed by persons who, or whose ancestors or grantors, became citizens of the United States by reason of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and occupied by any person or persons who have been in the actual bona fide occupancy or possession of said land, by themselves or their ancestors or grantors, for fifty years next preceding the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn from entry and sale under the laws of the United States.

As near as I can understand it, it requires fifty years' occupation to acquire a title by possession and an unmolested title. I wish the lawyers would explain this. But my impression has been that as the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo is dated in 1848, proclaimed on the 4th of July of that year, and as by that treaty we solemnly guaranteed all the rights of person, property, and everything else to these Mexicans, we guaranteed them everything that an American citizen was entitled to, that it is hardly fair to go back further than 1848. Fifty years would go back to 1837.

But I said all this and much more before, and I will not detain the Senate further. I said in my haste that this was the wickedest bill I ever knew. I withdraw the expression and give the bill the benefit of the doubt. There may have been a worse one; I am not quite sure about it. But to my only half-professional eye it seems to be beyond measure a harsh and cruel provision. It seems to me that under it inevitably a large class of people of the smaller landholders of these Territories whose title in equity, if not in the strict letter of the law, is unquestioned, and whom we guaranteed by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, will be dispossessed simply by reason of their guiltless negligence to bring a petition to the court and follow it up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I shall be justified in the judgment of the Senate in saying a word in reply to my distinguished friend from Connecticut.

This Senate amendment has passed the Senate twice or three times, I do not remember which, on a report from the Committee on Private Land Claims as an original Senate bill, when the chairman of that committee was Judge Thurman, when at another time it was Judge Davis, of Illinois, then a Senator, and when at another time Senator Bayard, now the Secretary of State, was its chairman. It has been reported each time by the unanimous voice of that committee.

It has been considered in that committee on these three several occasions, hearing all the objectors representing corporations and large land-grant claimants that might have been represented by my friend from Connecticut if they had known how strong his objections were to this bill, hearing every side of every possible point in respect of these land titles. Yet year after year and time after time, with these eminent gentlemen at the head of that committee, and with a unanimous report, and on a full discussion in the Senate, the amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims now proposed to the House bill has been agreed to by a very large majority.

And what is it? It simply provides that the courts of the United States, not a commission that may be packed or dealt with as the California land commission was—I do not mean packed but overreached in so many instances that we now know of—but a court shall hear, try, and determine, not land titles obtained from Mexico or Spain that are perfect, but simply the inchoate claims of people who think that under Mexican or Spanish law they had a right which had not become complete when the United States become the sovereign of this territory. It is only incomplete titles, that depend merely upon the sense of justice of the Government, which are drawn into this question at all by the Senate amendment. That is simply where it stands.

Now, my friend from Connecticut says that this is a very bad bill; I suppose first, because it limits any claim to 11 leagues. There are a good many people in the United States, and perhaps some elsewhere, who pretend to have grants from Mexico or Spain that covered leagues multiplied by ten, a hundred leagues, or 111 leagues. There is one corporation that has presented its pretensions to the Committee on Private Land Claims and claims more than 5,000,000 acres of land that it wishes to be secured in by this bill.

We do not propose, we have not proposed, to do that sort of thing, because by the Mexican law of 1824, which I have here, and by the Spanish orders of the king before that time, the right of anybody or any community, or any body of colonization people to take up public lands of that country was limited to 11 leagues, 1 league of river front, irrigable land, 1 league of land that was not quite irrigable, but still come within what they called the middle line of good lands in those dry and extraordinary territories, and then come 5 or 6 leagues of the mere deserts and uplands that could not be irrigated at all, where at certain seasons of the year when the rains came cattle could be pastured, making altogether in these three classes 11 leagues.

So, year after year and time after time, against the pressure of the paid attorneys and agents of the persons who were speculating in vast grants, &c., appearing before us, and heard when Judge Thurman was chairman, and when Judge Davis was chairman, and when Mr. Bayard was chairman, and investigating the whole subject and hearing every side, the committee every time came unanimously to the conclusion that the provisions which appear in the present Senate amendment to the House bill were the right and wise and secure ones to guard against plunder, to guard against fraud, and to do justice to every claimant. That is where it stands.

My good friend from Connecticut said that these poor greasers, as he calls them (which I think is a very unkind description for him to make of them; I will say these poor rural people), are not provided for. If they claim under a Spanish or a Mexican grant they must stand, as everybody else does under an equal law, upon the provisions of the bill to present their claims, but there is the last section in the Senate amendment, as it was in the original Senate bill, which provides that their mere possession outside of any pretense of a grant shall be respected, and that if they are public lands of the United States on which they are, outside of a grant that is superior and a right that is superior to theirs, they shall be protected, and shall have their possessions secured to them against any adverse entry or claimant under pre-emption, or homestead, or whatever. That is what the Senate amendment is, and it is no more than that.

The real trouble is that this Senate amendment, like the three Senate bills that have passed before, makes very stringent securities against the frauds and performances that occurred under the California land-commission act, which covered the same sort of lands in California, but not in the other places that this bill now covers.

It was found by experience that under the California land-commission bill enormous frauds were perpetrated over and over again by the circumstance that the proof would be made and ended before the commission, and that neither the district court, nor the circuit court, nor the Supreme Court of the United States had any power to hear further testimony, as in admiralty under the Constitution and laws of the United States the Supreme Court of the United States always has the power to do.

So, in order to guard against any fraud that might be perpetrated on the Territorial district or Supreme Court, we authorize the Supreme Court of the United States, if any new event takes place, if any new thing comes to light, to have a right to inquire into it in order to do justice to all parties. It may support the claimant; it may dismiss him as being a fraud.

One of the most interesting of those cases, where the failure of the California act was so clearly shown, was what is called the Santillan grant, where finally the Supreme Court of the United States decided against it upon very narrow grounds, I must say, as the proof stood. Within a few years afterwards, when Judge Thurman was chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, some Philadelphia people of the highest respectability came to that committee—and I was an humble member of it at that time—and said the Santillan grant, which covered millions of acres, was rejected by the Supreme Court because the court said "you have not proved that this grant existed as being recorded in the book of the alcalde at Monterey at the time when it purported to have been made," and therefore the Supreme Court believed that it was a fabrication.

Now, said these highly respectable Philadelphia gentlemen, as they were, "We have found that book and we have bought this claim, and here is the book. Here is the alcalde's record, which covers the marriages and the christenings and the horse trades and the public sales at auction, and everything that under Spanish and Mexican rule would come into this book of records of the city or pueblo of Monterey; and here is the book."

They brought it to the committee, and it was undoubtedly the book that could not be found when the California Land Commission and the district court and the Supreme Court of the United States had the cause under consideration. It was undoubtedly the genuine book, and in it on the 31st of December and the 1st of January there appeared to be the record of the identical grant that the Supreme Court of the United States had held to be fraudulent and disallowed on the ground that it had not been recorded, with the other circumstances. That was a fair case apparently, and these gentlemen said, "Now, give us our four or five million acres of land." Well, it looked very fair. They told us besides that they had paid a thousand dollars to find that book, or $2,000, or whatever it was, and it came, and there was the record purporting to have been made in the year, I will say, 1835, for instance. I do not remember the year, but it was long before the treaty that gave us the dominion of that country.

We were a little suspicious and a little critical and a little technical, as my friend from Connecticut says, because truth always is technical more or less. We began to inspect this book and we discovered the curious circumstance that the record of this particular deed happened to have been put into an interval between two years. When we turned back through the book which covered years and years of the operations of the alcaldes of that pueblo of Monterey, we found that the habit of the alcalde is just as it is among the farmers of Kansas or Vermont or wherever, to wind up their year's transactions, and then turn over two or three pages for the first of January and begin again for a new year.

This grant happened to be recorded just on one of those pages, and in all the other parts of the book these spaces were left blank. That was a little suspicious.

Then the handwriting looked a little curious. It looked very much like that in the other parts of the book, where undoubtedly were genuine entries of marriages, and christenings, and the horse trades, and everything that is done and recorded by the alcalde. We had a careful examination made of that, and were satisfied that it was a simulated imitation of the handwriting of the then alcalde. Then we had a chemical inspection made of the composition of the ink in which this was written, and it turned out to be an aniline ink that had not been known among men for more than ten or fifteen years last past. Then, on a still further careful microscopical examination, we discovered that that imitation of the alcalde's hand was with a steel pen, which no Alcalde in the year 1835, or whatever the year was, at Monterey, in California, could possibly have had.

The thing was so clear when it was investigated in that way that these highly respectable Philadelphia gentlemen, who had bought the claim in perfect good faith, who had bought that book and supposed they had had a clear case, went away satisfied, although sorrowful.

It is against frauds of that kind, which when there is any public land or mines in these Territories that would be set up by great speculators against the interest of the United States and against the interest of its settlers, we have tried to take care in this amendment reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims, exactly what has passed the Senate two or three times before. We have tried to take care that the court of last resort shall still have an opportunity, if anything is discovered to require it, to again make an inquiry into the facts about it. That is where it stands.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question before he sits down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Is it the intention of this amendment to provide a tribunal wherein any person or persons claiming lands under a grant or concession from either Spain or Mexico can have the inchoate right to the lands claimed by him or them to the full extent of the right that they have under the laws of Spain or Mexico perfected? Is that the object of the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As far as I understand it I should say yes and say no both. The rights that the Senate bill deals with are described to be imperfect rights, such as only appeal to the justice of the Government, not being titles that are perfect and which require no confirmation at all.

The Spanish laws and the Mexican laws on the subject of acquiring title to public lands in those dominions are not peculiar, but they are positive. They require, as I said before, by the Mexican decree of 1824, that nobody shall have under any circumstances more than a certain amount of land.

One league of irrigable land, two or three leagues of no matter what—perhaps I had better read it, and state exactly what it is:

No one person shall be allowed to obtain the ownership of more than one square league of 5,000 varas—

Which makes a square league—of irrigable land (de regadio); four superficial ones of land dependent on the seasons (de temporal); and six superficial ones for the purpose of rearing cattle (de abrevadero.)

And putting the one, and the four, and the six together, you get exactly eleven.

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just wait one moment.

Mr. TELLER. When you finish I want you to present the ordinance you speak of of the King of Spain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am now speaking about Mexico.

The Mexican law and the Spanish law before that in respect of settlements, colonizations, military grants, &c., required certain conditions-subsequent, just as in our land-grants to railroads we require that they shall build, &c., or else they shall not have the land; but the peculiarity and the benefit of the Spanish and the Mexican law was that it declared that the grant should not take effect, it should be void, until it appeared that the conditions had been complied with, so that they were not troubled, if the matter had been brought to their judicial tribunals, with the question whether the supreme power had instituted a method of forfeiture afterward, and that the right did not attach until the conditions-subsequent required had been proved and established.

In respect of grants, I will take, under the Spanish grants, the large grants to soldiers, colonizations, &c. They required that they should build mills, and build farm-houses, establish villages, and whatever, but always provided that unless they did the thing required the grant should go for nothing; that the man who asserted a right under it could not stand upon that grant as you can in the United States, according to the decision of the Supreme Court, until he had proved that he had done that thing. So the committee has always felt, and the Senate has always felt hitherto, that when we limit this concession to 11 square leagues we have done exactly what the Spanish law and the Mexican law would have required to be done had the matter continued under their dominion and not under ours.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator now to give us the Spanish ordinance of which he spoke.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was speaking of the Mexican ordinance.

Mr. TELLER. But the Senator said there was an ordinance of the King of Spain of that kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that I said that, but I will try to find it, if I can, whatever it is.

Mr. TELLER. I should be very glad if the Senator would.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will see if I can find it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I was either unfortunate in presenting my point, or the Senator from Vermont was a little obscure in answering; perhaps both.

The point which I wish to inquire of the Senator from Vermont is this: Suppose A had, either under a concession from Spain or under a grant from Mexico, the right, the inchoate right, if you please, to a certain specific, definite number of acres of land, in reference to which there was no fraud, all clear, all right, what I wish to know is whether it is the intention of this amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims to provide that person a tribunal by which he may have that inchoate right perfected to the whole of the land claimed by him, and which he was entitled to have perfected under the laws of Spain or the laws of Mexico, as the case may be, without reference to the quantity of land included in the grant or concession. That is my question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As far as I am concerned, I answer again, yes and no. This being an application to the political justice of the Government, the committee have been of opinion, as the Supreme Court of the United States have been of opinion, that by the Spanish and Mexican laws nobody was entitled to more than 11 square leagues; and therefore in respect of the right of these people to apply to make good a title that is not perfect already (which we do not touch at all), they must be limited in the act of confirmation which this bill provides to the 11 square leagues, because——

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator cite a case of that kind in the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because, as we understand the Spanish and the Mexican law, and as I have read out of the act of Mexico of 1824, they are not entitled to more than that, and we do not propose to commit the United States to any more than that by giving a court jurisdiction to go beyond it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I find in subdivision 7 of section 12 of the bill this provision:

No confirmation shall in any case be made or patent issued for a greater quantity than 11 square leagues of land to or in the right of any one original grantee or claimant, or in the right of any one original grant to two or more persons jointly, nor for a greater quantity than was authorized by the respective laws of Spain or Mexico applicable to the claim.

I concede that in any tribunal raised or provided for by any legislation that we may enact the parties should be limited in the amount they may be permitted to claim to the amount which they would have been permitted to claim under the law of that country from which they obtained their grant or concession.

The Senator from Vermont says that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that no one person could claim a greater quantity than 11 square leagues. I should like the Senator from Vermont to cite the Senate to that decision. I am not aware that the Supreme Court of the United States has ever made any such decision. I do not believe it ever has made any such decision as that. I should like the Senator from Vermont to cite us to-night to that decision. If we concede that that is a matter of doubt—that is, as to what the law is on the subject——

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not a matter of doubt at all.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I insist, with all deference, that there is a doubt, and a very serious doubt, as to whether a person claiming land under a concession or grant from Spain or Mexico was limited by the laws of those countries to 11 square leagues, or any other amount, at least during certain years in which grants were made, and if it is a matter of doubt, then if Congress in its legislation undertakes to limit the amount in all cases, then Congress is assuming to exercise judicial functions, and is undertaking to determine that which properly belongs to the judicial department of the Government.

But there is no necessity, it seems to me, in any event for the words that I will now read in this seventh subdivision:

For a greater quantity than 11 square leagues of land to or in the right of any one original grantee or claimant, or in the right of any one original grant to two or more persons jointly, nor—

Those words should be stricken out, and then the subdivision would read:

No confirmation shall in any case be made or patent issued for a greater quantity than was authorized by the respective laws of Spain or Mexico applicable to the claim.

That seems to me to be a proper provision. Then it would be for the judicial department, finally the Supreme Court of the United States, to decide how great a quantity any particular person or number of persons could claim under the laws of Spain or Mexico applicable to the claim under any particular grant or concession.

I insist, while providing as we do in the first section, a tribunal by which a person claiming land under the laws of Mexico or the laws of Spain may come in and present his petition and have his rights adjudicated in reference to such claim, then, by this provision, you turn around, and in the seventh subdivision of the twelfth section undertake to make a judicial decision to the effect that his claim, in no case, shall exceed a certain quantity of land, no matter what may have been the quantity included in his concession from Spain, no matter what may have been the quantity included in his grant from Mexico. Here is a direct legislative cutting down and slicing off, in my judgment, that so far from carrying out and enforcing the provisions of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, is in direct violation of the provisions of that treaty. It is, in my judgment, a bold attempt at legislative confiscation.

Mr. TELLER. I stated before that I would not debate this bill. There were a great number of grants made by the King of Spain when he was not restricted as to the amount or the condition on which the grants should be made. There were a great number of grants made by the Republic of Mexico after it became a republic, when there was no law, written or unwritten, that limited that republic or any officer thereof to any small ranch of 11 leagues or any other limit. They were grants made by the Mexican Government; they were made by the governors of the States, and made in other ways—all that were recognized by the Mexican Government and that we entered into a treaty to recognize on our part, and that by the law of nations we would have been required to have recognized if there had been no treaty at all.

The honorable Senator from Vermont says that the King of Spain was limited to 11 leagues. He will fail to find any such ordinance, or if he does he will fail to find it at the time that a great number of the grants were made. I think he will find that a great majority of the grants made and still unconfirmed were the grants made when there was no restriction upon the Republic of Mexico. As I remember now, speaking uncertainly on the subject, more than three-fourths of the grants unconfirmed were made prior to 1824.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call your attention to the matter you were talking about.

Mr. TELLER. The ordinance that you alluded to?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to speak first about Spain.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, the ordinance of Spain; I want to hear you now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it does not trouble you now?

Mr. TELLER. I want it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; I am anxious that the Senator should give it to us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have in my hand a recent book, which was not compiled evidently for the purposes of this bill one way or the other, by Mr. Frederick Hall, printed in San Francisco in 1885, being, as the title-page states, "The Laws of Mexico: A Compilation and Treatise relating to Real Property, Mines, Water Rights, Personal Rights, Contracts and Inheritances."

Mr. TELLER. We all know what it is. Everybody has seen it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, not everybody. I am sorry I can not get, as all our libraries are shut up after 4 o'clock, White's Recompilation of the Laws of Spain and Mexico, and so I must take this book.

I find this on page 41, regarding the laws of Spain in force up to 1792, and as I suppose afterwards. Then giving the history of them he says, leaving out certain special matters, the laws regarding the grants of land were these:

1. There was the instruction of Don José de Galvez, of the council of the Indies—

Which includes Mexico and everything else, as we know—intendant of the army, and visitor-general. This bears date August 12, 1768, and relates entirely to the peninsula of Lower California, and which will be found in this work.

That is the first part of it.

2. There was a cédula—

Or decree; that is what it means—relating to the town of Pitic, now Hermosillo, Sonora, declaring that the pueblo should contain 4 square leagues.

3. The decree of the military commander, Pedro de Nava, dated March 22, 1791, addressed to the governor of the province of California, which related alone to presidios or military posts, and which is set forth herein.

Now, I come to the point to which my friend refers:

4. On the 14th of February, 1805, a royal cédula was issued approving of the resolution of the superior board of the treasury, dated May 10, 1802, which declared that said board would not adjudicate any more than 3 or 4 leagues of land to any one person in the province of Nuevo Santander (now Tamaulipas), Nuevo Leon, and Coahuila. This resolution was passed on account of the large tracts containing 40 and 50 leagues which some possessed.

They had got them in those territories apparently in these particular divisions, and this royal decree was issued to cut it up again and reduce it to four.

Mr. TELLER. What was that? A royal decree?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a matter for my friend to consider. Now, if he will pardon me just a moment, if he understood me to say that the Spanish law made a limitation of 11 leagues, I did not intend to say it, if I did, because as the Senate will see in respect of what I have read, as the old Spanish law applied to some parts of this territory—it does not cover it all, it is true, but they are all alike, I think—it is carefully limited to 4 leagues, just as it was about the pueblos; and, therefore, the 11 leagues which the committee have taken as being the limit of the successor of the Spanish Government by the decree of 1824 of the Mexican nation goes to the utmost of any pretension that anybody at any time would assert in respect of taking up the public lands either of Spain or of Mexico.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator has not found anything in the nature of an ordinance but an administrative resolution of a board with which I am quite as familiar as he is; and I venture to say now that he will not find an ordinance, and that these administrative orders were made from time to time and varied, and they did not have the force of law. They were only obligatory upon this board so long as the board saw fit to observe them. They were but resolutions of a board, so to speak, not an ordinance of the King; and the history of Mexico, of New Mexico, of the various Mexican States is a flat contradiction of the statement that they were restricted to 11 leagues, or 4 leagues, or any other number of leagues.

The Senator reads this as if it was a new thing. These ordinances, these resolutions, these proceedings, have been a matter of public print in this country for a great many years, and if the Senator has got anything in that book from which he read which has not been published before, I have examined the book and have failed to see it. I do not believe there is anything new in the book, that there is anything that the Supreme Court did not have before it year after year, that the California Land Commission did not have before it, and that the lawyers who have given attention to the subject have not had for the last twenty-five years.

There are grants unconfirmed in Arizona that fall within the provisions of this bill which are a hundred and twenty-five years old, which have been in the undisputed and constant possession of the present occupants and their ancestors from the time the grant was made, and they are perfect grants under the Mexican and under the Spanish law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then this bill does not touch them.

Mr. TELLER. This bill does touch them, because they have not got any patent, and this bill requires every ignorant Mexican to take the chances whether a court will say that his is a perfect grant within two years or not. I say it is a perfect grant, but the court may think otherwise, and the Mexican is compelled to go into court to try that question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, just a word and that of gratitude to the ex-Secretary of the Interior for speaking of this bill mildly in the terms that it deserves. I am very glad to hear from him.

I have been told by a number of Senators—if I had been told confidentially or with any injunction or any implied injunction of secrecy I should not speak of it—"Do not talk upon this bill; do not spend time upon it; it is a bad bill, but we shall get a respectable bill out of the conference." Now, sir; I can not vote for a bill on that ground. Bills go into conference and something comes back that differs very widely from the original bill of either House. It is legislation in conference and we never get the full consideration of a matter that comes here in that way.

I said I did not intend to debate the bill and I do not. I could not do justice to the bill under an hour and a half or a two hours' speech. I do not propose to do that. I have debated it on former occasions. I say here that the bill as now proposed probably will not pass another body. If it comes here in the shape of a conference report I will see that it does not pass the Senate. In my judgment it is confiscation of the very worst character, and I shall feel justified at this late hour of the session in being heard then, but I will not delay the business of the Senate by asking to be heard now.

The Senator tells me that distinguished committees of this body have reported in favor of this bill before. I know it, and that is one of the surprising things about it. They have reported upon it while I have been told by men familiar with Mexican and Spanish law and the commissions in those Territories over and over again that it is a bad bill, which ought not to pass this body. I have authority as good as that against the bill. Distinguished committees may have reported for it, and it is probable that it is going to be passed now, but as far as I learn from the record, it never received five minutes favor in the other House, and I am grateful for that much.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims. [Putting the question.] The noes seems to have it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood the contest against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] was withdrawn and that amendment was adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all. It was voted down.

Mr. HAWLEY. When they said "no further count," I thought it was because they said the votes in favor did carry it.

Mr. BOWEN. No; it was voted down.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not want to detain the Senate at this late hour in the evening and in the session. On a former occasion when this bill was before the Senate, I expressed my dissent from the bill as reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims, and while some minor changes have been made in the bill as now reported, at the same time the main objections remain against it.

It is an illustration of the operation of certain mental characteristics, or perhaps I might say of certain moral characteristics, which having been aroused upon a suggestion of a fraud about to be committed, the result is an immediate loss of balance and a swinging to the farthest point on the other side, irrespective of the consequences.

The Senator from Vermont, on his theory that somebody will get some land in New Mexico to which he is not entitled, has made it perfectly certain that he will stamp out every small land-owner in the Territory of New Mexico at least, and while he has done that with one hand on the other hand he has provided for setting in motion the largest scrip factory that ever has been known under our laws, whereby there will be issued ad libitum by the Commissioner of the General Land Office scrip of a character which has been the subject of more fraud, of more trouble, and of more wrong than all other forms of land entries that have ever been known.

In the valley of the Rio Grande there are men settled who have been there by themselves and their ancestors for more than a hundred years. The claims in some cases amount to only a few acres, a mere hand's breadth, 2 acres, 5 acres, 10 acres, &c., of land which commercially is not worth probably more than ten, fifteen, or twenty dollars an acre, and yet which is the sum of the possessions of these people, is all they have got, is everything in the world to them, which is not worth 10 per cent. of the cost of the legal expenses imposed by this bill. And yet these people, if they prove up their claim, are bound to have appeals taken, because this bill provides that if judgment is rendered against the United States appeals shall be taken, and thus the possessions of these people, if they have the temerity to go into court at all, will be absolutely eaten up under the provisions of this bill.

I know that the Senator from Vermont has inserted in the last section a provision which was put in after lengthy debate when the bill was before the Senate on a former occasion, which was designed to effect a partial relief to this class of people; and if he had put in a further provision saving the class of claimants mentioned in the last section from the operation of the drastic provisions of the first and second sections requiring these confirmations to be made by the courts on proof presented as on the trial of a lawsuit, it would have been a small measure of justice; but as it is it is in a measure an affirmation of the original wrong. In section 9 occurs this very remarkable provision:

SEC. 9. That if in any case it shall so happen that the lands decreed to any claimant under the provisions of this act shall have been sold or granted by the United States, it shall be lawful for such claimants, or their legal representatives, at any time within one year after the rendition of the final decree in their favor, to execute, and file in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a release to the United States of all right, title, or claim to the land so sold or granted by the United States; and thereupon there shall be issued by the said Commissioner (under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior), to such claimant, or his legal representatives, scrip for an equal amount of acres so released, in quantities not exceeding 640 acres each, which scrip shall be assignable in such form as may be prescribed by said Secretary, and shall be receivable, acre for acre, in payment for any public lands in said Territories or States in the State or Territory in which the land grant or claim for which scrip is issued shall be located, that may be subject to private entry at the minimum price.

That is a very remarkable provision, because, first, Congress is abandoning its prerogative in disposing of the public lands and remitting it to a court; and in the next place it is very remarkable, because it is provided that this scrip shall be taken in payment of described lands, of which there are no such lands at all. There is not an acre of public land subject to private entry in any State or Territory in which there is a Mexican land grant—not an acre. Of course these people, having got this scrip upon the idea that it is of no value, and consequently no doubt in very large measure, if not by collusion, at all events by carelessness, which often attaches to these transactions which are supposed to represent matters of very little value, will then come to Congress, and say, "You have given us scrip to be located upon land, scrip issued in place of land which we did not get; and now, not having provided in that bill that we can locate upon this scrip, you must come up and pay for it in some other way, and give us the whole domain of the United States to enter upon for the purpose of its location, or else pay for it in cash." And thus the trouble we get out of in one case we get into in another.

Besides, Mr. President, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] very well suggests, no matter what their claim may be, no matter what the character of the land over which the claim may have extended, good, bad, or indifferent, mountains, valley, timber, or otherwise, worth five, or ten, or fifteen, or fifty cents an acre, more or less, they get a certificate for an acre of land, each one of course of the same nominal value, and for as much as they will receive their claim they get scrip for acre by acre.

This bill ought to be so framed as to recognize the just claims of those persons who by reason of the war with Mexico and the treaty which ensued thereafter became citizens of the United States and had claims upon their former government for recognition which we agreed in turn to take up and recognize, and the legislation ought to be had in such a way as not only to confirm titles but to make peace and not open new sources of litigation.

It is a crying shame that for forty years the United States Government has failed to confirm these claims, to give the title we promised to give, but it has confirmed many of these grants by special acts. What portion of the area is covered by the grants subsisting I do not know, but a very large number anyhow. By common consent those grants thus confirmed carried title to all the minerals within their limits, to every mine of gold or of silver or of coal; and yet it is proposed now to come in and say to these people, whom we have postponed of their rights during these forty years, and whose rights we propose to confirm by this act or have authorized to bring suit, that they shall not have the mines of gold, silver, and quicksilver that are found within their boundaries, but as to them the entire people of the United States shall be authorized to commit a perpetual trespass, because it is idle to suppose that a gold mine which is the property of the United States shall ever exist within the exterior boundaries of any man's claim that will not subject that claim to the constant trespass of those who seek to mine in that claim.

Thus we shall have established two rules of confirmation, one by special act, which carries everything within the exterior boundaries, and another by a judicial proceeding which limits not only that which is known now to exist in the shape of mines of the precious metals, but also that which may hereafter be discovered.

Mr. President, there is not a mile square in New Mexico that does not contain some gold. There is everywhere to be found what is known among the miners as "color." The time may come when that which can not now be mined at all by reason of lack of water may be mined, and thus the circumstances of a man being subjected to this reservation of the United States Government to title within the limits of his claim may shift from year to year, and the title thus guaranteed will be practically worth nothing.

What is the object of reserving the title to the Government when the Government under the general law sells every acre of its mineral lands at $5 an acre? The reservation is worth nothing to the Treasury of the United States. It would simply be a deprivation and a wrong to the claimant, with no corresponding benefit to the Government. It would keep up always litigation and trouble and insecurity of title, would prevent development, and would shut off the opportunities for enterprise.

I do not care to enlarge upon the seventh subdivision of section 12. Admitting, as I believe to be the case, that the extreme limit or extent of land grants under the law of Mexico or of Spain was 11 leagues to an individual, why declare it in a law legislatively? Why assert in a bill that which is a judicial question and not a legislative question? Suppose we are mistaken about it. We establish a rule of property binding upon the courts because the courts are our creatures and bound to execute the laws we give them to execute, although they may be conscious of the fact that in thus executing the law they are cutting off legal rights, and we do not leave to the party any right against us at all, because this is the only legal proceeding we provide; and if we make a mistake and some of these grants were for a larger quantity than 11 leagues, there is a perpetual estoppel to the assertion of that right.

This, as I said, is a judicial question. It is in no sense a legislative question; and if the Senator from Vermont is so entirely sure of his law, why is he so afraid to leave the decision of that question to the courts to whom are committed all other questions under this bill? Why not let them settle whether the grant in a given case was for 11 leagues, more or less? If the court is competent to determine the boundaries, if it is competent to determine the question up to 11 leagues, if it is competent to determine the sufficiency of the grant, why is it not equally competent to determine the extent of that grant, whether it be less or more than 11 leagues?

I believe this bill will be worse than no bill. I believe it will do more injustice than justice. I believe it will be the beginning of litigation which will outlast the lifetime of every person now living, I believe it is legislation which will not only swindle the United States, but it is legislation which will swindle that class of people who above all other classes have claims upon our good offices, the poor and the humble, and the poorest and most humble of all, the population which we acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has demanded a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I want to demand the right to say something. The poor and the humble are of course the special objects of the guardianship of my friend from Kansas. He is always for them and against everybody else. I have thought that the Committee on Private Land Claims, when it has heard counsel for corporations, mining, and great land-grant corporations claiming under Mexican and Spanish grants and has resisted, as we thought it was right according to what we understood to be the law and the duty of the United States, the grabbing operation which would overturn the settlers and the small claimant, had a right to be considered as not altogether unfriendly to the poor and the humble and the friendless.

But now we have in my friend from Kansas, first, a demand that we should not limit this land-grant business to eleven square leagues, and these big land jobbers, whose representatives are here on this floor—I do not mean personal representatives, but representatives from their States, &c.—object to eleven square leagues, and ask why not leave it to the courts?

The Senator from Kansas misunderstands the scope of this bill as amended by the committee. It does not undertake to deal with or to disturb anybody's legal rights. It undertakes to put the Congress of the United States by this machinery under its law in exactly the attitude that the supreme government of Mexico would have been if we had not acquired this territory, and that is all, and in every one of the cases which come within the definition of this bill that has come before the courts at all the claimant under a Spanish or Mexican grant could not have gone to the courts, but must appeal to the legislative authority of that country to see whether under the circumstances that he could show he was entitled to have a grant at all or not. That is where he stood. It was the incomplete condition that somebody had entered land under the Mexican or Spanish law to which he had not yet acquired any right, depending only on what his government should think fit to do according to the terms of the invitation which was thrown out to him, or the authority that was given him to enter, and then to consider whether he fell within the description of settlement, of pueblo, of mining land, of pastoral land, of irrigable lands, or whatever, and then let the surveyor determine whether it came within the just consideration of what it was entitled to do.

Now, the United States, desiring to do justice to everybody, proposes if this bill passes that these people should have no legal right, but only a right of appeal to the legislative and supreme authority of the government under which they were, if they were still there, and may appeal to us in the same way and we give them a tribunal in which to be heard. That is why the Committee on Private Land Claims has again and again and against the arguments of the most powerful and high-paid counsel for corporations said, "We will not authorize any court, standing as we do in the situation that Mexico did and would if this transfer of territory had not taken place—we will not authorize any court to give to a claimant in that condition more than eleven square leagues of land." The laws of Mexico that I have read and the ordinances from Spain which my friend from Colorado says are not law so provided. That was the government of a king and whatever he authorized his governors, &c., to ordain was law because it was his will. He limited it to four square leagues. There were exceptions undoubtedly to some great military man or somebody who was then required to settle upon that land within a certain time, and as I said before not in our way or for a condition which never could have prevailed until you had judicial process, a new law, that the grant should not take effect at all until the subsequent conditions were complied with.

So we are out of that and we come back simply on the matter of the eleven square leagues to the plain laws of Mexico, to the plain public policy that Mexico had, and which she, being appealed to if the transfer had not been made, would have felt bound, for the interest of her poor and private citizens, the friends of my friend from Kansas and myself, to resist, getting great lumps of land into the hands of combinations of individuals against the common people. That is what we are trying to do.

Now I come to the last section about the settlers on the Rio Grande which my friend says is inadequate and does not go far enough. When a man does not present his claim, the land that he is on becomes public land unless he has a perfect title under the Mexican or Spanish law, and in that case he does not need to present it. We do not put him to any expense at all. He need not go to the courts if he turns out to be on public land, and the fourteenth section was intended to save him. I think it was suggested by my friend from Kansas himself to the Committee on Private Land Claims. I think it was after it got into the Senate. The committee gladly acceded to it and said if this be necessary to provide for securing these settlers on what turns out to be the public lands of the United States in their possession, we are glad to do it. We therefore took the section which I think was suggested by my friend from Kansas, and put it into this bill. That is where we are.

Then the simple thing is that what we are now dealing with are not any legal rights, but only rights that in Mexico, had she the possession of this territory at this moment, would be rights that would have to appeal to the supreme authority there to confirm their claims according to legislative discretion, and exercising this legislative discretion we have provided this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas will pardon me if I ask the Senator from Vermont to reply to what the Senator from Kansas said about section 9.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, let us see what section 9 is.

Mr. HAWLEY. How are you going to give them acre for acre of other lands? It is the easiest thing in the world for a man to surrender one of his incomplete grants, and then he gets simply acre for acre to go on and establish himself on lands open to private entry, when I am told there are none. At any rate, he gets better land than he surrenders.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Section 9 provides:

That if in any case it shall so happen that the lands decreed to any claimant—

That is he has been found entitled to them—

under the provisions of this act shall have been sold or granted by the United States—

Something shall be done. What is to be done then? We have found by the tribunals we have instituted that a certain person, my friend from Connecticut, General HAWLEY, is entitled to 500 acres of land. The United States has thought that to be public land; its administration has so regarded it and has sold it to the Senator from Vermont, Mr. EDMUNDS, who has paid his dollar and a quarter or two dollars and a half an acre and has got the patent. The United States say by this bill, if you pass it, that the patentee under the United States shall not be disturbed, but that the claimant shall have justice done to him by providing a recompense as a substitute for that land to which he otherwise would have been entitled, for you can not give it to both the adverse claimants; the United States has already given it to me by patent, and this court has determined that my friend from Connecticut was really after all entitled to it. What are you going to do then?

You have got to do one of two things: either to say you will not give this claimant anything at all, or that you will turn out the United States patentee and the settler, or else you have to go further and say that one or the other must give up and have a recompense. What is the recompense that is complained of? It is exactly the recompense that in all previous land laws of this kind has been provided, and that is if he can not have those lands he may have some others.

The Senators say that that is not adequate, because in these Territories there are no such lands. That I do not know and I do not believe; but if it were true, then the bill simply ought to be amended by providing that he should have scrip for lands anywhere, whether they are open to private entry or not, because in some way, either by cash or by land, you must make good to him what you have found to be his right, and of which right you have deprived him by giving a patent to me beforehand. Therefore this section has simply followed the course of legislation for one hundred years in respect of cases where people were found to be entitled to land that had already been disposed of by the United States, and must therefore be asked to take something in lieu of it. That is all there is to that.

Mr. PLUMB. One thing the Senator from Vermont overlooked, that is the opportunity for collusion. Supposing it to be true, as he suggested would prove to be so in a number of cases, that land covered by a grant has been sold by the United States, the United States contracts by this bill that it will not disturb the title of the person to whom it has heretofore given possession, but will compensate the grantee by giving him other land. There will be no contention, therefore, between the person in possession under the United States and the holder of the grant. In fact, there will be a practical collusion between those two people to help each other, and therefore one element that would enter into the trial of these causes, the production of testimony or suggestion of facts which would tend to show the invalidity of the grant or limit its extent and so on, is taken away entirely.

But the section is bad in every respect. If the time ever was when the United States gave to the Commissioner of the General Land Office or to a court authority to issue scrip without limit, that time has passed and is to-day. The time within which it was a judicious deposit of power over the public lands of the United States has expired. What the Government would have done forty years ago it will not do to-day, for it has care for the proprieties and the necessities of the situation. It will not do to put into the hands of the courts the power to award large areas to those claimants who are willing to take floating rights instead of rights in place, and then to say to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that he may issue scrip which shall be located upon other public land of the United States.

The power to issue scrip to compensate such grant-holders as desire to have compensation should be left to the Congress of the United States, when the facts are reported, and that power should be held on to until the last moment by Congress for the preservation of the public domain.

Mr. President, pending the motion to adopt the report of the committee, I move to strike out section 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims by striking out section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That if in any case it shall so happen that the lands decreed to any claimant under the provisions of this act shall have been sold or granted by the United States, it shall be lawful for such claimants, or their legal representatives, at any time within one year after the rendition of the final decree in their favor, to execute, and file in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a release to the United States of all right, title, or claim to the land so sold or granted by the United States; and thereupon there shall be issued by the said Commissioner (under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior), to such claimant, or his legal representatives, scrip for an equal amount of acres so released, in quantities not exceeding 640 acres each, which scrip shall be assignable in such form as may be prescribed by said Secretary, and shall be receivable, acre for acre, in payment for any public lands in said

Territories or States in the State or Territory in which the land grant or claim for which scrip is issued shall be located, that may be subject to private entry at the minimum price.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I left the impression on the Senate before the recess that this bill would not consume a great deal of time in its passage; and I do not intend to disappoint that expectation or to violate my promise in that regard.

At this late hour of the day in the dying days of the session, I will simply say to the Senate, what they all know as well as I do, that substantially the same bill as the pending amendment of the committee was first reported to the Senate by Judge Thurman, chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims—a unanimous report from that committee.

It was subsequently at a different Congress reported by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] as chairman of the committee, with a unanimous report. At another Congress it was reported by the then chairman of the Private Land Claims Committee, Mr. Bayard, and each time it was passed by the Senate after a lengthy and able discussion upon a vote of at least four to one in its favor.

Now, I have simply to say that large numbers of persons have been here imploring the Senate and the Committee on Private Land Claims to give them some legislation upon this subject. Some of them have preferred the House bill, some have preferred the Senate bill, but all unanimously have asked the committee and the Senate to give them some legislation on this subject.

I will not detain the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to strike out section 9 of the amendment of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] and the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] are absent in the Committee on Appropriations on business of the Senate, and are paired.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] is paired with my colleague [Mr. DOLPH]. I do not know how they would vote if present.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. I have been compelled to be absent in the service of the Senate, and have been unable to hear the debate. I am unable to understand the question, and decline to vote.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—12.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Cameron, | Mahone, | Teller, |
| Bowen, | Conger, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Williams, |

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add at the close of the last section this further proviso:

And also provided, That the claims provided for in this section shall not be required to be proven before the courts, but the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pass upon the same and issue patents therefor upon satisfactory proof of the fact of occupancy as aforesaid being made therefor, and the cost of such proof shall be paid by the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RANSOM. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Private Land Claims as amended.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am informed that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] would vote for this bill if present. I will therefore cast my vote for it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My colleague [Mr. DOLPH] is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to inquire whether the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHENEY] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is not recorded.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am paired with him.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 15; as follows:

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. BOWEN. I do not desire to call the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, but simply to announce that I will not vote for the bill as amended by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the title to be the title of the Senate bill, which includes one State that is not mentioned in the House bill.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories."

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. RANSOM, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. EVARTS were appointed.

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 10666, Order of Business 2386.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10666.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who reported this bill, to allow me to call up the bill which is Order of Business 1903, informally laying aside this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall object to the calling up of any bill until this bill has been acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee objects to the request of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Claims be considered as reached in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 10, after the word "offices," to strike out the words "the warrants to be delivered to the payees thereof or through the mails," and insert in lieu thereof:

The drafts therefor to be made payable to the order of claimants, or their legal representatives, and to be delivered to the attorney or agent who shall have become entitled, under the act of July 7, 1884, and the rules adopted and to be adopted thereunder, to represent claimants before the Treasury Department, and who shall have filed a power of attorney from the claimant, executed as required by the Secretary of the Treasury, authorizing such attorney or agent to receive such draft, and if there be no such attorney or agent, the said drafts to be transmitted through the mails to the payees.

So as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, upon the requisition of the Secretary of War, without further audit, allowance, or restatement of the claims by the accounting officers, out of any other money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, or to their legal representatives in case of their death since the allowance of their claims by the accounting officers, the drafts therefor to be made payable to the order of claimants, or their legal representatives, and to be delivered to the attorney or agent who shall have become entitled, under the act of July 7, 1884, and the rules adopted and to be adopted thereunder, to represent claimants before the Treasury Department, and who shall have filed a power of attorney from the claimant, executed as required by the Secretary of the Treasury, authorizing such attorney or agent to receive such draft, and if there be no such attorney or agent, the said drafts to be transmitted through the mails to the payees, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, since January 14, 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names and the amounts opposite the names be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the reading of the names and amounts in the bill may be dispensed with.

Mr. SPOONER. And that only the amendments be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none, and that order will be taken. The next amendment of the Committee on Claims will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Page 15, strike out lines 346 and 347, as follows:

To C. R. Holmes, administrator of Luckett Davis, deceased, of Rutherford County, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, at the end of line 1229, to add "and 60 cents;" so as to read:

To Henry H. McGee, administrator of M. M. Vickers, deceased, of Stewart County, $265.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, at the end of line 1395, to insert "and 50 cents;" so as to read:

To James Canaday, of Webster County, $125.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, in line 1447, to strike out "dollars" and insert "cents;" so as to read:

To Agnes Heral (or Herrel) widow of Noah Heral (or Herrel), deceased, of Butler County, $11.25.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 8, line 176, the name ought to be "Aris" instead of "Avis;" so as to read:

Aris Brown.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made by the Secretary.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 62, in line 1494, before the word "cents," to strike out "seventy" and insert "seventy-two;" so as to read:

To William Mix, of Jefferson County, $318.72.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, at the end of line 2021, to add "and sixty cents;" so as to read:

To Allan D. Huddleston, of Fayette County, $9.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is the result of a folly by Congress. Under existing law all these claims are passed upon in the ordinary course by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. It is only recently that they have been required to be sent to Congress for enactment into law. It is a gross outrage to every claimant named in this bill. These persons ought to be paid promptly by the proper department as by law they have been paid until recently; and the requirements of recent laws that these claims should be sent to Congress to be enacted into a great bill like this is an injustice to every claimant, delays him in the collection of his debt, compels him to employ an attorney, and the first section of the bill makes a provision by which the attorney has a lien upon the draft for the payment of the claim, and to my certain knowledge in such cases what is exacted of these small creditors of the Government is an outrageous fee, sometimes amounting to 20, 30, 40, or 50 per cent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Never less than 25 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say this whole bill therefore is an outrage against private citizens all over the United States, and the law which requires these little claimants to come here and employ an attorney in order to get these sums, amounting to from $10 up to $100 or $200, is wrong, and I trust the Committee on Claims will provide a remedy.

Mr. HARRIS. The attorneys are not employed to come to Congress; they are employed to appear before the executive departments, not before Congress. But the rule for quite ten years or more—how much further back I do not know—has been that a bill similar to this has come to Congress every session to appropriate the money to pay the claims that have been audited and allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gross sum should be appropriated, that would be well and good; but I know when I was exercising the powers of Secretary of the Treasury that attorneys received these drafts and held them and refused to hand them over, and sometimes were compelled to do so by process of law, and in many cases were disbarred from practicing before the Department because they exacted from claimants unreasonable and improper fees.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if the law requiring these claims to be reported to Congress item by item and name by name has not been in existence for the last fifteen years?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been probably within ten years. It was done about 1873, or 1874, or 1875. At all events the law authorized these claims to be passed upon and to be paid by the regular accounting officers formerly.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is certainly over fifteen years since the change of the law was made requiring all these claims to be sent by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress—claims for back pay and bounty and horses lost in the various wars, horses lost in the last war, and all the Fourth of July claims as they are called under the act of July 4, 1864.

Mr. SHERMAN. Another thing that ought to be done which would cut off this long list is, that no claim should be presented against the United States for lost horses, cows, and little injuries that were done from time to time, after a period of five or ten years' limitation.

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been a limitation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would cut off the great body of these.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the claims have been pending unadjusted. I have no doubt that in the books you will find claims for horses lost by soldiers in the Mexican war, which have been pending in the Department ever since and never admitted until now; and so for horses lost during the last war. There is a limitation upon the presentation of the claims. I reported a bill myself that had a limitation placed on the presentation of claims for horses lost not only by soldiers but also by civilians. There is a limitation now and they can not present those claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no limitation of time against the United States that I am aware of in this class of claims.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not catch what the Senator from Ohio said.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there is any limitation against the presentation of claims by private citizens against the United States, but there may be in certain classes of claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a limitation right here in this bill. A claim under the act of July 4, 1864, for quartermasters' stores or commissarys' supplies has not been received by any of the Departments since the 1st day of January, 1880. There is the express limitation. These claims were presented long before the 1st of January, 1880. Fifty-eight thousand claims have been filed under the law of July 4, 1864, before the Quartermaster-General, and there are four thousand claims still pending. Persons began to file them in 1864, and they continued up to the 1st of January, 1880, when by an act passed in 1879 a limitation was placed upon the further presentation of all such claims. The Departments have been ever since 1880 considering the claims filed prior to that time, and I think they have now about three thousand claims still unadjusted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator if the great body of these claims were not old claims growing out of the war?

Mr. COCKRELL. They all grew out of the last war, every one of them. These claims are for quartermasters' stores taken by the Army during the war in the loyal States; that is, in Missouri, in Kentucky, in Maryland, and in certain portions of Tennessee which were declared by proclamation of the President not to be insurrectionary territory, and they are confined entirely to loyal claimants for property taken by the Army and used for Army purposes, not mere losses or damages or anything of that kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator when were these claims run out?

Mr. COCKRELL. They can not be presented now. Not one of the claims provided for by the bill has been presented since January 1, 1880. They can not be presented any more. These are the old claims that have been pending. Some of them were presented in 1866, 1867, 1868, and along there and only lately disposed of. Till now the Quartermaster-General has disposed of about 54,000 or 55,000 of these 4th of July claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the use of sending them here to be enacted into law?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think myself there is any great propriety in sending them here. We have only changed a few of them. Occasionally we strike out a claim. The Committee on Claims has occasionally stricken out a claim, and sometimes we have recommitted one. The Commissary-General has disposed of all claims filed before him for commissary stores. He has acted upon all of them and they are out of the way; and the Quartermaster-General is year by year acting upon the claims for quartermasters' stores and getting rid of them. There are about three thousand yet.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose these claims are sent here on the same principle that judgments of the Court of Claims are sent here for an appropriation. It is considered as a certain additional safeguard. Although we pay them on the auditing of the Treasury officers, yet Congress has its eye on them and it prevents any abuse.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was intended, doubtless, as a check on them to have their findings reported to Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is another provision here. This must be a new law or it would not be here I presume.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first part?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt about that. I never saw that in any bill before.

Mr. SHERMAN. The drafts for the claims of loyal claimants are required by this bill—— > to be made payable to the order of claimants, or their legal representatives, and to be delivered to the attorney or agent who shall have become entitled, under the act of July 7, 1884, and the rules adopted and to be adopted thereunder, to represent claimants before the Treasury Department.

And the attorney holds these drafts—has a lien upon them for any demand he may make against the claimant. In certain cases that transpired in the Treasury Department, they refused to send the drafts to the owners. As a matter of course the attorneys could not draw the money unless they forged the name of the payee. That of course could not be done except under the pains and penalties of forgery, but they could hold the drafts and demand unreasonable fees, and did in repeated cases demand unreasonable and grossly outrageous terms against the poor people whose claims they held, sometimes amounting to 50 per cent. of the amount of the claim.

I have always thought that under the law which was passed, the Senator says, fifteen years ago, these claims ought to be passed upon rapidly by the various Departments of the Government, and they should be furnished with enough force to act upon them promptly, not to delay the claims, and when they are passed the money ought to be sent directly to the owner of the money and not placed in the hands of an attorney, but the attorney should be left to settle with the claimant himself.

I have seen these bills passed very often since I have been a member of the Senate of late years, but it has always seemed to me a waste of labor for them to be sent here and acted on in this formal way.

Mr. TELLER. This is no unusual bill, unless it is the provision referred to in the first section. These bills have been coming here certainly for the last ten years through the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Longer than that.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly, but I only speak for that time, because I have had some knowledge of the committee most of the time since. These are claims, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, that have been filed long ago, and the claimants have waited a long while for the Government to adjudicate their claims, but they have come pretty promptly from the Department to Congress every session as fast as they have been adjudicated.

It is not any very great hardship upon a claimant that his case goes through these forms, because the claims never have been delayed since I have been a member of the body. The bills have passed promptly. The hardship has been the long delay in settling them in the War Department. That has been partly due to the lack of clerical force, and partly in some instances due to the fact that after the parties filed their claims they did not follow them up with the proper proof.

The Senator from Ohio thinks there is no limitation against filing claims. He will find that the statute provides as to horses and things of that kind a time of several years, and all those claims are now barred by statute. I believe the Government of the United States never has any limitation when it may make a claim upon the citizens, but the citizen is barred in very many of these cases in making his claim against the Government, and I believe in all this class of claims he is now barred.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator will recollect that under the act of 1849 claims could be presented by soldiers and by civilians for horses lost or property impressed into the service. In 1874 a limitation was placed upon the presentation of claims of soldiers, and about 1877 or 1878 I reported a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, and it was passed, removing the limitation upon the soldiers' claims, and subsequently another bill was passed which extended the limitation and then made a bar to all claims under the act of 1849.

Mr. TELLER. That is the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. And as to claims under the act of July 4, 1864, the limitation was put on them in 1879, and all claims were required to be filed before the 1st day of January, 1880. In the year 1879 several thousand claims were filed, and for a number of years the Quartermaster-General who was then acting decided that he had to pass upon these claims, and that he ought to have an agent sent to the neighborhoods where the claimants resided to procure testimony, and that was done in nearly every solitary instance. We finally amended the law so that three or four different officers in the Quartermaster-General's Office could pass final judgment upon the claims, and they have been disposing of them very rapidly, and I suppose they will probably finish the disposition of these cases during the coming fiscal year. I do not think they will get through this year, but they will probably finish in next year. Of the whole number, 58,000, there will be probably from forty-three to forty-four thousand of these claims that will be rejected or disallowed, where nothing will be allowed at all; but some of those claims are as just and meritorious as any claims which have been allowed, but they have been rejected for some technicality.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask, if it is not too late—if so I do not wish to move to reconsider, but I hope it will be regarded as not too late—to take a separate vote on the amendment contained in the first and second pages of the bill, requiring the drafts to be delivered to the attorneys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to ask that the vote may be renewed in the Senate on the amendment to which he refers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask then that a separate vote be taken on the first amendment in the bill, on pages 1 and 2, which requires the drafts to be sent to the attorney and gives him a lien on the draft for the payment of his fees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments will be considered as concurred in, except the one reserved by the Senator from Ohio. Is the Senate ready for the question on that amendment?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I reserve the whole bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Similar bills, I understand, passed by the House of Representatives hitherto have contained no provision whatever directing the manner in which this money should be disbursed by the Treasury Department. This year we find in the bill as it comes to the Senate in the tenth and eleventh lines of the first section the words:

> The warrants to be delivered to payees thereof or through the mails.

A great many complaints have been communicated to the Committee on Claims from attorneys and agents who represent these claimants. They protest, and it has seemed to the committee with very great force and very great justice, that the provision requiring these drafts to be transmitted to the claimants is unjust to them, and is in a measure trampling upon rights which they fairly possess.

I understand it is true that while the Senator from Ohio was Secretary of the Treasury, and during perhaps some administrations since, there has been difficulty at times between claimants and their attorneys, but I am told the number of cases in which there have been such difficulties compared with the whole number of attorneys is very few.

In 1884, in order to guard somewhat against a recurrence of the difficulty, Congress passed an act giving the Secretary of the Treasury power to make a roster of attorneys and agents who should be admitted to practice before that Department, with power to disbar men once admitted if they were found to have violated any of the rules of the Department or to have been guilty of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct.

I hold in my hand, and it was very carefully examined by the Committee on Claims, the circular issued under the act of July 7, 1884, by the Treasury Department, prescribing the terms under which attorneys and agents might be admitted to practice in that Department and to represent claimants upon such claims, and also prescribing under what circumstances drafts should be delivered to the attorney or agent instead of being transmitted directly to the claimants. I ask the attention of the Senate for a moment to the provision of the circular upon that subject:

> 4. The head of any bureau may require an attorney or agent to present satisfactory evidence that the claimant has authorized him to prosecute the claim, but no draft will be delivered to such attorney or agent, unless he files a power of attorney, duly witnessed and acknowledged, expressly authorizing him to receive it.

It has seemed to the committee that where a claimant employed an attorney, entered into a contract with him, agreeing upon the compensation which he was to receive, executed in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of the Treasury, acknowledged and under seal, a power of attorney authorizing the delivery of the draft to the attorney, it was not just or fair, after the service had been rendered by an attorney qualified under the law and under this circular, and possessing the power of attorney, that Congress should step over his head, ignore his claim for compensation under the power of attorney authorizing him to receive the draft, and transmit the draft directly to the claimant.

We have provided with great care in this amendment that the draft shall be made payable to the order of the claimant, so that the money can not be drawn without the indorsement of the claimant, and that it shall only be delivered to the attorney or agent where he had been admitted to practice under this proposed law and under the rules of the Treasury Department, and possessed the power of attorney to receive the draft.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what claim he proposes to pay? I have heard the argument in behalf of the attorney. What claim does he propose to pay?

Mr. SPOONER. I propose to pay all these claims if there is honesty enough in Congress to do it, as I presume there is.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to know what they are.

Mr. SPOONER. Some of these attorneys are very reputable gentlemen. Some of them are attorneys at law, some of them are agents simply, but men of good standing, men who are all commended under this circular by some judge of a United States court to the Secretary of the Treasury, men whose character for integrity is proven to the Secretary. They tell us that these claims are small. That we see. They tell us that the claimants are in distant States; that they are scattered. That we know. They tell us that if the drafts are delivered directly to the claimants for these small amounts, and they are left to sue the claimants or to depend upon the honesty of the claimants, in half of the cases they will not receive their compensation under those circumstances.

This proposed law does not give the lien; it is the agreement between the client and his attorney that gives the lien. We have thought, under all the circumstances, that it was not more than fair and just that these drafts made payable to the order of the claimants should be delivered to the attorneys and agents admitted by the Secretary of the Treasury under these rules and regulations and under the law.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I interrupt the Senator a moment? I understood the Senator to say it did not give any lien to the attorneys.

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir, not as a lien.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is it not practically a lien when you put it in his possession to hold it, of course, until he may receive his fee?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is substantially a lien?

Mr. SPOONER. You may call it a lien. It is a delivery by the United States of a draft belonging to A to B under a power of attorney from A authorizing B to receive it; that is all.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has not yielded the floor, the Chair understands.

Mr. HARRIS. I have just suggested to the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate strike out all the House provisions, that provision which the Senate committee has recommended to be stricken out, and insert nothing, leaving the Treasury Department under its own rules and regulations to send the draft to the attorney or to the claimant, as its rules and regulations may require.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that it would be a proper disposition of the question to strike out the words proposed, that have been inserted in the House, which require that in all cases the warrants shall be delivered to the payee thereof, and to strike out the amendment agreed to by the Senate, so that the Treasury Department may have the power over these attorneys that it has always exercised, and if an attorney fails to deliver a draft under reasonable circumstances for fair compensation it may have the power to enforce its delivery or issue a duplicate draft. In some cases while I was there duplicate drafts were issued directly to the claimant in order to avoid the claim made by the attorneys. I think probably it will answer the purpose to agree to so much of the amendment of the committee as proposes to strike out the House provision, and disagree to the amendment proposed by the committee, inserting the words "the draft therefor to be made payable," &c.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the proposition is to disagree in the Senate to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. To divide the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. To agree to strike out the words proposed to be stricken out and to disagree to the amendment proposing to insert other words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; disagree to the amendment reported by the committee, and then it will be in order to move to strike out other words; and I will make that motion if some other Senator does not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be non-concurred in in the Senate, and the Senator from Tennessee now moves to amend.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend by striking out, beginning in line 10, the words:

The warrants to be delivered to the payees thereof or through the mails.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 10, after the word "offices," strike out the words:

The warrants to be delivered to the payees thereof or through the mails.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 10, the word "offices" should be "officers;" so as to read, "by the accounting officers of the Treasury," instead of "offices."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. CHENEY, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 10146) authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River and a certain island therein; and

A bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 3853) to authorize the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama to erect a bridge across the Coosa River;

A bill (H. R. 9858) to authorize the Louisiana North and South Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River in Louisiana; and

A bill (H. R. 34) to authorize the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the legislative appropriation bill be laid before the Senate for reference.

The bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JOSEPH FRANCIS.

Mr. EVARTS. I move that the Senate take up the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before it is reported to the Senate, I wish to say that this is a very remarkable measure, and it has been pressed with a great deal of pertinacity. It is an individual measure for the relief of this gentleman. It seems that he is exceedingly anxious to get a gold medal, and that he has—the effrontery, one of my friends suggests—to come here and beg the Senate to confer upon him a gold medal. I think it is a very small piece of business. I ask that the appeal of another gentleman, who contests the right with this claimant, may be read and spread upon the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the paper, and having read for some time—

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the document may be printed in the RECORD without being read at length. I suppose the Senator from Missouri desires only to have it placed in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the document being printed without being read.

The paper referred to is as follows:

APPEAL OF CAPT. DOUGLASS OTTINGER AGAINST THE PASSAGE IN THE SENATE OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 125, FIRST SESSION FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

This resolution proposes the thanks of Congress and a gold medal to Joseph Francis for the "construction and perfection of life-saving appliances." The House Report No. 529, first session Forty-ninth Congress, goes further and gives him the credit of the "invention" of the life-car. For this reason Capt. Douglass Ottinger (the actual inventor) objects to the passage of the resolution in the Senate, and respectfully asks the Senate to consider the following facts in the case, taken from official or other reliable sources:

I.

In 1848 an appropriation was made by Congress, not confined to light-houses, but to be expended on the coast of New Jersey, between Sandy Hook and Little Egg Harbor, to the extent of $10,000, under the supervision of such officers as should be detailed for this duty by the Secretary of the Treasury; it was "to provide surf-boats, rockets, carronades, and other necessary apparatus for the better preservation of life and property from shipwreck." (U. S. Statutes at Large, vol. 9, page 322.)

II.

On the 18th of October, 1848, the following order assigned Capt. Douglass Ottinger, of the United States Revenue Marine Service, to take the supervision of the expenditure of the above appropriation:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 18, 1848.

SIR: Ten thousand dollars were appropriated by an act of the last Congress, to be expended under the supervision of such officer as may be detached by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"For providing surf-boats, rockets, carronades, and other necessary apparatus for the better preservation of life and property from shipwreck on the coast of New Jersey, between Sandy Hook and Little Egg Harbor."

The Department having asked the co-operation of the Board of New York Underwriters, in giving effect to the law, and that board having appointed Messrs. Walter R. Jones, Alfred P. and Alfred O. Ogden, a committee to act with the officer the Department may designate to superintend the arrangements, the Department has selected you for the duty thus indicated.

I have accordingly to request that you will report yourself to those gentlemen, and after informing yourself of their views touching the best means of carrying into effect the objects of Congress, that you will superintend such arrangement as they may direct, for that purpose, observing not to sanction any arrangement which will involve a greater expenditure of money than the amount of the appropriation.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Capt. D. OTTINGER,
United States Revenue Marine, New York.

The following official communication addressed by Captain Ottinger, May 21, 1849, to the then Secretary of the Treasury, reports the performance of the duty required by the previous Department order of October 18, 1848:

NEW YORK, May 21, 1849.

SIR: I have the honor to state that the duty assigned to me by order from the Department, of October 18, 1848, for carrying into effect the law of Congress for the preservation of life and property from shipwreck on the coast of New Jersey, between Sandy Hook and Little Egg Harbor, has been performed, and I respectfully beg leave to offer the following report:

The committee appointed by the Board of New York Underwriters, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, and by whom I was advised, selected, as proper places for surf-boat stations, eight points between Sandy Hook and Egg Harbor, and at each there has been constructed a frame boat-house, 28 feet long and 16 feet wide in the clear, containing all the articles as per receipts herewith inclosed.

The galvanized iron surf-boats were adopted on account of their durability, and not being likely to need repairs for a long time. This kind of boats are coming into use very fast, and I think them peculiarly suited to surf-boat stations, as they are not liable to become leaky, and therefore always ready for use. The boats which are at the several stations have a floating power which will sustain 15 persons when they are full of water.

The life-cars are also made of metal, with air chambers of the same material, and, in addition, are fitted with the India-rubber floats and fenders invented by General Santon, United States Army. These cars are constructed on the principle of a buoy and intended to pass through the surf when the surfmen dare not venture off. They are to be hauled to and from the stranded vessel by means of hauling lines attached to each end, and are protected from injury by contact with the ship's side by the inflated floats; these were adopted by R. B. Forbes, esq., to give the boats constructed by him for the Massachusetts Humane Society the essentials of life-boats; and I would here respectfully remark that I believe these fenders could be applied to the boats of the revenue cruisers with great effect, as they could not only give the men and officers increased confidence in boarding vessels at sea when on relief duty, but would protect the boats from being injured by contact with the vessel's side, and keep them fit for service much longer than they would be without such protection.

The rockets, with which the stations are furnished, were imported by R. B. Forbes, esq. The largest are 6 pounds, and will carry out 270 yards of line, weighing nine-tenths of an ounce per yard; the cost of each is about $5. With the mortar and shot, using 5 ounces of powder for a charge, I have thrown out 320 yards of the same line; rockets have generally been preferred on account of not breaking the line, as their motion is an accelerated one.

The shot, on the contrary, has its greatest velocity at the moment its action is felt upon the line, which has been a great objection to using the "carronade." This difficulty has been completely overcome, so far as we have tried it, by putting three small turns of small soft wire through the eye of the shot, with five or six spiral turns just outside of the muzzle.

I have recently been at each of the stations, and delivered all the articles in safety, and instructed the persons in whose charge they were left in the mode of using them, and left with each a card of printed directions, a copy of which I herewith inclose. I am apprehensive that it may appear to the head of the Department that much time has been occupied in bringing this duty to a close; but I would respectfully state, in explanation, that, notwithstanding the high intelligence of the committee and the valuable information which I received from them, yet there was much that we required which could only be obtained by experiment, and frequent alterations and delays were unavoidable. As it was of much importance that the apparatus should be reliable, all the articles, except the life-cars, have been practically tested, and these are approved by most of the intelligent surfmen, and also by Mr. Francis, boat-builder, at the Novelty Works, who has spent much time in obtaining information on the subject of life-boats and life-saving apparatus; and we availed ourselves of his experience in constructing them.

As the efficiency of the apparatus at the surf-boat station depends almost entirely on the projectiles being kept in proper condition, and the persons in whose charge they are left receive no compensation, and can seldom spare the time necessary to keep them in good order, I would respectfully propose that the commanders of revenue vessels, within whose cruising limits the stations are, should visit them once every two months and examine the apparatus, with the person having charge of the same, and have the mortar and shot cleaned, and the lines recoiled. The individuals in charge of the boat-house, and the people generally along the coast, appear to feel much interest in this matter, and, I believe, will exert themselves to make it useful.

I have the honor to transmit herewith the deeds for the land on which the boat-houses stand, and six receipts for the articles furnished for each station. There are two others, which were left to be signed, as the heads of the families were absent from the stations. There has been expended, as per bills transmitted to the Department, $9,848.61, which has provided the eight stations with all that was supposed would be necessary and useful.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. OTTINGER,
Captain United States Revenue Marine.

Hon. W. M. MEREDITH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

(Report No. 403, first session Thirty-fifth Congress, Hon. E. B. Washburne, Committee on Commerce.)

IV.

Articles contained in the different houses at the life-saving stations, coast of New Jersey, established by the United States, and furnished under the supervision of Captain Ottinger:

One boat-house, 29 by 16 feet.
One metallic surf-boat with air-chambers and cork fenders.
Seven oars and two India-rubber bailing buckets.
One metal life-car with India-rubber floats and fenders, and rings and chains for each end.
One manila hawser, 4½ inch, 180 fathoms.
One hauling line, 2½ inches, 310 fathoms.
Two rocket lines, 9.10 ounces per yard, 300 yards each.
One coiling frame for rocket line and box.
One crotch and range for throwing rockets.
One sand anchor strop and bull's eye.
One tackle with 20 fathoms fall of 2½-inch manila.
One heaver and strop.
One mortar of iron, and 10 shot fitted with spiral wire.
One copper powder canister and 4 pounds powder for same.
Twelve blue lights and box containing 50 quick matches.
Five rockets and rocket box of tin.
Eight pieces of match rope, and 12 pieces of port fire.
Two lanterns and oil can, and oil for same.
One lamp feeder and wick.
One stove and pipe and zinc.
One cord of wood and 10 pounds of oakum.
Two shovels and shot hook.
One priming wire and two shot boxes, zinc.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. OTTINGER,
United States Revenue Marine.

DIRECTIONS FOR USING THE LIFE-SAVING APPARATUS—TO THROW A LINE WITH A SHOT AND MORTAR.

First wipe the chamber and bore of the mortar clean, and clear the vent with the priming-wire, then raise the muzzle and put in the powder, measured by filling the top of the canister; wipe the shot clean and place it in the mortar, with the eye up, taking great care to keep the spiral turns in the wire which is attached to it, for on that depends the sweep of throwing the line to the stranded vessel. Then dig away the sand until the bed of the mortar lies level. This gives the piece 20° elevation, and is the best angle for throwing 350 yards. Point the mortar in line with the weather rail, if the vessel lies "head on" and the wind along the beach, but for her mainmast, if the wind is blowing on shore. Make the line fast to the wire, and lay 20 or 30 yards of it in front of the mortar, or to the water's edge; put in a quick match and fire, taking care to stand by the side of the mortar and not behind it. The box with the line should be placed 8 or 10 yards in front and about 2 yards aside.

TO PREPARE THE SMALL LINE.

Coil it from one pin to the opposite one on the "coiling frame," until there is one turn on each pin, then cross it in the same manner, and continue to do so until the whole is coiled, and take care to keep it slack enough to slip off the pins when you turn them down into the box, which will require three persons, as care must be taken to have all the line leave the pins at the same time as near as possible. There are two shots of rocket-line, each 310 yards long; and if the stranded vessel is at a greater distance than 300 yards from the beach, both lines must be bent together, and one tablespoonful of powder added to the charge, with a piece of thin paper laid over it, and the shot put in while the muzzle is up, as much of the force is lost if the powder is not kept in the chamber of the piece. Much care should be taken to have the end of the small line made fast before turning it off the pins into the box, or both shot and line may be lost.

TO USE A ROCKET.

Point the "range" so as to be in line with the mastheads, and for the weather side of the vessel; secure the "crotch and range" well in the sand; secure the rocket to the staff with the small wire, then place it in the "range." Bend on the small line, and place the box in which it is coiled directly behind the "range;" put the quick match in the vent of the rocket, and touch it with your match.

TO SEND A HAWSER.

The small line having been thrown to the vessel, bend on the hauling-line, and when the persons on board the ship get hold of it, reeve the end of the hawser through the rings of the life-car, and secure the end to the small line, and let them haul the hawser on board; then put on your tackles and haul it tight, and make use of the small line for hauling the car off and on. Should the cold be severe, it would be better to send a person from the shore to the ship, as he could manage matters more promptly than persons suffering from exposure. The doors of the car should be carefully examined, and the pins tried to see that they are not rusted in.

TO USE THE MATCH ROPE.

Let it be well lighted, and it will then burn at the rate of about 3 inches per hour. If there is any objection to standing by the mortar when it is fired, let some powder be moistened in the hand, and worked into a stiff paste, which will stick to the top of the quick-match, and will burn a sufficient time to allow the person who fires it to go from the piece.

When the mortar is not in use, the chamber should be kept filled with oil, and the bore be oiled at least once a month.

The powder canister should be kept with the top carefully screwed on, and the tin boxes containing the rockets, &c., to be kept closed.

If the apparatus is used at night, a "blue light" should be burned before firing, so that the persons on board the ship can see what you are preparing to do. This light can be held in the hand, and in such a position as best to show the apparatus.

Very respectfully, yours,

DOUGLASS OTTINGER,
Captain United States Revenue-Cutter Service.

(See pages 32 and 33 of the report of "the Life-Saving Benevolent Association of New York" for 1853, and reprinted in 1883.)

VI.

The following extract from a letter in reply to one from Hon. W. A. Newell, M. C., House of Representatives, January 12, 1849, and written by Captain Ottinger, while establishing the first life-saving stations, shows his early idea of the life-car:

NEW YORK, January 16, 1849.

DEAR SIR: I take much pleasure in giving you information on the subject of your letter; and although it may appear that we have not progressed rapidly, yet we have been constant in our efforts to bring the matter to good account, and have called to our assistance several of the most intelligent surfmen along the coast, who have selected a boat as a model by which those provided for in the appropriation are to be constructed.

We have selected eight stations on the beach, within the limits embraced in the law "for the preservation of life and property from shipwreck on the coast of New Jersey," and design to have at each of them a frame house of the most substantial kind, to be furnished with a galvanized iron "surf-boat," with ten separate air chambers, 180 fathoms of hawser, 360 fathoms of hauling line, 600 yards of rocket line, rockets, &c.

Stoves and fuel will also be placed in the buildings, which will be sufficiently large to shelter persons and goods. In addition to the surf-boats, I propose to have a "life-car" at each station, which is designed to be sent to the stranded vessel when the wind and sea are too heavy for the best constructed boats to live. I have not yet had the car approved of by the committee of the Board of Underwriters, by whom I am advised in these matters, but I have no doubt it will meet their approbation.

I am much indebted to Maj. Henry Wardell, one of your constituents, for valuable information on the subject of my present duties; and during my recent visit to that vicinity I had the satisfaction of hearing remarks from several intelligent persons, which evidenced that the people throughout the neighborhood were gratified that the Government is about to place under their control more efficient means to enable them to extend their usefulness in saving life and property from shipwreck.

I have made some experiments in throwing a line from the shore to a vessel with a rocket, which was witnessed by Messrs. Suydam and Jones, of the committee, and several other gentlemen, who accompanied us in the United States revenue cutter outside of Sandy Hook, at which I fired several rockets with lines attached, and threw out 250 yards of line, weighing 1.62 ounces per yard, with which we tested the practicability of sending a hawser from the beach to a boat or vessel.

The rockets used on that occasion were imported by R. B. Forbes, esq., of Boston, who is the executive officer of the Massachusetts Humane Society, and is constructing surf-boats from the appropriation of $5,000 given by Congress to that society.

Captain Forbes informs me that Colonel Talcott, of the ordnance at Washington, has offered to furnish rockets from the arsenal at that place; for humane purposes and from experiments recently made by the officers in the pyrotechnic department, it is believed that he can produce rockets fully equal to those imported.

It is my intention, as soon as the weather will permit, to make some trials in throwing a line by means of a mortar and shot, and am of the opinion that we will also place them at the several stations. I can scarcely answer your inquiry respecting the persons to whom the boats are to be intrusted; but from what I can learn on that point, my opinion is that the surfman who first arrives at the boat-house should have the privilege of taking charge of her for that occasion, provided he has the ability to take the "steering-oar;" and if he has not, none of the others will place themselves under his command.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DOUGLASS OTTINGER,
Captain United States Revenue Marine.

Hon. W. A. NEWELL, Member of Congress.

VII.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES OF COMMERCE.

May 14, 1858, Hon. E. B. Washburne, from the Committee on Commerce (first session Thirty-fifth Congress), reported (No. 403) that "the committee are satisfied that Captain Ottinger is the original inventor of the life or surf car, and that he has devoted the same to the use of the United States, and that the Government is now using them at fifty-two different stations on the coast. The evidence before the committee is conclusive as to the great value of the invention of Captain Ottinger as a means of saving life. The present Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Howell Cobb, in answer to a letter from the committee says, "It has proved of incalculable value in the saving of human life;" and he mentions the case of the wreck of the ship Ayrshire, on the Jersey coast (when it was impossible for any boat to reach her in consequence of the heavy surf rolling in upon the beach), where, by means of this invention, every one on board was saved—men, women, and children, and even infants in their mothers' arms.

As Captain Ottinger, with a laudable public spirit, has for many years devoted his valuable invention to the use of the United States, and has received no compensation therefor, your committee deem his claim for some remuneration not unreasonable. They are prepared, therefore, to recommend the passage of a bill granting him an amount not only as a remuneration for the use of his invention, but to enable him to make some further experiments to test its practicability in rescuing passengers and crews during violent gales at sea.

The committee then "recommended the passage of a bill * * * as a remuneration for the use of his invention," &c. The bill became a law, and reads as follows:

An act for the relief of Captain Douglass Ottinger.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That there be paid to Capt. Douglass Ottinger, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, in full compensation for the use of his invention of the life or surf-car by the United States; and also to enable him further to test the practicability of adapting such car to the rescuing of passengers and crews during violent gales at sea.

Approved February 14, 1859. (Page 559, volume 2, Statutes at Large.)

VIII.

GOVERNOR NEWELL'S LETTER.

October 16, 1859, Hon. William A. Newell, then governor of New Jersey, in a letter addressed to Captain Ottinger from the "executive department," among other things, said: "I assure you that I shall never cease to know or remember you as one * * * to whom the people of New Jersey are almost entirely indebted for the valuable apparatus which has been the means of saving so many lives," &c. (See Report 403, first session, Forty-fifth Congress.)

Extract from report in 1853 (reprinted in 1883) of the Life-Saving Association of the city of New York, incorporated in March, 1849:

"The surf or life car was invented by Capt. Douglass Ottinger, of the United States revenue-cutter service, in 1849, since which time they have been frequently used in rescuing the passengers and crews from wrecked and stranded vessels on the Atlantic coast, and hundreds of lives saved by them. * * * Mr. Joseph Francis executed the mechanical part of the surf-car and life-boats, under the direction and supervision of the Government officer.

"WALTER R. JONES,
"President and Executive Officer, and others."

It will be observed that the president of this New York benevolent association is the same person with whom the Secretary of the Treasury, at the very inception of the Life-Saving Service, directed Captain Ottinger, October 18, 1848, to confer and co-operate. This gentleman, for years so prominent in this great work of humanity, in 1853, unequivocally affirms in his official report that "Captain Ottinger invented the life-car." Who could know this more certainly than he? And he also affirms at the same time that "Mr. Francis executed the mechanical part," &c.

IX.

Somewhere in 1851, while Captain Ottinger was on the Pacific Ocean, Mr. Francis, the person named in the resolution under consideration, began making claims to the invention, and asked the Patent Office for a patent for the "life-car." To meet the question judicially, Captain Ottinger, in 1858 or '59, as assignor to William Todd, applied also for a patent. The result was an interference trial before the Commissioner of Patents. The following decision by the Commissioner settled the matter, on the evidence, once and for all, in favor of Ottinger; affirming, incidentally, Mr. Washburn's report and the preceding act of Congress as to who was the "original inventor" of the life-car:

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE, August 8, 1860.

SIR: In the matter of the interference between the applications of Joseph Francis and Douglass Ottinger, assignor to William Todd, for letters patent for alleged improvements in life-boats, I have to submit the following report:

It was the object of the invention in controversy to save human life by rescuing the passengers and crews of ships when stranded or wrecked, and in the roughest weather.

The invention was as novel as it was bold and successful, and it consisted in the construction of a life-boat that should be strong, buoyant, and capable of containing living beings under cover, without suffocating or drowning when pulled through the surf, not be easily upset, and even safe when capsized, and at the same time the boat was protected from destruction by being violently forced either by wind or waves against the wreck, the shore, or the relieving ship.

These conditions were common to both applications, and therefore the declaration of the interference was proper. From the testimony it appears that the boats were built in 1848, that they were built by Francis at the Novelty Works in New York, for the United States Government under Ottinger's instructions; and that Francis gave Ottinger the credit for being the inventor; that Ottinger explained to Francis how to build the boat or "life-car" in 1849.

One witness, G. H. Penfield, is under the impression that Ottinger claimed the invention in 1849, and that Francis denied having invented the "life-car."

It also appears from the evidence that in October, 1848, Ottinger was appointed by the then Secretary of the Treasury to take charge of and disburse an appropriation of $10,000, "for providing such boats, rockets, carronades, and other necessary apparatus for the better preservation of life and property from shipwreck on the coast of New Jersey, between Sandy Hook and Little Egg Harbor;" that in May, 1849, he reported to the Department his proceedings in the premises, embracing an account of the boat in question, which then involved the invention now claimed.

On the 6th of August, 1853, Ottinger writes to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking permission to place one of the life-cars belonging to the United States on exhibition at the World's Fair, at New York, and remarks "that part of the life-saving apparatus is my invention; it has been the means of saving five hundred human lives. I am anxious that the public should have an opportunity of using and availing themselves of its principles. I did not patent the invention, and am desirous that it should be used throughout the world without tax."

The application of Francis was completed in April, 1851, and based on the caveat dated February 11, 1850, while the application of Ottinger was not filed until the 11th of May, 1859.

I am fully satisfied from the testimony that the invention in question was original with Ottinger, and that he was also the first inventor of the same; but that he has by his own acts deliberately abandoned the same to the public, and that now the invention is not the proper subject-matter for the protection of letters patent.

Ottinger was under no obligation to give his invention freely to the use of the United States in disbursing the appropriation under the orders of the Treasury Department merely because he was in the revenue service; and yet he did so, without any assertion of his rights as an inventor, or any interruption to the public use up to August 6, 1853, when, by his own deliberate written declaration to a public department, he gravely says that he is "desirous that it (the invention) should be used throughout the world without tax."

Now, whether the mere public use could have been explained from Ottinger's distant employment in the public service, as in California for example, as merely permissive and experimentive, the letter of August 6, 1853, is a clear and direct dedication of the "life-car" that can not now be explained or recalled, for when an inventor once gives his invention to the public he can never reclaim it—it is gone from him forever.

I am therefore of opinion that both the application of Francis and Ottinger now in interference should be rejected because the invention has long been abandoned to the public.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY BALDWIN, Examiner.

Hon. PHILIP F. THOMAS,
Commissioner of Patents.

U. S. PATENT OFFICE, August 8, 1860.

The foregoing report is confirmed, the interference is dissolved, and patent refused. Thirty days limited for appeal.

PHILIP F. THOMAS, Commissioner.

Thus the conclusions of the Thirty-fifth Congress were fully sustained by the judgment of the Patent Office. Mr. Francis did not appeal.

X.

Extracts from the evidence taken in the case before the Commissioner of Patents, and now of record in that office:

1. Extract from the testimony of Captain Ottinger, the inventor of the life-car.

"Mr. Joseph Francis was selected by me (and a committee from the Board of Underwriters of New York with whom I advised) to build metallic surf-boats.

* * * * * * *

"The life or surf car was also built at the same place under my immediate direction. I only gave Mr. Francis a rough sketch of what I desired him to make, trusting his mechanical skill and aptness would enable him to get ideas from frequent conversations, and produce the simple machine that I wished him to build. This, however, he did not do, but always waited for me to be present and to give directions in detail before he would allow his workmen to proceed in making the upper half of the life or surf car, which was entirely novel and original with me."

Extract from the testimony of Capt. John McGowan, United States Revenue Marine Service:

"I know the parties. Have known Captain Ottinger for forty years, and Mr. Francis for twenty years. Captain Ottinger was the first who established and had charge of the life-saving apparatus on the Jersey coast.

"I succeeded him in 1849 as a Government officer in charge of such apparatus. The life-car had been built and established on the Jersey coast from Sandy Hook to Barnegat previous to my taking charge. I established them from Barnegat to Cape May. I superintended the building of six at the Novelty Works in 1849, in the months of August, September, and October. Mr. Francis was the builder and superintendent. I saw him frequently during this period. He never claimed to be the inventor of this car. I understood it always as Ottinger's invention. When I succeeded Captain Ottinger I found these cars then in use, and everything that was necessary to the saving of life ready to my hand.

"The cars that I built were precisely the same as those built by Captain Ottinger, with the exception of a handle inside the scuttle-hatch put on by me. The cars I speak of, as built by me, were those superintended by Mr. Francis at the Novelty Works. I remained in charge of the life-saving apparatus only until it was completed in November, 1849."

Extract from the testimony of George H. Penfield, of New York, who put the rubber floats on the life-car:

"I went for the purpose of taking the dimension of a surf-car, with the view to put india rubber floats on the outside of it. When we got there the work had not been commenced to any extent—I mean the work of building the car. In reply to a question from Captain Ottinger, Mr. Francis said he had not proceeded far with the work, as he was waiting for further directions from Captain Ottinger before proceeding with the work.

* * * * * * *

"After some time spent in explanations Mr. Francis consented to follow his directions and make it as he said; at the same time he said that he should hold Captain Ottinger responsible for the failure, and would take no responsibility himself, and he was satisfied it would be a failure. Captain Ottinger told him he would take all responsibility himself and screen him from all blame from failure."

Extract from testimony of Samuel H. Metcalf, of Erie, Pa.:

* * * "That in March or April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine (1849), he in company with Capt. Douglass Ottinger, of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, visited the Novelty Iron Works, in the city of New York, at which place Mr. Joseph Francis had charge of the shop for the building of metallic boats, and was at that time building surf-boats, under the direction of Captain Ottinger, for the Government.

* * * * * * *

"Captain Ottinger asked Mr. Francis why the building of the life-car had not progressed faster, and what caused the delay. Mr. Francis said in reply that his workmen could not proceed in constructing it unless Captain Ottinger was present to give directions, as neither he, Mr. Francis, nor his workmen knew where to place the entrance or man-hole into the life-car.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. Francis, myself, and Captain Ottinger were standing around the life-car—Captain Ottinger explaining to Mr. Francis, as well as myself, the plan for completing the life-car. Mr. Francis did not appear to be familiar with, nor to feel any interest in the construction or completion of the contrivance or machine that was called a life-car. I was informed, during the conversation above referred to, by Captain Ottinger that the life-car, when finished, would be a covered boat, sufficiently tight and secure to convey its occupants through or under the heavy breaking waves of the ocean in a gale from wrecked vessels to land, and he also informed me of the mode of operating it from shore to wreck.

"I did not understand Mr. Francis had any knowledge in the way of originating the life-car, but even if I had supposed him to be the inventor as well as the builder, the circumstance of his saying that he was not able to proceed in its construction until Captain Ottinger was present to designate the place for the hatch or entrance, would have made me know that Mr. Francis was without knowledge of the principle on which the 'life-car' is constructed.

"Mr. Francis told Captain Ottinger that the building of the car was delayed because he, Francis, could not have his workmen proceed in making the car, as it might be done wrong, unless Captain Ottinger was present to direct, and that he had advanced as far as he had knowledge, which was to make the boat part. The lower portion of the car only was then made."

The fact that the record shows that Mr. Francis never was sworn in the interference case between him and Ottinger's assignee, when he could have claimed his rights under oath, and been cross-examined by the assignee's attorney, is a very significant and telling circumstance.

At that time the witnesses to the inception and completion of the life-car were all alive, and the facts fresh in their memories; and Mr. Francis, if sworn, could have been met face to face by the men who knew all about it.

If Mr. Francis was out of the country, that would have been a sufficient reason for a continuance of the case until he returned, when he could have testified. But he neither testified, nor asked for delay that he might. The conclusion, inevitably, is, that he was afraid to do so for some reason sufficient for himself and his attorney.

J. W. DOUGLASS,
For CAPTAIN OTTINGER.

JANUARY 5, 1887.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would also like to have printed in connection with this a report made in the House of Representatives in 1858 by Mr. Washburne from the Committee on Commerce, being Report No. 403 of the Thirty-fifth Congress, first session, which is upon the same question and gives a history of the whole case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report referred to is as follows:

Thirty-fifth Congress, first session—House of Representatives—Report No. 403.

CAPT. DOUGLASS OTTINGER.

(To accompany bill H. R. No. 576.)

MAY 14, 1858.

Mr. E. B. WASHBURNE, from the Committee on Commerce, made the following report:

The memorialist, Capt. Douglass Ottinger, of the United States Revenue Service, represents that he is the sole and original inventor of the machine known as life or surf car, and that it was the first invention whereby persons could be safely conveyed through heavy breaking waves from stranded vessels to the shore. He submits that he has voluntarily placed his invention at the life-saving stations of the United States subject to the free use of the Government, unrestricted by patent rights. He asks some remunerative compensation for the labor and expense which the inventions have cost him, and also something in addition to enable him to test practically at sea its adaptation to rescue passengers and crews during violent gales.

The committee are satisfied that Captain Ottinger is the original inventor of the life or surf car, and that he has devoted the same to the use of the United States, and that the Government is now using them at fifty-two different stations on the coast. The evidence before the committee is conclusive as to the great value of the invention of Captain Ottinger as a means of saving life. The present Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Howell Cobb, in answer to a letter from the committee, says "it has proved of incalculable value in the saving of human life;" and he mentions the case of the wreck of the ship Ayrshire, on the Jersey coast (when it was impossible for any boat to reach her in consequence of the heavy surf rolling in upon the beach), where, by means of this invention, every one on board was saved—men, women, and children, and even infants in their mothers' arms.

As Captain Ottinger, with a laudable public spirit, has for many years devoted his valuable invention to the use of the United States, and has received no compensation therefor, your committee deem his claim for some remuneration not unreasonable. They are prepared, therefore, to recommend the passage of a bill granting him an amount not only as a remuneration for the use of his invention, but to enable him to make some further experiments to test its practicability in rescuing passengers and crews during violent gales at sea.

A.

GENTLEMEN: In submitting to you a claim for remunerative compensation as the inventor of the "life or surf car," and other parts of an apparatus in use at fifty-two life-saving stations established by acts of Congress, I take the liberty to transmit the accompanying documents, numbered from 1 to 17, which I hope will show to your satisfaction that I am the inventor of the surf car and spiral wire, for overcoming the vis inertia, and fastening the line to the shot, as well as to give evidence of its capability to rescue passengers and crews from vessels wrecked near the shore.

I now design to extend the effectiveness of the apparatus to the shipwrecked on the open sea, in such and similar cases as steamers San Francisco and Central America, and trust that the circumstance of having already been instrumental in producing a reliable means of overcoming the dangers of the heaviest breaking waves, will obtain for me your favorable consideration to my proposition for saving life on the ocean.

I ask for such compensation as you may deem just and proper to remunerate me for the past, present, and prospective use of my invention by the United States at such stations on shore as the proper authority may determine will be likely to benefit the cause of humanity, as well as for the unlimited use of the same in the naval service, transport and other vessels of the Army, revenue service, coast survey, and light-house vessels, and such of the merchant marine as may be temporarily in Government employ. I append the following instances where compensation has been given to inventors by Congress:

To the inventor of chloroform, $100,000; to experiments on Morse's telegraph, $48,000; to experiments of Dr. Page, in the application of electricity as a motor, $24,000; to the heirs of Fulton, ——

As it is yet to be established that my apparatus can be successful in storms on the ocean, I rely on the intelligence of your committee to appreciate the fact that it has actually been successful on the strand, and therefore beg you will sanction, in addition to my compensation, an appropriation of $5,000 to enable me to test practically, at sea, its adaptation to rescuing passengers and crews during violent gales.

I am, very respectfully,

DOUGLASS OTTINGER,
Captain United States Revenue-Cutter Service.

Hon. JOHN COCHRAN,
And members of Committee of Commerce, House of Representatives.

B.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 27, 1858.

SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing, by direction of the Committee on Commerce, the petition of Capt. Douglass Ottinger, and requesting to be informed if any of the surf-cars claimed by him to be his invention are in use by the Government, and if so, how many, and whether or not his apparatus be deemed a valuable one, &c., and, in reply, have the honor to say that, in obedience to authority vested in this Department by certain acts of Congress, there have been established, and are now in operation, fifty-four life-saving stations on the coasts of New Jersey and Long Island—twenty-eight on the former and twenty-six on the latter coast—which has been provided with the necessary appurtenances for the saving of human life from shipwreck, including both a life-boat and life-car at each station.

The duty of locating the first eight stations between Sandy Hook and Egg Harbor was assigned to Captain Ottinger, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, who caused the houses to be constructed and the requisite apparatus to be provided therefor, as will be seen on reference to the report of that officer to this Department, under date of 21st May, 1849, a copy of which accompanies this communication. The six succeeding stations, established between Little Egg Harbor and Cape May, were intrusted to First Lieut. John McGowan, of the same service, who acted as the agent of the Department in procuring the required apparatus for the same, a copy of whose report, under date of November 4, 1849, is herewith transmitted. The remaining fourteen stations on the coast of New Jersey and the twenty-six on the coast of Long Island have been established at different times, under the superintendence of Messrs. Edward Watts, Samuel C. Dunham, and J. N. Schellinger, and the necessary apparatus provided therefor.

In answer to that part of your letter as to the valuableness of the apparatus, I have to say, that in many instances, where it has been brought into service, it has proved of incalculable value in the saving of human life. In one instance alone, in a terrific snow-storm on the coast of New Jersey, in January, 1850, the life-car at one of the Government stations on that coast succeeded in saving from the wreck of the ship Ayrshire (when it was impossible for any boat to reach her, in consequence of the heavy surf rolling in upon the beach) every one on board, two hundred in number, consisting of men, women, and children, even infants in their mothers' arms—a description of which will be found in the work on life-boats and life-cars, published by Francis's Metallic Life-boat Company, of New York. The life-boat has proved equally successful in many instances, not deemed necessary here to enumerate.

The Department in bearing testimony to the great value of the apparatus for saving of human life from shipwreck, in use at the Government stations on the coasts of New Jersey and Long Island, takes the occasion to say that it proposes no means of information beyond what is furnished by the two accompanying reports as to who is the inventor of the "life-car" in use at the Government stations referred to. Those cars which were furnished the stations first established by Captain Ottinger, in 1849, were provided by that officer, under the general instructions of the Department to procure the best means of saving life and property from shipwreck.

In like manner, Lieutenant McGowan procured those which were furnished the stations established under his superintendence. Those provided the Government stations subsequently established were procured by the Department, direct, of Mr. Joseph Francis, of New York, who it was understood was the constructor of those cars in use at the stations previously established by Captain Ottinger and Lieutenant McGowan.

The petition of Captain Ottinger is herewith returned.

I am, very respectfully,

HOWELL COBB,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. E. B. WASHBURN,
Of the Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

C.

PHILADELPHIA, November 4, 1849.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the duty assigned me, of carrying into effect the act of Congress for the preservation of life and property from shipwreck between Little Egg Harbor and Cape May, coast of New Jersey, is completed, and I respectfully beg leave to offer the following report:

In obedience to the orders of the committee of the Board of Underwriters of Philadelphia, I proceeded to the coast, and selected six points (all of them on islands except Cape May) as the most suitable for stationing the apparatus, all of which places were approved by the committee. At each station there is constructed a frame boat-house, 29 by 16 feet, sufficiently large to contain the surf-boat, life-car, wagon, and all the apparatus, besides plenty of room for crews of wrecked vessels.

The houses were built by Messrs. N. & S. Middleton, of this city, and are of the best material. They are located as near the beach as the safety of the building would admit, and are perfectly secure from any storms that may occur. They are erected upon locust and cedar piles, 6 feet long, and buried 5 feet in the ground, and securely trenailed to the piles with locust trenails 1½ inches diameter. They are well painted with two good coats of white lead, and the roof well covered with red ocher and tar. The ropes were made (by Messrs. George J. Weaver & Co., of this city) according to the recommendation of Captain Ottinger—that is, spun in very fine yarn, like whale-line or bolt-rope.

The yarns coated with a light coat of tallow, and laid slack, thereby making it float light and very pliable in cold weather, and not apt to kink. The boats and life-cars were built by Mr. Francis, of New York, and are the same as those built for, and recommended by, Captain Ottinger, with an important improvement of covering the whole inside bottom with galvanized iron and securing it to the wooden bottom, thereby making the boat perfectly secure and not liable to leak should the wood become rent or cracked by hard usage.

To show the capability of the boats I will mention that I landed in one of them on Cape May while blowing a double-reef breeze, with considerable surf on the beach, and had in the boat all the life-saving apparatus for the Cape May station, weighing full 2,000 pounds, and five men, and landed the whole in safety.

At each of the stations I have placed everything in proper order in the boat-houses and left with the persons having charge a card of printed directions how to use the apparatus; and in order to give them confidence in the use of it at each place, I fired off a rocket and shot out of the mortar with the lines attached and was very successful in carrying the lines to the point designated. Those persons who witnessed the experiment feel satisfied that they can now throw a line to a stranded vessel (if not over 300 yards from the beach) when it is impossible for a boat to venture off.

As the persons who have charge of the apparatus receive no compensation for taking care of it, I am fearful some of them will neglect keeping it in proper order. I would respectfully recommend that the commander of the Forward be instructed to visit some of the accessible stations occasionally to see that everything is in good condition. I am much indebted to H. C. Holmes, Esq., collector of the Great Egg Harbor district, for assisting me in selecting the locations, procuring the deeds from the owners of the land, and rendering me much valuable assistance, being perfectly acquainted with the coast, and having the confidence of the board of underwriters. I have given him the keys of two of the houses nearest his dwelling, and have requested him to assume the general superintendence of the whole line (except Cape May) until further orders from the Government.

I herewith submit the deeds for the land, receipts for the articles furnished each station, and a printed list of all the articles; also a deed and receipt left by Captain Ottinger.

The names of the stations are as follows:
Brigantine Beach, about midway.
Absecom Beach, opposite Ryan Adams.
Peck's Beach, east end.
Ludlam's Beach, west end.
Five-mile Beach, east end.
Cape May Beach light-house.

There has been expended, as per bills in the hands of the board of underwriters, the sum of $8,364.67, which has provided everything that was supposed useful or necessary.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN N. TONER,
First Lieutenant, United States Revenue Marine.

Hon. W. M. MEREDITH,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington.

NEW YORK, May 21, 1849.

SIR: I have the honor to state that the duty assigned to me, by order from the Department of October 18, 1848, for carrying into effect the law of Congress for the preservation of life and property from shipwreck on the coast of New Jersey, between Sandy Hook and Little Egg Harbor, has been performed; and I respectfully beg leave to offer the following report:

The committee appointed by the Board of New York Underwriters, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, and by whom I was advised, selected, as proper places for surf-boat stations eight points between Sandy Hook and Egg Harbor, and at each there has been constructed a frame boat-house, 28 feet long and 16 feet in the clear, containing all the articles as per receipts herewith inclosed.

The galvanized-iron surf-boats were adopted on account of their durability and not being likely to need repairs for a long time. This kind of boats are coming into use very fast, and I think them peculiarly suited to surf-boat stations, as they are not liable to become leaky, and therefore always ready for use. The boats which are at the several stations have a floating power which will sustain fifteen persons when they are full of water.

The "life-cars" are also made of metal, with air chambers of the same material, and, in addition, are fitted with the India-rubber floats and fenders invented by General Santon, United States Army. These "cars" are constructed on the principle of a buoy, and intended to pass through the surf when the surfmen dare not venture off. They are to be hauled to and from the stranded vessel by means of "hauling-lines" attached to each end, and are protected from injury by contact with the ship's side by the inflated floats; these were adopted by R. B. Forbes, esq., to give the boats constructed by him for the Massachusetts Humane Society the essentials of life-boats; and I would here respectfully remark that I believe these fenders could be applied to the boats of the revenue cruisers with great effect, as they could not only give the men and officers increased confidence in boarding vessels at sea when on "relief duty," but would protect the boats from being injured by contact with the vessel's side, and keep them fit for service much longer than they would be without such protection.

The rockets with which the stations are furnished were imported by R. B. Forbes, esq. The largest are 6 pounds, and will carry out 270 yards of line, weighing nine-tenths of an ounce per yard; the cost of each is about $5. With the mortar and shot, using 5 ounces of powder for a charge, I have thrown out 320 yards of the same line; rockets have generally been preferred on account of not breaking the line, as their motion is an accelerated one.

The shot, on the contrary, has its greatest velocity at the moment its action is felt upon the line, which has been a great objection to using the "carronade." This difficulty has been completely overcome, so far as we have tried it, by putting three small turns of small soft wire through the eye of the shot, with five or six spiral turns just outside of the muzzle.

I have recently been at each of the stations, and delivered all the articles in safety, and instructed the persons in whose charge they were left in the mode of using them, and left with each a card of printed directions, a copy of which I herewith inclose. I am apprehensive that it may appear to the head of the Department that much time has been occupied in bringing this duty to a close; but I would respectfully state, in explanation, that, notwithstanding the high intelligence of the committee and the valuable information which I received from them, yet there was much that we required which could only be obtained by experiment, and frequent alterations and delays were unavoidable.

As it was of much importance that the apparatus should be reliable, all the articles except the life-cars have been practically tested, and these are approved by most of the intelligent surfmen, and also by Mr. Francis, boat-builder, at the Novelty Works, who has spent much time in obtaining information on the subject of life-boats and life-saving apparatus; and we availed ourselves of his experience in constructing them.

As the efficiency of the apparatus at the surf-boat station depends almost entirely on the projectiles being kept in proper condition, and the persons in whose charge they are left receive no compensation, and can seldom spare the time necessary to keep them in good order, I would respectfully propose that the commanders of revenue vessels within whose cruising limits the stations are should visit them once every two months and examine the apparatus, with the person having charge of the same, and have the mortar and shot cleaned and the lines recoiled. The individuals in charge of the boat-house and the people generally along the coast appear to feel much interest in this matter, and I believe will exert themselves to make it useful.

I have the honor to transmit herewith the deeds for the land on which the boat-houses stand and six receipts for the articles furnished for each station. There are two others, which were left to be signed, as the heads of the families were absent from the stations. There has been expended, as per bills transmitted to the Department, $9,848.61, which has provided the eight stations with all that was supposed would be necessary and useful.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. OTTINGER,
Captain United States Revenue Marine.

Hon. W. M. MEREDITH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

ESCAPED FROM SHIPWRECK—THE GOVERNMENT APPARATUS.

LONG BEACH HOUSE, December 7, 1852.

DEAR SIR: I had an opportunity of testing the Government apparatus for saving life from shipwrecked vessels on Saturday last. The ship Georgia, Captain Brodie, with 271 passengers on board, came on shore on Friday evening last, the wind blowing nearly a gale and the weather so foggy that the breakers were not seen by those on board till she was hard aground, with the wind on shore. So thick was it that she was not seen from the shore till 11 o'clock in the day, although she lay within a quarter of a mile of the house, in open sight.

I happened at the time to have a good set of men in my employment—carpenters and others—and immediately, on the discovery of the accident, went with my men and team to the Government boat-house, took the necessary apparatus, and reached the beach with it, all in half an hour. The sea was so high that she could not be boarded, and I used the mortar for sending the line on board, and succeeded at the first shot, attaching the larger line to the bow of the ship. This line was then fastened to the forward part of the "surf-car" and another to the stern. I sent her in that manner through the surf to the ship and back till all the passengers and crew were landed without the least bruise or scratch to any one.

I am exceedingly gratified with the result. The arrangement of boats on the beach is a most humane provision, and will save a vast amount of life every year.

I regret to say that the small lines were cut to pieces, and will need to be replaced by new. My time is fully occupied in providing for the large number of passengers, and I have no leisure to write any more.

I have not been over to the ship since the crew landed, but it is reported that the boat is somewhat injured, and I apply to you to assist me to have everything in order again as soon as possible. I inclose you the names of those engaged in rescuing the people, and remain,

Yours,

THOS. BOND,
Long Beach, Little Egg Harbor.

UNITED STATES STEAMER MICHIGAN, Erie, December 3, 1857.

The undersigned officers of the Navy, now attached to the steamer Michigan, have carefully examined a miniature model of a surf-car, together with its accompanying apparatus, of mortar, &c., invented by Captain Douglass Ottinger, of the United States Revenue Service, and, so far as they are able to draw just conclusions without experimental proof, they take pleasure in expressing the opinion that the invention in question seems capable of successful application to the object designated, namely, the rescue of passengers and crew from a sinking ship at sea, and they believe that its merit entitles it to the favorable consideration of the Government.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 1, 1849.

DEAR SIR: At the last session of Congress I had the honor to introduce and get through a proposition to make an appropriation of $10,000, to be expended on the coast of the district which I represent. I have been informed that you have the superintendence of expending the amount. I have introduced similar propositions in the present session, to be expended in the remnant of my State (New Jersey), and also on a great portion of the Atlantic coast of Long Island. I shall make some remarks on the subject, and wish to know, so that I may make them more interesting, what you have done. Please say, also, if you approve of the plan which I suggest in my proposed remarks, a copy of which I herewith send to you, and if you design in any measure to carry out my suggestions. I should also like to know, if it be agreeable to you to inform me, what principle you design to adopt in relation to selecting individuals to whom these boats are be intrusted.

At the last session of the Twenty-ninth Congress an appropriation of $5,000 was made to be expended at the light-houses for the purpose of providing means for saving life and property, which has not been used as yet. Can not this sum be added to the $10,000, and thus enable you to carry out your views on a more extensive and satisfactory scale?

I am, sir, with much respect, truly yours,

WILLIAM A. NEWELL.

Captain OTTINGER,
United States Marine Revenue.

Extract of letter in reply to one from Hon. W. A. Newell, M. C., House of Representatives, January 12, 1849.

NEW YORK, January 16, 1849.

DEAR SIR: I take much pleasure in giving you information on the subject of your letter; and although it may appear that we have not progressed rapidly, yet we have been constant in our efforts to bring the matter to good account, and have called to our assistance several of the most intelligent surfmen along the coast, who have selected a boat as a model by which those provided for in the appropriation are to be constructed.

We have selected eight stations on the beach, within the limits embraced in the law "for the preservation of life and property from shipwreck on the coast of New Jersey," and design to have at each of them a frame house of the most substantial kind, to be furnished with a galvanized iron "surf-boat," with ten separate air chambers, 180 fathoms of hawser, 360 fathoms of hauling line, 600 yards of rocket line, rockets, &c.

Stoves and fuel will also be placed in the buildings, which will be sufficiently large to shelter persons and goods. In addition to the surf-boats, I propose to have a "life-car" at each station, which is designed to be sent to the stranded vessel when the wind and sea are too heavy for the best constructed boats to live. I have not yet had the car approved of by the committee of the board of underwriters, by whom I am advised in these matters, but I have no doubt it will meet their approbation.

I am much indebted to Maj. Henry Wardell, one of your constituents, for valuable information on the subject of my present duties; and during my recent visit to that vicinity I had the satisfaction of hearing remarks from several intelligent persons, which evidenced that the people throughout the neighborhood were gratified that the Government is about to place under their control more efficient means to enable them to extend their usefulness in saving life and property from shipwreck.

I have made some experiments in throwing a line from the shore to a vessel with a rocket, which was witnessed by Messrs. Suydam and Jones, of the committee, and several other gentlemen, who accompanied us in the United States revenue cutter outside of Sandy Hook, at which I fired several rockets with lines attached, and threw out 250 yards of line, weighing 1.62 ounces per yard, with which we tested the practicability of sending a hawser from the beach to a boat or vessel.

The rockets used on that occasion were imported by R. B. Forbes, esq., of Boston, who is the executive officer of the Massachusetts Humane Society, and is constructing surf-boats from the appropriation of $5,000 given by Congress to that society.

Captain Forbes informs me that Colonel Talcott, of the ordnance at Washington, has offered to furnish rockets from the arsenal at that place; for humane purposes and from experiments recently made by the officers in the pyrotechnic department, it is believed that he can produce rockets fully equal to those imported.

It is my intention, as soon as the weather will permit, to make some trials in throwing a line by means of a mortar and shot, and am of the opinion that we will also place them at the several stations. I can scarcely answer your inquiry respecting the persons to whom the boats are to be intrusted; but from what I can learn on that point, my opinion is that the surfman who first arrives at the boat-house should have the privilege of taking charge of her for that occasion, provided he has the ability to take the "steering-oar;" and if he has not, none of the others will place themselves under his command.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DOUGLASS OTTINGER,
Captain United States Revenue Marine.

Hon. W. A. NEWELL,
Member of Congress.

I.

SQUAM BEACH, MONMOUTH COUNTY, N. J., March 13, 1850.

SIR: I was present and superintended and sent the line by the mortar on board the ship Ayrshire, on the 12th of January, 1850, and by means of the metallic life-car we landed in safety her passengers, in all two hundred and one, which, in my opinion, at that time, could not have been otherwise saved, as the sea was so bad that no open boat could have lived. We attached the line to the shot and fired it from the mortar. It fell directly across the wreck and was caught by the crew on board and the hawser hauled off, to which we attached the metallic life-car, and pulled her to and from the wreck through a terrific foaming surf.

Every soul—men, women, children, and infants—came through the surf during that cold snow-storm dry and comfortable.

During the whole time of landing these persons one of the india-rubber floats put around the cars outside by order of the Government officer who superintended was full of water and the other full of air, showing the ability of the metallic boat to do her work, even under such disadvantages as having air on one side and the weight of water in the india-rubber float on the other, in a heavy surf.

The ship came on shore abreast of the station-house—the station-houses are 10 miles apart. Now, if she had struck between two houses, or even four miles from shelter, many of those we saved from drowning would have perished with cold, as it was a cold snow-storm at the time; but, as it was, all were landed dry and comfortable, and no one suffered, as we immediately put them in the houses, where they had the benefit of the fuel provided by the Government; and this, in my opinion, shows the necessity of having the stations nearer together.

I have had much experience in wrecking, and was present at the wreck of the ship John Minturn, and now state decidedly (and many others who were present at both wrecks, join me), that if we could have had the mortar and metallic life-car we would have saved a great proportion, if not all, of the souls from the John Minturn, which was wrecked on this beach.

The car is also very valuable for landing specie, jewels, silks, and packages of all kinds that could not be saved by an open boat.

We can also now communicate with the ship by means of the mortar and car as soon as she strikes, without waiting, as heretofore, for the storm to cease, by which time she may go to pieces and all be lost.

With the above arrangements, well attended to, there need be but few lives lost and much less property.

Yours, very respectfully,

JOHN MAXEN, Wreckmaster.

WALTER R. JONES, Esq.,
President of the Board of Underwriters of New York.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Trenton, October 16, 1857.

DEAR SIR: I was very happy to hear from you by your recent favor. It was quite unnecessary for you to inform me who you were. I assure you I shall never cease to know or to remember you as one who has contributed very much towards lessening the dangers of the sea, and one to whom our Jersey people are almost entirely indebted for the valuable apparatus which has been the means of saving so many hundred lives and so much property. I am well satisfied that, had you not been intrusted with the erection and furnishing of the life-saving stations on our coast, my own individual effort to that end would never have amounted to much.

Now, if you could be more specific in your wishes and inform me exactly what you want me to do in the way of recommendation to the Secretary of the Treasury—what office it is you wish to fill—you may command me to any extent.

I am, very respectfully and truly, yours,

WM. A. NEWELL.

Capt. D. OTTINGER.

P. S.—Don't be backward about expressing your wishes.

L.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1858.

DEAR SIR: We have examined, at your request, your "life-car," and from the good service that it has already rendered in rescuing the lives of nearly five hundred persons from stranded ships on our coast under circumstances of peculiar peril, and when no other human aid could reach them, we do not see why it should not succeed with disabled ships at sea, using the precautions and following the directions so clearly given by you. We also think that "whalers" in the Pacific, as well as other vessels, that are frequently compelled to communicate with the shore through the surf, often find impracticable with the ordinary means at their disposal, would find your life-car of the greatest possible assistance and convenience.

Wishing you all the success that so laudable an undertaking deserves, we are Very truly, your obedient servants,

WM. W. HUNTER,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to occupy the floor?

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to suggest to the Senator from New York that in his great magnanimity and generosity, and desire to do equal and exact justice to all these parties, I think he ought to accept an amendment to this resolution so that it shall read in this way:

That in view of the life-long services to humanity and to his country of the now venerable Joseph Francis and Captain Douglass Ottinger in the construction and perfection of life-saving appliances by which many thousands of lives have been saved, the thanks of Congress be, and are hereby, tendered to Joseph Francis and Captain Douglass Ottinger; and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be prepared gold medals with a suitable inscription, to be presented to Mr. Francis and Captain Ottinger in recognition of their eminent services.

I am certain the Senator from New York will accept those suggestions.

Mr. EVARTS. I am willing they should be treated as suggestions but not as amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri press his amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest it to the Senator from New York. I think he will accept it.

Mr. EVARTS. I said in the hearing of the Senator from Missouri that I accepted his suggestions but not as amendments to the resolution.

Mr. President, this matter has been open to the Senate. Mr. Francis's relations to the business of life-saving are known perfectly well in all the Eastern States, and I suppose well known in the rest of the country. Before Mr. Ottinger claims to have had anything to do with inventions Mr. Francis might well say, "What region of the world is not full of my benevolent labors?" The fact that he has lived so long and lived so good a life in so steady and pure and constant a devotion to benevolent action is the only reason why so many now about me are not familiar with his life, with which everybody was familiar forty years ago.

Mr. Ottinger was an officer in our revenue marine service and was sent by the Treasury Department to apply recognized methods of saving life along the coast. To these appliances he claims that he made a certain improvement, but Mr. Francis's inventions and his benefits to humanity were already diffused before Mr. Ottinger intervened in the least. As to the matter of fact, the evidence is clear before the Patent Office that Mr. Ottinger had no invention at all.

Besides, Mr. Ottinger, which Mr. Francis has never done, applied to the Government and received a gift of $10,000. I will say nothing further about that transaction. I do not believe it to have been well-founded. It goes into the record; let it there stand.

Mr. Francis is not a rival of Mr. Ottinger. These matters of Mr. Francis have been examined in the committee of the other House and in the committee here, and no report has been presented of dissent in either House upon the report on which this resolution is based and upon the undisputed record of what Mr. Francis's life discloses. He is at the very beginning of that immense administration of life-saving which has been so great a credit to this country. Mr. Francis has been recognized in every great country of Europe, not only by the governments but by the great humane associations of the continent and of Great Britain.

At this very last moment I have received from eminent citizens of New York a most urgent request that nothing should allow this session to pass without a recognition of this eminent service of Mr. Francis, which has been urged upon us by the two great bodies of New York.

I have in my hand a memoranda presented to the committees exposing the whole matter of the competing claims of these two gentlemen, and I ask that they may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection is made, the paper will be inserted in the RECORD.

The paper referred to is as follows:

In the matter of the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York and the American Institute of the city of New York in behalf of Joseph Francis.

This matter is before Congress by reason of two memorials, emanating from the most distinguished bodies of their separate kinds in the United States. One is from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, the other from the American Institute of the State of New York. They are as follows:

[Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York.]

FOUNDED [SEAL] A. D. 1768.

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held Thursday, November 5, 1885, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the recent publication of the History of Life-Saving Appliances has recalled the attention of the Chamber of Commerce to the eminent services to humanity rendered by the now venerable Joseph Francis in the invention and construction of the corrugated iron life-car, and numerous other appliances in the form of life-boats, pontoons, &c.; and

Whereas the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York did, on the 2d day of March, 1841, by resolution, approve of and recommend the valuable inventions of Mr. Francis to the mercantile marine; and

Whereas during the whole period of a long and active life Mr. Francis has devoted his talents and his means to the improvement and development of those appliances which have been the means of saving thousands of valuable lives in all parts of the civilized world, receiving in recognition thereof knighthoods, medals, testimonials, and diplomas from all the great nations of the world except his own country: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to take such action in recognition of the great services to the country and to humanity of Joseph Francis as in its wisdom it may deem most fitting and proper.

A true copy.

GEORGE WILSON, Secretary.

To the honorable House of Representatives of the United States:

At the annual meeting of the American Institute of the city of New York, held on Thursday, February 4, 1886, at 8 o'clock, p. m., at its rooms in Clinton Hall, Vice-President James DeLamater in the chair, Mr. R. H. Shannon offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas the now venerable Joseph Francis, an old and respected member of this institute, by a long life of usefulness and distinction in the interests of humanity—in the invention and construction of appliances for the saving and protection of human life against the elements—has evoked the admiration, applause, and commendation of civilized nations; and

Whereas in this work and the use of his talents in regard thereto, Mr. Francis has been animated by unselfish motives worthy only of a philanthropist, in and by which multitudes of his fellow-creatures have been saved from sudden and imminent death, for which as yet he has no adequate compensation; and

Whereas while some of the European nations, in recognition of his usefulness and value of the life-saving appliances of Mr. Francis, have rendered to him only a slight token of their appreciation of his inventions by knighthood, testimonials, and diplomas, his own nation has not done that full and ample justice to which Mr. Francis is entitled as an inventor and citizen; and

Whereas in the view of the eminent and distinguished labors of Mr. Francis in a field which, by the record of its results, has proved so humane in the protection of human life, and for which he has had no compensation commensurate with the benefits bestowed thereby; and now that he has reached an age of fourscore years and upwards, when, if at all, his work should be appreciated and acknowledged by his country, to whose honor and renown he has added a share among the nations of the earth: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the sense of this institute, of which Mr. Francis has been so long an honored and efficient member, that the philanthropic and self-sacrificing services which he has rendered in the interests of humanity by his invaluable inventions, as shown by remarkable results in the use of these inventions for many years past, by which the lives of multitudes of human beings have been saved and preserved from horrible deaths, ought to receive from his countrymen just and suitable recognition and recompense; and to that end

It is further resolved, That in behalf of Mr. Francis the American Institute of the city of New York urge upon, and do hereby memorialize, the Congress of the United States to favorably consider the claims of Mr. Francis for such appropriate action as is due to him from a Republic that never fails to recognize worth and merit in the humblest of its citizens, and to make suitable reward therefor by such other recognition as in its wisdom the honorable Senate and House of Representatives may see fit to bestow.

Unanimously adopted.

UNITED STATES NATIONAL MUSEUM,
UNDER DIRECTION OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, December 4, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: I have read with feelings of sincere interest the copy of the letter addressed to you by Rev. Morgan Dix, and assure you that his expressions of esteem are fully shared by myself. The end to which you have devoted your intelligence and abilities is indeed most praiseworthy, and if the measure of success attained constitute the basis of appreciation surely the highest award is yours by merit.

The life-car, which is exhibited in your name in the National Museum, will ever be a monument to your zeal, and the most casual visitor seldom passes it without special notice.

Trusting that you may yet live many years to enjoy the fruits of your energies, I am, sincerely, yours,

SPENCER F. BAIRD,
Secretary Smithsonian Institution and Director United States National Museum.

JOSEPH FRANCIS, Esq.,
Stevens House, 27 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

They sufficiently set forth the purpose here sought, but it may be desirable that the committee should have before it some testimony as to the character of the individual to whom they relate; therefore the following letter of Rev. Morgan Dix, of Trinity Church, New York, is submitted:

61 CHURCH STREET, NEW YORK, November 19, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: Your name has long been a household word in my family. My acquaintance with you began when, as a boy, I used to see you at my father's house and listen to his conversations with you about your wonderful inventions, in which, as you well know, he took a lively interest, and of which he appreciated the value. Honored, indeed, were you among us, and always welcome; and of all those friends from whom you have been separated by the hand of inexorable death I think you might count my father and mother as among the warmest and the most true. The affection borne for you by the parents is continued in the respect and veneration in which you are held by the son.

I say this that you may understand with what pleasure I received, and with what attention I am reading, the book you recently presented to me, entitled History of Life-Saving Appliances and Military and Naval Constructions, appliances and constructions invented by yourself. With much of this history, and with many of the objects described, I have been familiar for years. The volume constitutes a monument such as has been reared to very few men, perhaps indeed unique, for it is a record of a life which, though now protracted beyond the eighty-fourth milestone of the journey, has been devoted, from the age of eleven years, to the study, creation, and manufacture of appliances intended to save human life.

Your ruling thought has been how to benefit and bless your fellow-creatures; your constant occupation has been that of devising means to rescue human beings from horrible deaths. To that object have you devoted a clear intellect, an ingenious mind, great natural ability of the inventive order, and untiring industry. It is not strange that you have reaped a reward fitted to your merit. Your benevolent efforts have not proved unavailing; they were stimulated by decided success from the moment of their inception, and in the course of years they have been crowned by remarkable results, as the multitudes might attest who from time to time have owed to you indirectly the preservation of their lives under circumstances among the most appalling which man can face.

Your work has been duly and suitably recognized in many lands, where special honors have been done to you, and testimonials, insignia, and valuable gifts have been presented to you by governments, societies, and potentates.

It is a strange thing that to this day that work remains unrecognized by any official act of the American Government; your own country is behind the rest of the civilized world in omitting to crown your venerable head with laurels which befit the lover and helper of his fellow-men. You merit a public recognition, which you have not yet received.

On great commanders who have slain their tens and hundreds of thousands, on inventors who have perfected instruments to deal death and destruction, honors have been lavished with great approval; medals, swords, pensions, and similar significant tokens are in their possession or are preserved for memorials of them; but to you, now far beyond the term of life and soon to bid us a long farewell, no honor has yet been publicly done by the representatives of your countrymen. I see here a duty unfulfilled. I wish it might be fulfilled by the Legislatures of those two States whose stormy and dangerous coasts could tell, if they could speak, the thrilling story of hundreds rescued from wreck and death; Congress could also set its seal to the description of your invaluable services.

There is yet time to say to you what we shall be saying after you have left us and shall wish we had said to you should it still remain unsaid—that your countrymen esteem and venerate in you, the modest citizen, the unobtrusive gentleman, the great inventor, the philanthropist, whose name must live in our archives for many years to come; that they appreciate your work and rise up to do you honor.

Accept, my dear sir, the assurance of the very high consideration in which I hold you, and believe that I have great pleasure in subscribing myself,

Faithfully and sincerely, your friend,

MORGAN DIX.

JOSEPH FRANCIS, Esq.

The facts in the case which are here presented to the committee are in accordance with the following narrative: The testimony submitted is all certified as of record.

Mr. Francis first saw the light at the dawn of the present century. He was born in Massachusetts in the year 1801.

As a boy his attention was arrested by the fearful loss of life by shipwreck, and he then found his life work.

Genius nurstles her offspring in strange but safe places, and this earnest, intense, well-poised, steadfast boy, at the age of eleven years, found congenial employment in the boat-building establishment of a near relative in Boston, largely engaged in building boats for the Government during the war of 1812.

From that day on, for the best part of his long life, he has devoted himself to the study, creation, and manufacture of life-saving appliances.

The problem which he set himself was to produce a veritable life-boat. In this were involved the questions of increased buoyant power, strength, resistance, and elasticity, and these were to be secured at the minimum of weight. His first experiment, at only eleven years of age, was a success. He, by the use of cork, produced a veritable life-boat—that is to say, a boat that would not sink when full of water, but would still have buoyant power sufficient to sustain great weight. This little one of his first construction held up four men when full of water. It was the first life-boat ever built or seen in the United States, and is the germ from which has sprung all that has since been done in that direction.

As time advanced he continued his studies and experiments. In 1819 he exhibited a boat at the first fair of the Mechanics' Institute of Boston, and was awarded "honorable recognition" by that distinguished institution. It was the first public tribute paid to his labors.

New York city is our great mart. Towards her gate are turned prows from every sea. The coasts of Long Island and New Jersey, which lie on either side of the entrance to her harbor, though not rock bound, are low, sandy, and dangerous. Throughout our history these coasts have been famous by reason of the numbers of ships wrecked there and of the appalling loss of life and treasure.

The Life-Saving Service of that early day, and down to the year 1848, was of the rudest and crudest character. A few fishermen's huts scattered along the coast and the unpaid heroes of the surf, who, in their frail fishing-boats, voluntarily offered their lives to save those of strangers, was all that this great Government could show towards saving the lives and treasure of those who "go down to the sea in ships." That the Life-Saving Service is now what it is, a splendid and efficient arm of the Government, is due in large part to the impetus first given it by the now venerable Joseph Francis.

Mr. Francis, never for one moment losing sight of his purpose and problem, poor, alone, and unaided, continued his work. At last a boat was produced which stood the severest tests which wooden boats had ever been subjected to. This one was taken to the foot of Wall street, New York, and thrown endwise into the dock, bottom upward. She instantly righted and freed herself of water, which passed through her perforated bottom. She was then hauled endwise to the yard arm of a ship and cut loose. She struck with great violence, but came right side up to the surface uninjured. She was then loaded with men, who could neither upset nor sink her.

These experiments, so novel at that time, were witnessed with interest by the merchants and ship-owners of New York. The experiments were subsequently repeated in Philadelphia before vast crowds, and with increased severity of tests, and always with success to the boat. A Philadelphia paper of June, 1837, says, in concluding an article on the Francis life-boat and the experiments above referred to: "This life-boat may be termed one of the most valuable inventions of modern times."

The fame of Mr. Francis now began to be spread abroad, and orders for his boats began to be received from the most distinguished sources. He received orders from the English Government for boats to be stationed on the coast of Canada. He built for a British regiment a race boat. She was the first American-built boat to come off victorious in a contest with English boats. He constructed, on order, an imperial barge for the Emperor of Brazil, also one for the Czar of Russia, and the Secretary of the Navy ordered his life-boats to be put on all the ships of the Navy.

Day by day, and year by year, alone, unaided, and at his own expense, he continued his studies and experiments. As he improved his life-boats there grew up a demand by the sea-going public that all vessels should be furnished with them, and there were now few sea-going vessels but were fitted with his life-boats and life-saving appliances. (Ex. No. 4.)

Still he was not satisfied with what he had accomplished. He now fully realized that the problem which he had set himself to work out, namely, the production of a perfect life-boat, was a most difficult one. He had, however, obtained a firm grasp upon the truth that a perfect life-boat must be in its construction a compromise between conflicting requisites.

During the years which followed and in the sleepless pursuit of his purpose he invented and built many kinds of boats—portable, screw-boats, molded boats, hydrogiene life-boats, anchor launches, and double or reversed-bottom boats, cargo boats, &c.

So widely spread was the fame of the Francis life-boats now, and so great the fame of the inventor, whose inventions had saved so many lives which must otherwise have perished, that great and distinguished societies both at home and abroad eagerly sought to do honor to him.

Apart from the many certificates which had been given him by the masters of vessels and officers of the Navy as to the value of his inventions and the number of lives saved by them which could have been saved in no other way, the American Institute, on the 14th of September, 1839, and, after many tests and experiments with the Francis life-boats, recommended them to be placed on all sea-going vessels, and especially upon naval vessels, for, as they say, "If one or two sections on both sides of the boat are perforated by a shot, sufficient buoyancy will be left to sustain all that may be required for boarding purposes or any exigency." This report was submitted, along with the report of October, 1840, to a number of the most eminent naval officers then living, who earnestly approved the action of the American Institute (F's History, pages 13 to 23, inclusive). On March 2, 1841, the Chamber of Commerce of New York took action similarly approving the Francis life-boat and recommending it to the public.

But the fame of Mr. Francis was not confined to his own country. At Paris, France, February 1, 1842, the General International Shipwreck Society elected Mr. Francis to its distinguished membership; which action was communicated to Mr. Francis in very flattering terms by its founder and general director, Godde De Lioncourt. On June 1 following the same great institution admitted him not only to its membership, but recorded his name among those of its benefactors. This was also communicated to Mr. Francis in most gratifying terms by the same gentleman, its director-general. This society was under the direct patronage of the King of France, and numbered amongst its membership all the crowned heads and dignitaries of Europe.

The European Shipwreck Society was established in London in 1835, under the patronage of His Royal Highness Prince Albert and Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Sussex, having among its honorary presidents the greatest names in England. This society, in a letter to Mr. Francis, says: "The Superior Council of the Royal and Imperial European Section for Nautical Relief in England is very happy to inform you that it has never seen anything superior nor even equal to the construction of your life-boat, and, to add to this testimony of its approbation, it has been unanimously decided to present you with a medal of honor."

At London, July 4, 1843, the same society communicated its action again to Mr. Francis, with the gratifying intelligence that he had again been awarded a medal of honor.

Mr. Francis was now appointed as the general agent of that society for the United States, to have his residence in New York, and with a request that he would form a section of that society in the United States. This he proceeded to do, having enlisted the interests of the most eminent men of that day in the organization. A reference to the volume on life-saving appliances of Mr. Francis (pages 25, 6, 7, 8, and 9) will show that no name at that day distinguished in law, literature, theology, the arts, sciences, or commerce is absent from the organization of which Mr. Francis was the founder in this country.

As far back as 1838 Mr. Francis had conceived the idea of creating a covered or inclosed vessel, by which to land people from a wreck through a heavy surf in a storm, or from one vessel to another at sea, when no boat could live in the water, and then made the drawings and plans for the construction of his life-car.

Great as had been his success with the many life-boats which he had invented and manufactured, and vast as has been the saving of life and property by these means, when no other would have sufficed, and which had been secured to him by letters patent in 1838, Mr. Francis became satisfied that wood as a material would not do. Even the strongest was too heavy, brittle, and frail for the purpose; and so he set himself to look for some other material.

In 1841 Mr. Francis commenced the construction of a life surf-car with best wooden materials, but found that it was not and could not be made strong enough to resist concussion with wrecks and rocks, and she was broken up as being unsatisfactory.

He, in his many experiments, had tested wood to its utmost capacity, and found that it would not do. Iron was then practically unknown as a material for the construction of vessels, but he determined to make an exhaustive trial of it.

He gave up his business in wooden boats to other hands in order that he might devote his whole time and attention to this single purpose, which may well be called a struggle with iron.

The character of the inventive mind is peculiar. It is absorbed, intense, untiring, sleepless. It pursues its objects eternally. It never rests. It knows no obstacles. It sacrifices everything—comfort, food, health, even life itself, to the pursuit of its single purpose. It is as though one were possessed with either an angel or devil.

Thus possessed, poor, unaided, and alone, Joseph Francis secured a vacant building, No. 83 Anthony street, in the city of New York. The building was the property of a generous gentleman, Myndert Van Schoick, ex-mayor of New York, who, knowing well Mr. Francis and the character of his pursuits, as well as his extreme and bitter poverty, gave him the building free of rent. Here, in 1841, separating himself from his family, which, for purposes of economy, he had located in the country, he shut himself up alone to struggle with his problem. And here, shut out from all the world, he remained an entire year.

Happy as he was, in that happiness which comes from intense preoccupation, still he suffered greatly, for the demands of nature will force themselves after a while upon the most intense mental preoccupation.

One night, after working all day from early dawn without food, Mr. Francis found himself reduced to his last quarter of a dollar. He wanted a piece of iron to continue his experiments, and he was suffering for something to eat. The stern question which met him face to face was iron or bread, which? He went out into the streets and at a neighboring tin shop was so fortunate as to find a scrap of iron which the tinner sold him for 13 cents.

Happy as a king, with this need met, he, with the remainder of his money, bought a loaf of bread and a pint of molasses. Eating a part for his supper, he put by the rest for his breakfast, and continued his experiment deep into the night. In the morning he found that the rats had eaten his bread, and so he went breakfastless; but the night had brought him success with his experiment, and that little sheet of iron has become historic.

The experiments which he had been trying for a year and the problem which he had been seeking to solve was how to stiffen a thin sheet of iron or other metal so as to enable him to construct a perfectly strong boat without braces and frames, and by this means to secure the greatest lightness of structure consistent with greatest strength.

Without entering into the details which are fully set forth on pages 32-36, inclusive, in Mr. Francis's History of Life-Saving Appliances, it is enough to say that his purpose was, by the means of dies, to press a sheet of iron or other metal into corrugations on curved and irregular lines. The difficulty had been that the metal buckled or wrinkled so that it was unfit for use, and the precise object which he had in view was to absorb these bucklings and wrinklings of the metal into the corrugations, thus adding to the strength of the corrugations and of course to the strength of the structure.

Mr. Jacob Abbott, writing on the metal boats of Mr. Francis, in Harper's Magazine for July, 1851, remarks "that it is a curious circumstance in the history of modern inventions that it often requires more ingenuity and effort to contrive a way to make the article when invented than it did to invent the article itself." This was the problem with which Mr. Francis had struggled, and which he had now overcome. He had invented and subsequently built the only set of dies ever made in the United States, the only means by which corrugated metal boats could ever be or have ever been made in the United States. Those dies are still in existence.

It may be added, for the information of those who feel an interest in it, that this pressing of metal of the whole side of a boat into deep corrugations, rigid and firm, on curved and irregular lines, without buckling or wrinkling of the metal, has as its first prerequisite simultaneousness. It is absolutely necessary that it all should be done at and by one operation, and this could only be secured through properly constructed dies. This was the first time in which metal had been so used. It was a great achievement, and may, without exaggeration, be said to be the very first use of metal ever made for use upon water. It was by this means, and by this means alone, that a life-car could be constructed; for it combined extreme lightness with extreme strength, elasticity, and buoyant power.

The machinery for making the corrugations in the sides of metallic boats consists of a set of dies worked by hydraulic presses. Upon the convex die the ribs or corrugations are raised from the surface, and on the concave die are similar depressions and corresponding exactly with the ribs on the convex die. The width or curvature of the ribs and their number and distance apart are regulated according to the surplus metal, resulting from a change of a plane or flat surface to the convex surface which the metal is caused to assume in forming the irregular curves in the operation, and at the same time to afford strength and stiffness wherever it is required; or, in other words, the corrugations are so arranged as to take up the surplus metal into corrugations, that would otherwise gather in and wrinkle, which is not wanted in the contour of the vessel, and form it into curved projecting surfaces, to serve in the place of timbers or braces for the boat.

By this method the whole side of a boat is formed of light and thin metal corrugated. These corrugations give all the requisite strength and hold the sheet rigidly in the shape given by the dies. (See plate in Hist., page 34.)

The cast-iron dies are made as large as a full-sized boat, or in sections of boats, as is judged most convenient, and when a sheet of metal is placed between them it is forced into shape as the dies come together, and the corrugations are formed while it is held rigidly and firmly in that position; and so effectually is this accomplished that the shell or outward surface of the boat, when put together, will retain its shape and withstand hard service without thwarts or braces of any kind.

No frames or timbers are required, as the strength is attained by the corrugations, and these corrugations add nothing to the weight of the structure, for the strength is given to the boat by the peculiar form imparted to the sheet of metal.

This great invention was secured to Mr. Francis by letters patent of March 25, 1845.

From this time forward Mr. Francis gave himself heart and soul to the construction of a perfect life-car. During his experiments he constructed a number of cars which were put on ocean-going vessels to be used either in transporting persons from one vessel to another at sea during heavy gales or to be sent from a stranded ship to the shore.

At last, in the year 1847, Mr. Francis produced what he considered a perfect life-car. This perfect car Mr. Francis had offered to the Secretary of the Treasury to be purchased by the Government as a means of saving people from stranded vessels. The Secretary replied to Mr. Francis that "the Government had no money to try experiments with; that the saving of people from stranded or wrecked vessels was an impossibility; that if Mr. Francis desired to have his machine purchased he must make the test at his own expense. Then, if his appliances were proven effective, the Government would be glad to become a purchaser."

The car remained in Mr. Francis's manufactory, at the Novelty Iron Works, in New York, until the winter of 1848-'49, when she was transported to Squan Beach, on the New Jersey coast, where she remained, without a chance to test her, until January, 1850. On the 12th day of that month, during a terrific snowstorm, the British ship Ayrshire, with 201 souls on board, was stranded on Squan Beach. So terrific was the storm, so blinding the snow, so intense the cold, so appalling the sea, that the brave surfmen, inured to all dangers, held back and refused to attempt the ordinary methods of reaching the ship. At this moment the little life-car was thought of. A line was thrown by mortar over the ship, a hawser made fast, and the car sent on board.

By its means every soul on board was saved, save one; that one, rashly attempting to pass ashore on top of and outside of the car, was washed into and swallowed up by the sea. This achievement rendered the car famous for all time, and the name of her inventor rang around the world. That car was then and has ever since remained the private property of Joseph Francis. It has never been out of his possession except by his special permission and for a specific purpose.

It was returned to his factory from the scene of the wreck. It has been transported 10,000 miles (see Hist., pages 107 and 108) to be gazed upon by the interested and curious, and it is now in the National Museum in this city, the free gift of Joseph Francis to that Institution, where it is to remain though all time. Of the thousands who daily visit that Institution nothing there attracts them more than this relic car with its interesting history. Her performance has not been paralleled in all the sad history of perils by the sea.

Up to the year 1848-'49 Mr. Francis occupied in this country this great field in the work of humanity entirely alone.

One may look over the field from beginning to end, and from 1812, when as a boy he began his work, down to the construction of the life-car, in 1847-'48, his solitary figure alone catches the eye. It is his name alone that we hear, and to him alone is due all credit; for it was to the impetus first given to it by him that we now have one of the most efficient life-saving services in the world. And it is to his unceasing steadfast devotion to his life work, when poor, unaided, at his own expense, almost starving, that is due the saving of thousands of lives and millions of treasures. What gratitude, what rewards, what honors are too great for a life like this?

(Tabulated statement of the number of lives saved by Mr. Francis's inventions from 1850 to 1853.) (Ex. A.)

On the 18th day of October, 1848, the Secretary of the Treasury issued an order to Capt. Douglass Ottinger, of the Revenue Marine Service, directing him, in pursuance of an act of Congress "appropriating $10,000 for the establishment of life-saving stations on the Long Island and New Jersey coast, and for the purchase of such boats, rockets, and other life-saving appliances as may be necessary for the better protection of life and property from shipwreck," to proceed to New York and report himself to the board of underwriters there as the law required, Walter R. Jones being president, and, "after informing yourself of their views touching the best means of carrying into effect the objects of Congress, that you will superintend such arrangements as they may direct for that purpose." (Order in certified papers from the Interior Department. Ex. No. 5.)

Ottinger proceeded to obey this order, and this was his first connection with or knowledge of anything concerning the life-saving service, or of wrecks, or of the means and methods of saving life and property from wrecked and stranded vessels. Indeed it was not until he visited the coast of New Jersey, in obedience to this order of October 18, 1848, as he swears, that he "first heard the details of suffering and loss of life incident to the stranding of vessels in that vicinity, and of instances where wrecked vessels were so near the shore that the cries of distress of persons on board could be distinctly heard on the beach by persons who were compelled to witness hundreds of human beings washed into the sea without the means of saving a single life." (Ottinger's affidavit made at Erie, Pa., July 14, 1860, among papers on file in the Patent Office. Ex. No. 6.)

Under the directions of this order to purchase life-boats and other life-saving appliances, &c., he one day proceeded to the Novelty Iron Works, in New York city, where Mr. Francis then had his manufactory for corrugated metal life-boats, surf-boats, and life-cars, under the letters patent granted him March 25, 1845, and in which business Stillman, Allen & Co. were half partners; and there it was for the first time that he (Ottinger) saw a life-car—the veritable life car which afterwards did such admirable work at the wreck of the Ayrshire, and which is now in the National Museum in this city.

In the spring of 1849, May 21, Captain Ottinger made his final report to the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the duty which he had performed there (Ex. No. 7). Shortly thereafter he obtained leave of absence and entered the service of the Pacific Mail Company, proceeding to the Pacific coast, where he remained until 1853, so that he claims that the idea of the life-car was conceived, the experiments made, the car perfected and built, and the whole scheme executed within the brief period of six or eight months.

In strong contrast to this is the life-long labor of Joseph Francis, whose attention as a boy was fastened by the facts which Ottinger says he had never learned until 1848, and the labors of whose life had all been persistently directed to this one single object.

Here it is to be strongly noted that the body or hull of the life-car was made of corrugated iron, which was Francis's invention, secured to him by patent in 1845, and which could only have been done on the dies invented and built by Francis, as they were and are the only set of dies ever constructed in the United States.

It is also to be strongly noted here that at the time that Ottinger now claims that he invented and built the car (the winter and spring of 1848-'49) there is in his official reports no particle of claim to the invention, although there is direct reference to "a car which he intends to have put at the station," along with life-boats (which were the corrugated iron life-boats of Mr. Francis's patent) and other apparatus which he had been ordered to get, "provided it is approved by the board of underwriters, of which I have little doubt." See Ottinger's letter to Hon. William A. Newell, M. C., of New Jersey, dated New York, January 16, 1849, in certified papers from Department of the Interior (Ex. No. 8).

See also report of Ottinger to Secretary of the Treasury Meredith, dated New York, May 21, 1849, in certified papers from Department of the Interior, in which he says "the galvanized iron surf-boats were adopted as the best (they were Francis's patent corrugated iron surf-boats, though he (Ottinger) carefully conceals the fact in his report). "They have a floating power," he says, "which will sustain fifteen persons when full of water." "The life-cars are also made of metal, with air chambers made of the same material." (They were made of Francis's patent corrugated metal, which he again conceals), "and fitted with rubber floats, invented by General Stanton, of the United States Army."

It is to be observed that there is here not only no claim to the cars as his invention; there is not even a single word to suggest any such claim. He mentions the life-cars just as he does the surf-boats of Mr. Francis, without reference to Mr. Francis, and without making the least suggestion that he had invented either or claimed either. (See report in certified papers from Department of the Interior.) (Ex. No. B.)

It was not until as late as the year 1853 that he ever even makes a suggestion or claim that he is the inventor of the life-car, when, in a letter to the Treasury Department (Mr. Guthrie, Secretary) of August 6, 1853, he makes application for the temporary use of one of the life-cars at a life-saving station to exhibit at the World's Fair in New York, and says "part of the life-saving apparatus is my invention, and, as it has been the means of saving nearly five hundred human lives, I am anxious that the public should have an opportunity of seeing it and of availing themselves of its principle. I did not patent the invention and am desirous that it should be used throughout the world without tax." (See letter in certified papers from Department of the Interior.) (Ex. No. 9.)

This is his first avowal of himself as the inventor of the life-car, and, as will be observed, it is not until three years after the great achievement of the car at the wreck of the Ayrshire, by which she and her inventor had become so famous as to be known throughout the civilized world.

There had arisen in his mind a reason for claiming the results of Francis's life labor, and that reason will be shown as developed by his subsequent action.

After the work done by the car at the wreck of the Ayrshire Mr. Francis, although he considered himself fairly protected by his two patents of 1838 and 1845, still, out of abundant caution, and by the advice of his attorney, L. W. Serrell (see affidavit of Serrell, Francis's book, page 117), early in 1850, February 9, filed a caveat to, if possible, more completely protect himself from infringement as to the peculiar hatch and trip-cylinder. The application which was subsequently made, founded on the caveat of 1850, was, however, rejected, on the ground that it contained nothing new or patentable. This rejection was made July 19, 1851, and reference was specially made to a patent to J. D. Greene, granted in 1849, for a ducking boat, &c. (Ex. No. 10.) Mr. Francis had invented this deck hatch and trip-cylinder as early as 1843, but had neglected to patent it, and so Greene got ahead of him.

It is well here to record the fact that all the boats and cars which went out of the Novelty Iron Works bore upon them a plate marked "Francis's patent."

In 1855 Mr. Francis, being broken in health, went, by the advice of his physicians, to Europe. The fame of his life-saving appliances, as well as his military constructions, such as corrugated iron pontoons, pontoon wagons, &c., had preceded him, and he found immediate and urgent calls upon him by England, France, Germany, Austria, and Russia, and a great demand for all his constructions and inventions of both and all kinds. He remained in Europe, with the single exception of a brief visit of less than a week to New York on business, from 1855 to 1863.

Now, in the year 1857, nine years after the time in which he claimed that he had invented and had had built the life-car, seven years after her famous work at the wreck of the Ayrshire, nineteen years after it had been invented by Mr. Francis in 1838, twelve years after Mr. Francis had invented and patented in 1845 the corrugation of iron or copper or other metal, for "all vessels," and of which the body or hull of the Ayrshire car was made, and could have been made in no other way, Captain Ottinger applied for a patent—a patent, not for the whole car, but only for the top or deck of the car.

This application for a patent was rejected on September 25, 1857, as follows, by letter from Patent Office to Captain Ottinger: "Improvement in life-cars or life-boats. Decided not to be patentable. As furnishing reasons for this decision you are referred to an application filed by Joseph Francis, and rejected July 19, 1851. Your letter of 21st instant has a request that you may be heard on the points of new and patentable, which could not be regarded before a decision had been made by this office, but which can now have place. You can now, at your convenience, either personally, by agent, or in writing, show why you are entitled to a patent in view of the reference here given." (Signed "E.") (See certified copy from Patent Office marked Exhibit ——.)

As furnishing reasons for this decision he was referred to the application of Joseph Francis which had been rejected July 19, 1851. This rejection of Francis was based on a patent issued to James D. Greene of September, 1849, anticipating him. (See copy from Patent Office, marked Exhibit No. 11, for particulars.)

It is to be noted here that Mr. Francis had manufactured cars with a top or deck, and had sold them publicly as early as 1842, 1843, and 1844. He had only neglected to secure a patent, not deeming it of first or vital importance to his invention.

Captain Ottinger then made a second application for a patent for the peculiar angle or arch given to his top or deck, which he claimed offered the minimum of resistance to the winds and waves, according to the bulk of the car. This application was again, and for the second time, rejected on June 16, 1859. The official letter from the Patent Office to Captain Ottinger says: "Your application for improvement in surf-boats has been examined under the amendments filed and is again rejected. The first clause of the claim, the arched deck, has no novelty."

The letter then refers him to the fact that all ships have arched decks, and also especially to Alexander's patent submarine boat, patented September 3, 1850; Tewksbury's patent boat, patented August 7, 1849, and Joseph Francis's patent boat, patented January 11, 1838. It then says: "So far as the deck of the latter extends, it appears to bear the curvature given in your drawings. For second claim of the device you are referred to application of Joseph Francis, rejected in August, 1858 (surf-car). Signed J. F. F. (Certified copy from Patent Office, marked Ex. No. 12.)

Captain Ottinger then made a third application, varying the curvature of his deck a little, and claiming that his cars were for special use between vessels at sea (many vessels had been carrying Francis's cars for that purpose for years), and this third application was again and for the third time rejected November 8, 1859, as follows:

Letter from Patent Office to D. Ottinger and F. S. Smith, his attorney.

"Your application for improvements in surf-cars has received its third examination, and is again rejected for the reasons and the references given on its first rejection.

"COUES."

(See certified copy from Patent Office, marked Exhibit No. 13.)

But not only did the Patent Office reject Ottinger's application three times, but the reasons for it and the references to former patents of Mr. Francis were so clear that he himself was forced to admit it.

On June 24, 1859, he wrote to the Commissioner of Patents as follows:

"I have examined the references given, and that of Francis alone appears to anticipate the subject-matter embraced in my first and second claims. * * * None of the references except Francis's application, rejected in 1858, possess the capabilities or resemble this car in the slightest degree in construction or adaptation to this specific use," &c. * * * (Ex. No. 14.)

To which the Patent-Office replied, under date of June 28, 1859, as follows:

"In the matter of your application for improvements in life-cars, one of the references given on its rejection (that of Francis) is acknowledged to be pertinent; the application is, therefore, rightly rejected.

"The office regards the reference to form of deck as pertinent. That of Francis's patent has the degree of arching shown in your drawings. This, it is true, is not a flush deck, but flush decks and arch decks are old." It then refers him to the decks of ancient Chinese ships, and it might with equal cogency have referred him to Noah's ark. (Ex. No. 15.)

We have now seen Captain Ottinger in several lights—first, as an officer of the revenue-marine service, who, although a sailor man, never knew the horrors of shipwreck until, in obedience to the order of October 18, 1848, he went down on the coast of New Jersey and heard it there first from the brave fishermen who then constituted our only life-saving force; then as an inventor, who, in the brief space of seven months and three days (from October 18, 1848, to May 21, 1849), invented, experimented, and had constructed one of the greatest life-saving machines ever known, in regard to which he, in his official reports and communications, remains profoundly silent; then four years after, and three years after her world-famed work at the wreck of the Ayrshire, declaring himself, in an official letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, as the inventor, "in part" only, of the "life-saving apparatus," and generously—even magnificently—dedicating it to the world "without tax;" then subsequently and four years after, in 1857, recanting this munificence and applying for a patent; then a rejected applicant, applying again and again and again, each time rejected more decidedly than before and referred to other patents which covered all he claimed—notably those of Joseph Francis—until at last he is told that that which he claims as an invention—"as new and patentable"—is as old as the hills—as old as Chinese civilization itself, which had a knowledge of navigation and marine architecture and construction almost coeval with the ark.

We have seen him in all these lights, but we have yet to see him in lights still more remarkable and more painful.

It is no pleasant duty to follow the devious ways of wrong-doing, and especially is this so when the wrong-doer has become venerable with years. But the truth so long concealed must now see the light. It is the truth which hurts. It is not by the wish of any person whatever.

It has been said that we were to see Captain Ottinger in new and painful lights, and here they are.

Foiled in every attempt and at every point to secure a patent, he now, with the zeal which is born of a great necessity, turns his longing eyes in another direction—a direction, however, from which nothing but temporary relief, which is secured by darkness, can come to him. His plan is now to admit that the claims of Francis do anticipate him and conflict with his, and he now asks that an interference with Francis may be declared.

In a letter dated at Washington city, November 26, 1859, and addressed to the Commissioner of Patents, he says: "I have to acknowledge the receipt of the official letter of the 8th instant, rejecting the amended claim in my application for an improved surf-car on the same references as given in the first rejection." * * * He then refers to Alexander's boat, patented September 3, 1850, and says it is not at all like his car, &c.; also to Tewksbury's boat, patented August 7, 1849, and the anchor-boat of Joseph Francis, patented January 16, 1838, "both open boats," he says, "in which passengers could not be transferred in safety," &c.

In conclusion he says "the only reference given and which bears the slightest similarity to my car and can be used for the same purpose is the surf-car of Joseph Francis, rejected August, 1858. I have to request that the office will declare an interference between my application and that of Joseph Francis, rejected August, 1858, for the purpose of proving priority of invention."

It must here be strongly noted that he asks the office to declare an interference between his application and that of Joseph Francis, which was rejected August 9, 1858, and July 19, 1851, and for what? For the purpose of proving "priority of invention"—that is to say, he desired an opportunity to prove "priority of invention" on that which had been declared to be no invention, and this is apparent from the very words of the letter in which he makes the request. Surely the man is bent on a fool's errand, or is more sorely pressed by the necessity of making some kind of a showing than ever man was before.

Strange as it may appear, the office declared an interference and called the parties to trial.

Mr. Francis had now been long in Europe. Before leaving this country he had confided his business and interests to a company of which Marshal Lefferts was the secretary, and had thus cast out of his mind everything concerning its and his affairs here.

At the time this affair of the interference was on foot Mr. Francis was engaged in business with the five great governments of Europe.

But what difference could it make even if he had known of it? Why should he defend a rejected application when all that was new and patentable about his car was safely secured by his patents of 1845 and 1838?

Mr. Lefferts, however, it is to be supposed in ignorance, undertook the defense of the undefensible rejected application.

Through three trials and many wasted days did an interference examiner in the Patent Office and the parties, by their attorneys, go on with this solemn fooling, the inquiry with which they were engaged being only and solely and precisely this: Who was the prior inventor of that which is no invention, as already officially declared four separate and distinct times after the fullest investigation?

The records in those cases are quite voluminous, and it is unnecessary to impose them on the time and patience of this honorable and busy committee. The examination shows that of the five witnesses who swore for Captain Ottinger that they were all outsiders. Outsiders as to any knowledge they might have of what was being done in the Francis boat factory in the Novelty Iron Works, and that most of them seem to rest their testimony as to the fact that Ottinger was the inventor of the life-car on the ground that he (Captain Ottinger) told them that he was, and kept on telling them so, while the witnesses who swore that Francis was the inventor were all insiders as to what was going on in the Novelty Iron Works, and spoke from a personal knowledge.

In the first place, Mr. Francis makes oath "that he is the inventor and manufacturer of the well-known Francis patent corrugated metal life-car now in the National Museum; that the said car was manufactured under his special direction in 1847." * * * He further says "that his life-car being his own private property, was, after the wreck of the Ayrshire, returned to his factory in New York, and that by his order one of his workmen painted a description of the shipwreck with paint on one end of the deck of said life-car, and that soon after said life-car was removed to the city of Washington and was placed in the United States arsenal and inspected by the President and Cabinet." * * * "And that the life-car was subsequently removed to the Rotunda of the Capitol for the inspection of both Houses of Congress."

He then gives a detailed account of the movements of the car from that day to this. (See certified copy in book, page 114.) Second Lieut. Charles V. Morris, U. S. N., being duly sworn, deposes "that he is eighty-two years of age; that he entered the Navy in the year 1818, and is now stationed at Sackett's Harbor; that in the year 1844 he was stationed at the Brooklyn navy-yard; * * * that during the time that he was so stationed * * * he frequently visited the factory of Joseph Francis in the city of New York, and at those frequent visits to the said factory examined the different kinds of life-cars and life-boats in progress of building, and that he noticed carefully their construction, and particularly the life-car, and was well satisfied that it was the invention of Joseph Francis; that subsequently and after the wreck of the ship Ayrshire, January 12, 1850, * * * it was taken to the Washington arsenal and placed in the same, and exhibited to the President and Cabinet and Commodore Morris, and from thence removed, under deponent's direction, to the Rotunda of the Capitol for the inspection of both Houses of Congress.

From thence it was removed to the Washington navy-yard, under deponent's orders, where it remained for many years and during Mr. Francis's visit to Europe; that on the return of Mr. Francis from Europe this same life-car was ordered by the Secretary of the Navy to be sent to the navy-yard in New York, to be delivered to the inventor, Joseph Francis, and in accordance with said order the said same life-car was placed on a Government vessel, under the superintendence of this deponent, to be delivered to the navy-yard in New York." (Francis's book, page 114, certified copy.)

Third. Thomas McClary, deposes: * * * "That about the year 1846 he commenced work in the employ of Joseph Francis at the Novelty Iron Works; * * * that he assisted in the manufacture of the corrugated iron life-car; * * * that the same life-car saved the lives of two hundred persons at the wreck of the ship Ayrshire, and that the said car after the wreck was returned to the factory of Joseph Francis; * * * and deponent further says that the said life-car was of his own knowledge the same life-car the deponent assisted in manufacturing as aforesaid." (Francis's book, certified copy, pages 115-16.)

Fourth. Joseph W. Casey * * * deposes: "I went to work for Joseph Francis in the Novelty Iron Works in the year 1847 and was put to work assisting in the construction of metallic life-boats and metallic life-cars. I worked upon the first perfect life-car from its commencement to its completion, and assisted in experiments with it to test its strength. * * * I remember very well when the car was returned to the factory after having been used at the wreck of the Ayrshire, and it was the identical car I assisted to build, and in which I was dropped from the steamer's yard-arm." (Book, certified copy, page 118.)

Fifth. William H. Navarro deposes: * * * "During the year 1844 I was engaged in the manufacture of life preservers * * * on the corner of Broadway and Anthony streets, New York. The rear of the building in which I worked was occupied by Joseph Francis, who was then engaged in experimenting on the construction of metallic boats, and I was often called upon by Mr. Francis to assist him in pressing by hand with a wooden press and pattern sheets of paste-board and also thin sheets of iron into a corrugated form of sections of boats. Early in 1848 I went to work at the Novelty Iron Works under Mr. Francis and found he had perfected his inventions and was using a hydraulic press and cast-iron dies for the same purpose.

I was employed there and subsequently with the Metallic Life-Boat Company in the construction of metallic life-boats and life-cars. A portion of my work was to paint and letter the boats and cars, always lettering them respectively "Francis's metallic life-boats" and "Francis's metallic life-cars." Mr. Francis was always regarded as the inventor of the boats and cars by everybody employed about the works, and although two revenue officers, Ottinger and McGowan, occasionally came into the works to look at the boats and cars, I never at any time, in the years I was employed, heard of either claiming any share in originating the design of the boats or cars, nor of one claiming it for the other, nor did either of them, in my hearing, ever give any directions as to their construction.

"I remember distinctly when the life-car was used at the work of the 'Ayrshire.' * * * I painted with my own hands upon that car an inscription recounting its performance on that remarkable occasion, and a year or two ago I went to Central Park, where the car was on exhibition, and repainted my original inscription, which had become somewhat obliterated and defaced. I declare that the car I so painted at Central Park is the identical car manufactured by Mr. Francis and used at the wreck of the 'Ayshire.' * * * In 1852 I ment to Havre, France, for Mr. Francis, and built there a metallic lifeboat and a life-car similar to those that had been built and were then being manufactured in this country." (Book, certified copy, pp. 116, 117.)

There are other affidavits and depositions all tending to establish the same fact, but it is deemed that here is enough by the persons most intimately acquainted with the facts, and in the best position to know them to satisfy every mind. But one more is offered. It is the affidavit of the now venerable Horatio Allen, of the firm of Stillman, Allen & Co., of the Novelty Iron Works, who were half partners in the corrugated metallic life-car and life-boat business of Mr. Francis.

SOUTH ORANGE, State of New Jersey, ss:

Before me personally appeared Horatio Allen, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is of the formerly well known firm of Stillman, Allen & Co., called the Novelty Iron Works, in the city of New York; that the said firm were for many years extensively engaged in the manufacture of steam engines and other constructions of iron.

That about the year 1843 deponent's attention was called to the inventions and experiments being made by Joseph Francis in the construction of life-saving appliances, such as ships, life-boats, life-cars, and boats for general use by his newly-invented system of corrugated metal; that after a thorough and careful examination of his principles of construction which were specially adapted to the articles above cited the said deponent made an arrangement for a joint interest in the manufacture of the inventions of the said Joseph Francis on the following basis, namely:

The said Joseph Francis conveyed to the firm of Stillman, Allen & Co., of which deponent was a member, the undivided one-half interest of, in, and to all of his inventions up to that date, including the constructions already named, as well as all inventions or constructions on that principle (corrugated metal) that he might thereafter make, in consideration of which the said Stillman, Allen & Co. were to furnish ample room at their workshops or manufactory; also to furnish all necessary machinery, such as dies, presses, &c., and all the capital necessary to carry on the manufacture of the articles aforesaid.

This deponent further says that the new manufactures above cited were a branch or appendix of the Novelty Iron Works, and that it was specified in the contract that the said Joseph Francis was to have the full and entire control of his own manufactures, as well as the purchasing of materials, to establish prices, receive orders, collect and pay bills, &c., in mutual interest between him and Stillman, Allen & Co.

This deponent further says that those manufactures extended to vast proportions, supplying the Navy, War, Treasury, State, Light-House, Coast-Survey, and mercantile marine, as well as the supply of corrugated metal surf-boats and life-cars for the entire coast of the United States.

This deponent further says that on examination at the closing of the contract aforesaid the said firm of Stillman, Allen & Co. were satisfied that the origin, creation, and invention of all of these several appliances aforesaid were made by the said Joseph Francis, and that they were all necessary for saving human life, especially the life-cars, the experimental manufacture of which was progressing in the manufactory, together with the life surf-boats and other appliances.

Deponent further says that during the time and subsequent to the invention of life surf-boats and life-cars the said Francis invented military constructions of corrugated metal, such as military ponton-wagons, pontons, hospital bedsteads, and other appliances of metal, all of which were added to the manufactory by the said inventor, Francis.

Deponent further says that in 1883 a report was printed as official by "The Life-Saving Benevolent Association of New York," which purports to be a reprint of the official report of 1853, in which, on page 38 of said publication, is the following: "The surf or life car was invented by Capt. Douglass Ottinger, of the Revenue Cutter Service, in 1849;" also "that Joseph Francis executed the mechanical part of the surf-car and life-boats under the direction and supervision of the Government officer."

This deponent avers that every word of the compiler quoted above from said publication is false of his own knowledge; that the articles cited in the above quotation were the invention of Joseph Francis prior to the contract herein referred to, and that their manufacture from the date herein stated was in the joint interest of the said Stillman, Allen & Co. and the said Joseph Francis; that the said inventions were their private property, and not belonging in any degree to the Government.

This deponent further says that the labor and expense of demonstrating the value of the life-car and other life-saving appliances was very great, but the work was prosecuted with energy and perseverance by the said Francis alone from the date of the contract until 1847, when the first perfect life-car was made by him, and by its wonderful success in saving human life in 1850 added materially to its manufacture and consequent profit. The success of the life-car alluded to inspired confidence in its manufacture and induced Congress to make liberal appropriations for the founding of the present great life-saving system, which was not organized until 1870.

Said deponent further says that neither himself nor any member of the firm ever recognized the said Douglass Ottinger or ever gave him, or any other person, authority to interfere with their private interests in their works.

HORATIO ALLEN.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 30th day of December, A. D. 1885.

HORACE STETSON,
Notary Public of New Jersey.

It is to be borne in mind that what Captain Ottinger was seeking a patent for, and it was all that he claimed throughout this controversy, and all that he had ever claimed up to this time, was the top or deck of the car, which he claimed was given such an angle or curvature that it offered the least resistance to the winds and waves, and that his applications had been three times rejected on the ground that arch decks were not new or patentable, and had been especially referred, among others, to the Francis patent of 1838 as having the same angle or curvature as that shown in his drawings.

The result of two of the three trials on interference was that each of the applicants was rejected on the grounds already so often stated, that they contained nothing "new or patentable." As already stated, Mr. Francis had nothing to gain by this controversy, because all that was new or patentable about the car was already secured to him by the patents of 1845 and 1838, as had been decided by the Commissioner of Patents, and the contest over the top or deck of the life-car was entered into through the ignorance of Marshall Lefferts, the secretary of the Metallic Life-boat Company, to which Mr. Francis had confided his business before his departure for Europe, where he now was and had been for a long time before (since 1855), and where he remained until long afterwards (until 1863).

Now at the third trial a remarkable result was reached, for after seven separate and distinct decisions by the Patent Office that the top or deck of the life-car was not new and no invention, an examiner in some dark room in that office, on the 9th day of August, 1860, four years after the controversy first began, made a decision granting to Captain Ottinger "priority of invention," but deciding that no patent could issue because he (Ottinger) had abandoned the invention to the public. (Ex. No. 18.)

Which is as if he had said, although this office has, after the fullest investigation, decided seven times that this deck or top is no invention, yet it now decides that Captain Ottinger is the prior inventor; therefore "priority of invention" is awarded to him on that which is most decidedly no invention at all.

Absurd as this decision was, and bearing as it so plainly does all the ear-marks of a fraudulent collusion with the examiner who made it, still it is upon that decision that Captain Ottinger has ever since rested.

In order that this narrative may be made complete, and the whole truth be told, we must now take a glance backward for a moment to the year 1858, when we shall behold Captain Ottinger in a new rôle.

The scene is changed to the Capitol (by that way lies the road which leads to the door of the Treasury), and here we see Captain Ottinger, now no longer with grandiloquent generosity dedicating his great invention to humanity "without tax," but with a petition abjectly asking pay from the Government which had fed and clothed him all his life. Pay for what? We shall see.

On the 14th of May, 1858, Mr. E. B. Washburne made a report, No. 403, from the Committee on Commerce, to accompany House bill No. 576, a bill for the relief of Douglass Ottinger, which says, among other things, he (Captain Ottinger) "represents that he is the sole and original inventor of the machine known as the life or surf car," * * * "and that he has voluntarily placed his invention at the life-saving stations of the United States, subject to the free use of the Government unrestricted by patent rights." * * *

"He therefore asks some remunerative compensation for the labor and expense which the inventions have cost him, and also something in addition to enable him to test practically at sea its adaptation to the rescue of passengers and crews during violent gales." (See report and papers in first session, Thirty-fifth Congress, Reports of Congress, vol. III, 1857 and 1858, no paging.)

It is to be here remarked that all the labor and expense which Captain Ottinger gave to his so-called invention was during the time that he was engaged in obeying the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, which was from the 18th of October, 1848, to the 21st of May, 1849, just seven months and three days, during which time he was under the pay of the Government, and the Government paid for all the life-saving appliances put at the stations.

Annexed to Captain Ottinger's petition there are several exhibits, one of which is a statement showing where Congress had voted $100,000 to the inventor of chloroform, and several other large sums to inventors, including $48,000 to Dr. Page for experiments on an electric motor.

There is also a letter of Captain Bond which will be shown to be important in tracing Ottinger's dark and devious ways.

On April 27, 1858, and just prior to the report of the committee just refered to, the Secretary of the Treasury (Hon. Howell Cobb), in reply to an inquiry from Hon. E. B. Washburne, wrote to him as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 27, 1858.

Hon. E. B. WASHBURN,
Of the Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives:

I acknowledge the receipt of your letter * * * requesting to be informed if any of the surf-cars claimed by him (Captain Ottinger) to be his invention are in use. * * * There are fifty-four stations now on the coast of Long Island and New Jersey provided with all the necessary apparatus, including a life-boat and life-car at each station.

The duty of locating the first eight stations between Sandy Hook and Egg Harbor was assigned to Captain Ottinger, of the revenue-marine service, who also caused the houses to be constructed and the requisite apparatus to be provided therefor, * * * as will be seen by reference to the report of that officer, dated May 21, 1849. * * * In answer to that part of your letter as to the valuableness of the apparatus, I have to say that in many instances where it has been brought into service it has proved of incalculable value in saving human life. * * * (He then refers to the wreck of the Ayrshire and the results, &c., and continues.)

The Department, in bearing testimony to the great value of the apparatus for the saving of human life from shipwreck, * * * takes this occasion to say that it possesses no means of information * * * as to who is the inventor of the life-car in use at the Government stations referred to. Those cars which were furnished the stations, first established by Captain Ottinger in 1849, were provided by that officer under the general instructions of the Department to procure the best means of saving life and property from shipwreck. In like manner Lieutenant McGowan procured those which were furnished to the stations established under his superintendence.

Those provided the Government stations subsequently established were procured by the Department direct of Mr. Joseph Francis, of New York. * * *

HOWELL COBB.

(Cong. Reports, first session Thirty-fifth Cong., vol. 3, 1857-'58, no paging.)

On the 14th day of February, 1859, the bill granting $10,000 to Captain Ottinger was approved and became a law, so that on that day Ottinger arrived at the door of the Treasury with authority to take therefrom the sum of $10,000.

Reference has heretofore been made to the fact that Captain Ottinger was pressed by a great necessity to make some sort of a showing from the Patent Office. At the time that he put that $10,000 in his pocket on the ground that he was the sole and original inventor of the life-car he had been three times refused a patent, on the very ground that it was no invention, all that was patentable about it having been covered by the Francis patents of 1838 and 1845. He was in the fatal position of having obtained the money from Congress by false and fraudulent pretenses. Hence the great necessity which pressed him of getting some sort of showing from the Patent Office, even if it was no more than the absurd decision which he did get from an examiner granting him "priority of invention" upon that which the office had so often declared to be no invention. A paper so absurd can not relieve him from the fatal position referred to, but it was all he could get.

It may well be asked here, as was asked the other day, when this resolution was before the House of Representatives, by the member from Erie, Pa., who represents Captain Ottinger, if Mr. Francis was the inventor why did he allow this fraud of getting $40,000 on a false claim by Ottinger to be perpetrated on Congress? Why did he not stop it? The answer is that Mr. Francis was in Europe, where he had been for years, and that at the precise time at which this matter was afoot before Congress in 1858-'59 he was in the interior of Russia and knew nothing whatever about it. On his return to the United States in 1863 and when he first heard of it, he, at the same time, learned that Ottinger was dead, and generously determined to let the grave keep the secrets of the dark and devious methods of the man who had so foully wronged him.

Long immunity from the penalty of a successful wrongful act emboldens the wrong-doer to new attempts of a similar character, and so in 1883 we find Captain Ottinger again before Congress with a new scheme and again on his way to the door of the Treasury. Having traveled it before, he knew it well. This time his scheme is to be retired on a pension of $2,500.

Again in 1882 we find Captain Ottinger with bills in both wings of the Capitol—Senate bill No. 734, introduced by Mr. McDill January 9, 1882, and House bill No. 4169, introduced by Mr. Harmer February 7, 1882—and of course he is always on his way to the Treasury with the same old story, claiming to be the sole and original inventor of the life-car and many other inventions for life-saving appliances, all of which he says he has donated to the Government free of charge. His scheme was to be retired on full pay.

Mr. MCMILLAN, chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, addressed a note to Secretary of the Treasury Folger, asking if there was any reason why the bill should not pass, which letter the Secretary referred to General Superintendent Kimball, of the Life-Saving Service, for particulars, and this time it was that reply of the General Superintendent that brought Captain Ottinger to grief. It is on the files of the Senate and may be ordered by the committee.

Again, in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress a bill (No. 1334) accompanied by a report (No. 1272) for the relief of Captain Douglass Ottinger was reported to the House from the Committee on Naval Affairs, founded upon a memorial addressed by Ottinger to the Congress of the United States. The character of the memorial is sufficiently set forth in the report. He said that he had been in the revenue-cutter service since 1832; * * * that, "in addition to the long and successful service, he is the original inventor of the famous life-saving device known as the surf-car, now and for many years past in use in all the life-saving stations in the United States, and which had been the means of saving the lives of thousands of human beings from wrecked ships.

"This invention was never patented, but was given by him to the public for the public use." [Note.—There is not a whisper about the $10,000 which he had received from Congress for this very invention.] * * * "It was while engaged in carrying out an order from the Secretary of the Treasury to establish the first life-saving stations that this important invention was produced." [Note.—He was about this just seven months and three days, and had already received $10,000 for it.] * * * "In addition to the surf-car there are various other inventions and devices of his in use at the Government life-saving stations."

In 1849 Captain Ottinger went to California in command of a ship of the Pacific Mail Company, and "while on the Pacific coast, at the solicitation of a mercantile association, he explored the then little known upper coast of California, and first discovered, surveyed, and gave its name to Humboldt Bay, and opened up the trade between that point and San Francisco." [Note.—We shall hear more about Humboldt Bay, but shall probably never know what kind of trade he started between that point and San Francisco.] * * *

The report concludes: "In view of the services of Captain Ottinger, outside the line of his duty," [Note.—What were those services? They do not appear here.] "as a revenue officer, and for this reason alone, your committee are of the opinion that he should be allowed the full salary of his rank while he lives, even though, by reason of his advanced years, he may not be continued upon active duty." * * * [Note.—In all this there is dead silence about the $10,000]. Bill and report Ex. C. In this year of 1883, and in close connection with this application of Ottenger's for a pension, a very singular thing occurred.

A pamphlet containing the transaction, with a copy of its charter, list of managers and donors, and a portion of its correspondence, was, after it had served its purpose, and had lain dead for thirty years, reprinted. It is the pamphlet of The Life-Saving Benevolent Association of New York. Now, the question naturally arises, why was this done? What caused this sudden demand for the republication in part of the transactions of this society as far back as 1853, and when its officers and members were nearly all in their graves? What possible connection could it have with the present, or what possible public interest could it be that a republication of it should be demanded in the year of our Lord 1883? (Benevolent Pam., Ex. D.)

A close examination of the book will show beyond all question that the reason for its republication was not in any public demand for it, but that the reason was one wholly private and in close connection with the present attempt of Captain Ottinger to again reach the door of the Treasury. It was done to help on Ottinger's bill for a pension, and its perpose was to perpetrate a deliberate fraud. [Note.—At this very time Mr. Francis was lying at the point of death in New York city, as then announced by the daily press. It was never dreamed that he would live to expose it.)

Let us look at it, and the fraud will readily appear.

It should be stated here that all the libraries here and in New York and Albany have been searched for the pamphlet of 1853, and that the most skillful men in that business searched for it far and wide, but without success. They since have all been bought up and destroyed.

To return to the pamphlet or republication of 1883. In the affidavit of Mr. Horatio Allen, already before the committee, he says "that in 1883 a report was printed as official of the Life-Saving Benevolent Association of New York, which purports to be a reprint of the official report of 1853, in which, on page 38 of said publication, is the following:

"The surf or life car was invented by Captain Ottinger, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, in 1849;" also "that Joseph Francis executed the mechanical part of the surf-car and life-boats under the direction and supervision of the Government officer."

"This deponent avers that every word of the compiler quoted above from said publication is false of his own knowledge; that the articles cited in the above quotation were the invention of Joseph Francis prior to the contract herein referred to, and that their manufacture from the date herein stated was in the joint interests of the said Stillman, Allen & Co. and the said Joseph Francis; that the said inventions were their private property, and not belonging in any degree to the Government.

"This deponent further says that the labor and expense of demonstrating the value of the life-car and other life-saving appliance was very great, but the work was prosecuted with energy and perseverance by the said Francis alone from the date of the contract until 1847, when the first perfect life-car was made by him." * * *

It may also be stated, on information and belief, that the entire pages of 38 and 39, with the exception of the last paragraph and the names signed thereto, is matter newly added and which did not appear in the original pamphlet. (Benevolent pamphlet put in evidence.)

It is a matter worthy of remark, however, that in the two pictures presented in the said pamphlet the car shown to be in use is exactly similar to the Francis car used at the wreck of the Ayrshire and now in the National Museum, and does not resemble in the least the car which Captain Ottinger claims as his invention, as will be seen by the officially certified photograph now offered in evidence. (Photographs, Ex. Nos. 22, 23, and 24.)

One other reference to the Benevolent pamphlet. In the part of the correspondence reprinted in the pamphlet of 1883 is a letter from Thomas Bond, captain of the wreckers, to Walter R. Jones, dated at Long Beach House, December 7, 1852, as follows:

"DEAR SIR: I had an opportunity of testing the Government apparatus for saving life from shipwrecked vessels on Saturday last. The ship Georgia,

Captain Brodie, with 271 passengers on board, came on shore on Friday evening last, the wind blowing nearly a gale and the weather so foggy that the breakers were not seen till she was hard aground, with the wind on shore. * * * This line was then fastened to the forward part of the life-car and another to the stern. I sent her in that manner through the surf to the ship and back till all the passengers and crew were landed without the least bruise or scratch to any one. * * * I have not been over to the ship since the crew landed, but it is reported that the boat is somewhat injured, and I apply to you to assist me to have everything in order again as soon as possible. * * *

"THOMAS BOND."

(See B. B., pages 59 and 60.)

There is also a letter from Captain Brodie to Walter R. Jones, dated New York, 15th of December, 1852:

"SIR: I was in command of the ship Georgia, wrecked on Long Beach, New Jersey, on Friday, the 3d instant, while on her passage from Liverpool to New York, and take pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of the life-saving apparatus in the Government boat-house.

"We had on board 272 passengers, men, women, and children, and a crew of 18 men—in all, 290 persons." * * * "I consider the apparatus well adapted to the contemplated service, particularly the life boat used by us. She once filled with water, but so admirably is she constructed that, with 25 persons on board she remained upright, and was 9 inches out of water amidships, and worked with more steadiness than when without water in her." * * * "The boat sustained no injury," &c. * * *

"Your obedient servant,

A. M. BRODIE."

(B. B., p. 60.)

The attention of the committee is called to the fact that the integrity of the record in Captain Bond's letter has been at some time tampered with, because, in the fourteenth line of it, life-car, in italics, has been inserted for surf-car, as it was written in the original. (Compare with same letter in Ottinger's exhibits to petition for $10,000, volume 3, reports of Congress, 1857-'58.) The fact is that no life-car was used on that occasion, because it was not necessary. The ship stranded in a fog, not in a gale, and could be easily reached by the life-boats; but one of Mr. Francis's corrugated iron surf-boats, which was hauled to and from the ship through the surf by lines attached to her bow and stern.

The fact that the record has been tampered with is apparent from the letter itself, because, in the twenty-fourth line of his letter, Captain Bond refers to it again as "the boat;" also Captain Brodie, in the thirteenth line of his letter, refers to the "life-boat used by us," and in the fourteenth line says "that with twenty-five persons on board she remained upright," &c., and in the twentieth line says "the boat sustained no injury."

Now, it is to be observed that the word "life-car," italicised, is the only reference to the life-car in either letter; that all the other references are to boats and life-boats; and Captain Brodie says that with twenty-five persons on board she remained upright, &c., when full of water.

Now, a life-car can not take on board more than five persons, children and adults, whereas the Francis surf-boats can easily carry twenty-five persons.

Now, the question arises, why should this letter have been tampered with in the republication, or possibly in its first publication? The object and answer is not difficult to find. Captain Ottinger was then an applicant for $10,000 for a "life-car," and there seems to be no doubt that it was done to help on that fraudulent scheme.

It may here be stated in this connection that a very recent attempt (last August) was made by Captain Ottinger in person, who had proceeded to Long Beach to see Captain Bond to induce him to say that the life-car was used at the wreck of the Georgia instead of the Francis surf-boat; but that sturdy veteran of the coast indignantly refused to stultify himself, and immediately reported the attempt upon his honor to the authorities at Washington.

But Captain Ottinger's third journey to the Treasury was not so successful as the first, and suddenly came to grief. The manner of it may be best understood by a special telegram from Washington, June 21, to the New York Sun of the next day, June 22, 1884. It is headed "A bill that will not pass"—"Evidence which knocks the bottom out of Captain Ottinger's claim." "Washington, June 21." "There is a bill upon the Calendar of the House of Representatives on which action will not be demanded. It is accompanied by an elaborate report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, * * * and is for the relief of Capt. Douglass Ottinger. * * * Both Ottinger and Goff (its introducer) probably wish the matter had never been introduced to Congress, and would be 'willing to have a millstone tied to it and dropped into the middle of the sea.' And all this because of certain evidence that Hon. Sunset Cox, of New York, has in his pocket."

The preamble of the bill says Captain Ottinger * * * has a stainless record as an officer and man; that his services have been supplemented by useful inventions for saving life for which he has received no compensation. Therefore it is proposed to give him a pension of $2,500 per year during the remainder of his life.

The report is long and recites that Captain Ottinger is the inventor of a life-saving device known as the surf-car, which has saved thousands of lives, but which was never patented, and was given by Captain Ottinger to the Government for public use.

A reference to the report of the Patent Office will show that Captain Ottinger applied for a patent and was refused because the apparatus was not of his invention. Volume 2 of the Statutes at Large, page 559, will show that this invention was not presented to the Government for public use, but that Captain Ottinger received $10,000 for it. * * * The report further alleges that Captain Ottinger was the originator of the Life-Saving Service in this country, and is to be credited with its completeness and efficiency. The records of the Treasury show that the captain's connection with the service was as superintendent of the construction of seven life-saving stations, having been detailed for that purpose from the Revenue Marine Corps.

Captain Ottinger is also credited in the report with having been the discoverer of Humboldt Bay, on the Pacific coast, in 1849, whereas Captain Winship discovered it in 1806, and the records of the Coast Survey of 1848 contained a detailed description of the place. (Francis's History, pages 110 and 111. Coast plat of California, Oregon, and Washington Territories, published in 1869, page 102.)

And so Captain Ottinger's second journey to the Treasury came to grief. The bill for his pension dropped out of sight and has never been heard of again.

Mr. Francis now first heard by this exposure of Ottinger's third scheme in Congress, and determined, after consultation with his friends, to assert his own rights.

In May, 1883, the Great International Fisheries Exposition opened its doors to the world in the city of London. All nations made exhibit there of their progress, not only in regard to fish culture, but in all matters touching maritime affairs, among others the means which had been found most effective in saving life and property from shipwreck. Our own country was among the exhibitors.

On March 31 of that year Lieut. C. H. McClelland, of the Life-Saving Service, an assistant inspector, who was to have charge of the exhibit at London, in a letter to Hon. S. J. Kimball, superintendent and chief of the Life-Saving Service, asks that the "Ayrshire" life-car be borrowed from the Central Park commissioners, where it then was—to whom it had been loaned for exhibition by Mr. Francis, it being his private property—to be sent to London to the fisheries exposition, thinking it would add to the exhibit that was to be made and be of great interest to the thousands who would visit the exposition. (Ex. D.)

Application was duly made to the park commissioners by Captain Merriman, of the Life-Saving Service, and the life-car was shipped by Professor Baird, through his agents, to the exposition. (Ex. E and F.)

On July 31, 1883, a petition addressed to his excellency the American minister at the Court of St. James, signed by Gideon J. Ball and six other residents of Erie, Pa., where Captain Ottinger resides, and, referring to the life-car on exhibition at the exposition, say that it is an imposture and a fraud now being practiced upon the European public, and we feel that it is due to truth and humanity to expose it.

The life-car which saved the people on the Ayrshire was invented by Douglass Ottinger, of this city, * * * when under act of Congress he was charged with the management and construction of the first life-saving stations of the United States. The files of the Treasury Department, the act of Congress, and the archives of the Patent Office authenticate the origin of the life-car. [Note.—It is in this manner that they use the three prominent frauds perpetrated by Ottinger to sustain his title to the life-car.]

"The petitioners protest against it, and ask that their paper may be made public," &c. (Ex. No. 24.)

On June 23, 1883, from Erie, Pa., Captain Ottinger addressed a letter to his excellency J. Russell Lowell, in which he says, among other things, "that the metallic-covered boat that had been on exhibition in Central Park was fraudulent, though purporting to be the authentic life-car that saved the people wrecked on the ship Ayrshire," and that the same car was now on exhibition at the Fisheries Exposition, having been sent there by the Superintendent of the United States Life-Saving Service at Washington. He says: "I have the honor to send to you herewith a photograph taken yesterday of the authentic life-car, in order that it may be compared with the metallic-covered boat sent to the Fisheries Exposition. The inventor of the life-car gave it free of tax for patent, not to the United States alone, but to all other nations. [Note.—He had the $10,000 in his pocket then.]

"Therefore it is important that the lines of construction of the true life-car * * * be shown in order that the fraudulent covered boat be not accepted as a model." (Ex. No. 25.)

In a letter from the American commissioner to the exposition, Hon. G. Brown Goode, to Hon. Sumner J. Kimball, General Superintendent Life-Saving Service, dated at London, 8th of September, 1883, he transmits the letter just quoted from Captain Ottinger, with the photograph of the life-car sent by Captain Ottinger, and the petition of Gideon J. Ball and others, of Erie, which he had received from the American minister, and says: "I have informed Mr. Lowell that I felt that I had no authority in this matter, * * * but that I would forward the inclosed letter, petition, &c., to you to be acted upon as you might think proper." [Note.—Produce photograph here to committee.] (Ex. 26.)

Captain Ottinger also addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, which was received at the Department April 21, 1885, in which he says: * * * "Mr. Joseph Francis, a boat-builder employed in the shop of Stillman, Allen & Co. at the time they manufactured my life-cars, * * * got up a counterfeit of my life-car. Mr. S. J. Kimball and Capt. J. H. Merriman, of the Life-Saving Service, sent it, with property of this Government, and apparently under the patronage of the United States, to England, and put it conspicuously * * * in the life-saving division * * * in fisheries' exposition of 1883, and by a large placard the counterfeit car made an especial show, being so advertised as the car in which the people of the ship Ayrshire were rescued.

The people of the wrecked ship Ayrshire were saved on the 12th of January, 1850, in the authentic life-car, the property of the United States," &c. (Ex. No. 27.)

All this required investigation, and so an investigation was ordered.

That investigation was ordered, as follows, by a letter dated March 24, 1884, from General Superintendent Kimball to Lieutenant McClellan. (Ex. No. 28.)

Then follows a letter of April 17, 1884, from Mr. Kimball to Mr. Francis, asking him as to the history of the life-car that rescued the people from the Ayrshire, and Mr. Francis's reply of April 20th relative to the authenticity of the life-car. (Ex's 29 and 30.)

Then a letter dated Washington, D. C., May 6, 1884, from B. S. Osborn, addressed to Hon. C. J. Folger, Secretary of the Treasury, with the request that the life-car of Joseph Francis be taken to Bayhead life-saving station, New Jersey, for identification. (Ex. No. 31.)

Then a letter from Hon. H. F. French, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, of May 8, 1884, to Professor Spencer F. Baird, asking that the Francis life-car be forwarded to Bayhead for identification by witnesses. (Ex. No. 32.)

Then a letter dated May 12, 1884, of Professor Baird, of the Smithsonian Institution, to Hon. Charles J. Folger, saying that the Francis life-car had been sent. (Ex. No. 33.)

Then follows a letter from Hon. S. J. Kimball, General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, dated May 13, 1884, to Lieut. C. H. McClellan, assistant inspector Life-Saving Service, in which he says: "In compliance with your telegraphic dispatch of to-day, I herewith transmit the photograph which was received in this office on the 18th of September, 1883, from G. Brown Goode, inclosed in his letter dated at the International Fisheries Exhibition, South Kensington, London, September 8, 1883.

"The photograph was accompanied by a letter signed 'Douglass Ottinger, inventor of the life-car,' dated Erie, Pa., June 23, 1883, and addressed to J. Russell Lowell, United States minister to the court of St. James, which described the photograph as that of 'the authentic life-car that saved the people wrecked on the ship Ayrshire.'

"You will please take care that the photograph is not injured while in your possession and return it as soon as possible." (Ex. No 34.)

Then follows the affidavit of Lieutenant McClellan touching the taking of the affidavits for the identification of the Francis life-car. (Ex. No. 35.)

Then follow ten affidavits of indentification. Those of Stout, Hulse, Wilson, J. Fleming, James P. Fleming, Van Note, Loveland, Herbert, Chapman, and David Fleming, which are all very brief. (Ex. No. 36.)

They are the men who assisted at the wreck of the Ayrshire and handled the car on that memorable occasion, every one of whom swear that the Francis life-car is the authentic car used at the wreck of the Ayrshire, and further swear that such a car as that shown in Ottinger's photograph was never seen on that coast.

There are still other affidavits, but this is clearly enough.

And so were General Superintendent Kimball and Captain Merriman, of the Life-Saving Service, completely and splendidly vindicated, for here it is that Captain Ottinger now comes to certain destruction. The human mind can not resist testimony so direct, clear, and overwhelming, and the fact that the Francis life-car now in the National Museum is the authentic car which did such noble work at the wreck of the Ayrshire on January 12, 1850, is now, and must always remain, a fact which is settled forever.

When Captain Ottinger delivered that photograph to the American minister at the Court of St. James and declared it to be a true picture of his invention and the veritable car which was used at the wreck of the Ayrshire the avenging fate which pursues all wrongdoers had overtaken him, for though "the mills of the gods grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding fine."

This plain statement of the facts presents to our mental division panoramic pictures of two lives, now far beyond the natural span—one, that of a man who, at twenty-seven years of age, put on the uniform of the United States Revenue

Marine Service and from that day to this has lived at the public expense. Then we see him sent on the unimportant duty of "superintending" the construction of eight houses for life-saving stations, and the supplying of them with such life-saving appliances as the board of underwriters of New York "may direct," about which duty he was engaged just seven months and three days, when, as he now claims, he made a great invention, about which, however, there is not a word spoken by him in either his official reports and communications, although there is direct reference made to "a life-car," but no whisper of a claim by him that it is his invention.

Then we see him on the Pacific coast, from 1849 until 1853, where he claims the honors of a discoverer, although this is not made known to the world officially until he is seeking a pension from Congress, in 1883, thirty years after the so-called discovery, when he declared himself to be the discoverer, explorer, and namer of Humboldt Bay, and which was then shown to have been discovered in 1806 by Captain Windship, about the year which he (Captain Ottinger) was born, and that the records of the Coast Survey, as early as 1848 and before, Captain Ottinger had reached the Pacific coast, contained a detailed description of the place.

Then we see him in 1853 again on the Atlantic coast, three years after the wreck of the Ayrshire, and four years after the invention of the car as claimed by him, announcing to the Secretary of the Treasury that "a part of the apparatus is my invention," which he then and there grandiloquently dedicates to the world "without tax." Then again, even after the declaration of a generosity so grand, we find him applying for a patent right, not once only, but twice and thrice, and each time rejected on the ground that his claims were neither "new nor patentable."

Then, in 1858-'59, we see him before Congress asking for $10,000 to pay him for that which he had once with such sublime generosity dedicated to the world "without tax," and, forgetting that he had once declared himself in an official letter to be only inventor "in part," now boldly declaring himself in his petition to Congress to be the "sole and only original inventor" of the life-car which saved two hundred souls from the wreck of the Ayrshire, when at that very time his application for a patent had been three times rejected by the Commissioner of Patents as being "no invention." Then, having successfully imposed upon Congress, we behold him at the vaults of the Treasury putting $10,000 of the people's money into his pockets, which a grateful nation had voted him as a benefactor to mankind.

There we find him in the fatal position of one who had obtained money by false and fraudulent pretenses, and, despairing of getting any kind of grant or right from the Patent Office, asking, finally, that an interference may be declared between him and Joseph Francis, which had been already rejected as no invention, and at last, in August, 1860, securing from an examiner in that office a decision granting him "priority of invention" upon that which that office had seven times declared to be no invention, seeming to think that what was declared to be "no invention" could, by such hocus pocus as the examiner resorted to, and seven years after the first decision, be cured by the said examiner's decision giving him priority of invention, and never seeming to know that that which had been so often declared, and as far back as July 19, 1851, to be no invention to Joseph Francis could never after that be an invention to any one on earth, and could not by any possibility whatever, therefore, after that have a "prior" inventor, and that the decision of the examiner simply amounted to his saying "there is no invention, it is true, but, nevertheless, you are the 'prior' inventor."

Utterly silly and absurd, as it is—but when was knavery ever wise?—Captain Ottinger, no doubt relying on the comparative privacy and darkness of the proceeding, and hoping that it would never see the light, has rested on that decision ever since, and rests on it alone down to this day. Then we find him in 1882 again before Congress, with a petition and bill in each House, determined—if two bills could do it—to get again to the vaults of the Treasury, and again we witness his complete discomfiture.

Nothing daunted, we see him again before Congress in 1883—this time for a pension of $2,500, being $700 more than he asked for in 1882—and, to help that matter on, again asserting himself as the inventor of the authentic "Ayrshire" car, of which he has given the free use to the Government, and as the discoverer of Humboldt Bay, given as reasons why the pension should be granted, but keeping dumb as to the $10,000 which he had already received for that which he falsely claimed as his invention, and which he had once with such engaging munificence dedicated to the world "without tax."

It is at this time, too, that a pamphlet which had served its purpose and been dead for thirty years is republished without any public demand for it whatever, and that the integrity of the text of letters reprinted in it was tampered with—this tampering having special reference to the matter which Captain Ottinger then had pending before Congress. As to who did the tampering, let Ottinger's visit to Bond be borne in mind. Then we behold him, as may well be supposed, covered with confusion at the exposure then made on the floors of Congress—skulking away, leaving his petition and bill to their certain fate, and earnestly praying for swift oblivion on the whole exploded scheme.

The next phase in which we see him is before the American minister at the court of St. James declaring that the Francis car, then on exhibition at the Fisheries Exposition in London, is an "imposture and a fraud," that "it was not the authentic car which saved the people from the wreck of the Ayrshire," but that the photograph, which he then furnished to the minister, was a true picture of the veritable car which was used at the wreck of the Ayrshire, and of which he was the "sole and original inventor."

Then later on we see him protesting to the Secretary of the Treasury that General Superintendent Kimball and Capt. James Merriman, of the Life-Saving Service, had sent to the Fisheries Exposition in London, and put on exhibition there as being the car which saved the people from the wreck of the Ayrshire, a "metallic covered boat;" that the said boat was "not the authentic Ayrshire car, but an imposture and a fraud," which the said Kimball and Merriman were imposing upon the public.

We now come upon the last scene of this strange, eventful, and most odorous history. Mr. Kimball, in order to vindicate himself and Captain Merriman, ordered an investigation as to the authenticity of the Ayrshire car, with the overwhelming results just laid before the committee.

In strong contrast to this picture is that of the other life. Here we see an earnest, intense, well-poised, steadfast boy at the age of only eleven years taking up, and even then getting a firm grasp upon, what was to be his life-work. Slowly, earnestly, obscurely, yet sleeplessly, he pursues the even tenor of his way until at the age of eighteen he receives honorable recognition from one of the great institutions of the country for creations for life-saving purposes, the result of his own hands and brain.

Still pursuing the great purpose of his life, and with exhaustless study and crucial experiment he advances in his calling until wooden boats of his invention and construction are in demand by crowned heads and great navies, and are carried by the mercantile marine to all parts of the globe, and in 1838 his inventive genius was recognized and rewarded by the Patent Office of the United States, and at which time he first conceived the idea and designed a life-car. Then, having exhausted the utmost capacities of wood as a material for constructing life-saving appliances as being both too heavy and too frail, he determines to abandon his business in wooden boats and to seek for his purpose some other material.

Then we see him in 1841, with the true spirit of the inventive genius, shutting himself up alone in a vacant building, poor, unaided, almost starving, determined to work out his problem or die.

Then followed his great invention by which metal could be used as a vessel on water, and which was reached, after vast study and experiment, in the invention of corrugating iron or other metal in curved and irregular lines, which invention was secured to him by patent in 1845.

Then we find him being sought after by men of capital who desired to avail themselves of his inventive genius, and he now receives as partners in his business the great firm of Stillman, Allen & Co., of the Novelty Iron Works. His boats of corrugated metal displace in large degree all wooden constructions for life-saving appliances. In 1847, after exhaustive experiments and the building of many experimental cars, he completes a perfect life-car, that car which, in 1850, did such effective work at the wreck of the Ayrshire. His fame had now spread far and wide, not only in his native country, but in other lands, for through his inventions there had been saved thousands of lives and millions of treasure, and he is the recipient from distinguished bodies in his own country and in Europe of resolutions, diplomas, and medals of honor.

Then, in 1855, we see him in Europe, eagerly sought after by crowned heads and men of highest social, official, and scientific distinction, introducing there the results of his inventive genius, doing honor to his own country, and shedding lustre upon American citizenship, receiving in return all marks of favor which they knew how to confer, consisting of medals, rich presents, and decorations of knighthood. For more than seventy years this high, honorable, and shining career has been pursued without a stain or blemish on any part of it. It is no extravagance to say that few lives furnish such a record.

He returns to his native land to find that that which he had wrought out through all his long and tireless life, with so much thought, pain, care, and suffering, and by which thousands of lives and millions of property had been saved, has been stolen from him, and that to another had been given the credit honor, and emoluments which he alone deserved.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD FITZPATRICK.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2244) for the relief of J. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased. It is a very short bill, reported from the Committee on Claims with practical unanimity.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read. It proposes to pay to J. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased, $12,000, that amount being found due and allowed to Richard Fitzpatrick, during his lifetime, by the Court of Claims, as compensation for the use and occupation of his property by the United States Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill read again. I could not hear a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will appeal to Senators to preserve order. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOMS NIGHT INSPECTORS.

Mr. EVARTS. I move to take up Order of Business 1993, being the bill (S. 3116) for the relief of night inspectors of the ports of New York and Baltimore, a bill that I understand will occupy no time and will be passed very readily.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will not be passed, and I give notice now that it will not pass to-night. If you want an all-night session you can have it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withdraw that motion, as the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and myself desire to address the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw my motion.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives communicating the resolutions adopted by that body on the death of Hon. John Arnot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the House of Representatives; which were read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 22, 1887.

Resolved, That the House has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. John Arnot, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York, and tenders to the family and kindred of the deceased the assurance of sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for fitting tributes to the memory of the deceased and to his eminent public and private virtues.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I send resolutions to the desk, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from New York will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. John Arnot, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate to the family of the deceased.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I have asked the Senate to lay aside for a few moments its regular business in order that I may pay a tribute of respect to the memory of Hon. John Arnot, late a Representative in Congress from the State of New York.

Mr. Arnot was first elected to the Forty-eighth Congress and re-elected to the Forty-ninth Congress. He died at his home in the city of Elmira on the 20th of last November.

Mr. Arnot was in no sense a seeker after the honors or emoluments of office. In this case the office sought the man. He was a business man rather than a politician. In the many enterprises in which he was engaged he displayed strong executive ability and clear foresight. He inherited wealth and added largely to it by his industry and business sagacity.

His neighbors came to know him as a man of stern integrity, liberal in his views, generous to a fault, and with great capacity for affairs.

His party forced upon him the nomination for Congress which he unwillingly accepted. He served his people so satisfactorily that he was re-elected to the Forty-ninth Congress without opposition.

Mr. Arnot was a Democrat in politics and a strong party man, but he never allowed his partisan feelings to control his action or to secure his support of a party measure which did not meet the approval of his judgment. Mr. Arnot is an illustrious example of the safety of committing governmental duties to those who have shown great success in the management of their own affairs.

He had not been trained in the science of government as taught in our schools or in the law, but his contact with men and their affairs led him almost intuitively to take that side of a question which was in the interests of the people and for the development of the resources of our country. As his judgment had been almost unerring in his own affairs, so it was sound on nearly every question upon which he was called to act during his service in Congress.

In my judgment the safety and prosperity of our country depend more upon the men who possess the qualities of heart and mind which Mr. Arnot possessed than upon the mere brilliant qualities of the political genius or learned expounder of the law. It is in men of this character that the reserve force of our country is to be found.

To-day the material interests of the nation are controlled by a host of wise and energetic business men who, in a large degree, have subdued the forces of nature and made them work for man. In the all-absorbing nature of their enterprises they seem to forget at times that they owe this nation any duty; but, if by any chance they are drawn into political affairs, they evince the same energy and foresight that characterized them in the private station.

Mr. Arnot was most loved and honored where he was best known. In his home at Elmira, where he had lived all his life—a city which he had seen grow up, and toward which growth he had contributed much—he was known to all its citizens as public-spirited and generous of heart. His death was keenly felt in Elmira and the surrounding country. His memory will be cherished there so long as any shall survive who knew him.

I know of no higher encomium which can be passed on any man than that which was said of Mr. Arnot by his neighbor: "He was a true friend, a good citizen, an honest man."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, in a continuous Congressional service of more than half a score of years, this is the first time that I have ever uttered a word on an occasion like this. But when the death of John Arnot, of New York, is announced to a Chamber of which I am a member, I would be unjust to myself and recreant to every prompting of friendship if I permitted it to pass in silence.

It is not of the Congressman or of the law-maker alone that I would speak. It is the dead friend who looms up before me, a man whose life illustrated those nobler properties that teach us to think better of humanity.

I have no prepared eulogium to pronounce, but he was a man who was honest in the discharge of every duty that devolved upon him, painstaking, faithful, and conscientious.

Whether in commercial matters or in the discharge of those duties that rested on him as a public servant, he met the fullest measure of criticism that might be applied. But in his private life he illustrated those properties that made him dear to all who knew him. If it was the weeping widow whom he found in tears attending the sale that a cormorant creditor was enforcing of the shelter that a dead husband had left to her and to her little ones, it was his check that was given, it was his own generous soul that directed that the commissioner should make the deed to her who was unable to protect either herself or those who were dependent on her.

His life was a constant illustration of the broadest philanthropy, and in my judgment the truest religion that a man has ever been permitted to employ among his fellows. It was an enduring effort to lighten the load, to ameliorate the condition, and to advance the welfare of his fellow-men. He believed that it was—

Not well to prate of creeds,
But better to write one's life in noble deeds.

The world was better for his labors, and he passed out of it with a conscience, I am sure, clear of offense either toward his Maker or toward his fellows. Not speeded, but peacefully, he passed into that far-off country where the showers of the rain-storms come not, and where the heaviest-laden wayfarer at last lays down his load.

Fearlessly he met that last of all opponents, before whose grim visage mortality has never failed to yield. Conscious of rectitude in life, remembering that he had done naught to bring discredit upon a name that had been honored among his fellows, fearlessly he crossed the misty boundary that separates us from the great hereafter, bearing in his hand the best and safest passport that immortal soul ever went into eternity with, the burden that he had lifted from the shoulder of some toiling comrade or the tear that he had dried upon the furrowed cheek of sorrow.

Whatever may be said, the testimony of those by whom he was best known, the love that is borne him by those who were closest to him, attest beyond controversy the merit and the worth of this dead comrade. Well may his friends go and inscribe upon the marble that is to mark his resting-place words that were inscribed before for one who was no more worthy, "Earth never pillowed upon her bosom a truer son, nor Heaven opened wide its portals to receive a manlier spirit."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives communicating the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of Hon. Lewis Beach.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives; which were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 22, 1887.

Resolved, That this House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Lewis Beach, a Representative in Congress from the State of New York.

Resolved, That all other business be suspended in order that fitting tributes of respect may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That these resolutions be communicated to the family of Mr. Beach.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions be communicated to the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I send resolutions to the desk, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from New York will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. Lewis Beach, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York, and tenders to the relatives of the deceased the assurance of their sympathy with them under the bereavement they have been called to sustain.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. Beach a certified copy of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, Mr. Beach was well known to many members of this body as a vigilant, conscientious, and hard-working legislator. He was three times elected to Congress and faithfully represented the interests of his constituents. It is believed by his family and friends that his constant attention to his public duties laid the foundation of the disease which proved fatal.

Mr. Beach was in many ways a strong man. He made his personality felt in the community in which he lived by taking a prominent part in all matters of public interest. He was honored by his neighbors who conferred local offices upon him, and was finally chosen Representative in Congress. His service in the House marked him as a man of great energy and determination, and as conscientiously devoted to what he believed to be right.

Mr. Beach was an educated gentleman who devoted his time to the practice of the law, literary pursuits, and farming. His delight in rural pursuits led him to make his home on a farm at Cornwall, on the Hudson, near the city of Newburg. He was chiefly instrumental in bringing about the centennial celebration of the disbandment of the Revolutionary armies under Washington, at Newburg, after the treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain had been negotiated.

As a member of the joint Congressional committee which had that celebration in charge, I met Mr. Beach at Cornwall and enjoyed the hospitality of his elegant country home. Thus I came to know Mr. Beach better than I had known him here in his public life. However severe and determined he may have been in the discharge of official duties, he was a most genial and hospitable gentlemen in his own home, and it was these qualities which endeared him to his friends and neighbors.

Mr. Beach will be greatly missed by the community in which he lived. His place in Congress may be filled, for our country is rich in the number of citizens who are capable of filling any position in the Government, but the death of a man possessed of the qualities of Mr. Beach in the prime of life, with all his faculties at their best, can not but be a great loss, not only to his friends and neighbors but also to the whole country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives communicating the resolutions on the death of Hon. Abraham Dowdney.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives; which were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 22, 1887.

Resolved, That in the death of the Hon. Abraham Dowdney, late a Representative of the twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York, that district and State have lost an able, conscientious, and faithful servant and the country a safe, intelligent, and prudent legislator and a public-spirited and patriotic citizen.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I send to the desk resolutions, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from New York will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. Abraham Dowdney, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the sympathies of the members of the Senate be tendered to the family of Mr. Dowdney in their bereavement, and that the Secretary of the Senate transmit to them a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, Mr. Dowdney a few weeks ago was apparently in perfect health. He left this city and returned to his home in New York city, where he was stricken down and died without a moment's warning. His life's work was not finished, but he had performed well his part in every station he had occupied. His early life had been one of severe toil and self-denial, but he had achieved material success and had won the esteem and confidence of his people, who, recognizing his sterling qualities, promoted him to the councils of the nation.

Mr. Dowdney was born in Ireland in 1840, but decided while still a mere youth to seek to improve his condition by coming to America. When twelve years of age he landed in New York city, which he made his home. He learned the plumber's trade, and was successfully carrying on that business at the outbreak of the late war. He at once gave up his business, recruited a company, and went as its captain.

He showed his love for and his loyalty to the country of his choice by being among the first to take up arms in its defense. He realized fully the benefits he had derived from the institutions of the country, by which he had been able to rise above the station to which he had been born. His gratitude was evinced by the offer of his life for its preservation.

It was a fact well known to all who took part in that struggle that the foreign-born soldiers were not surpassed in loyalty, in self-sacrificing devotion to the cause, or in manly courage by the native-born soldiers.

Mr. Dowdney returned from the war and began his business again anew, and by strict integrity and industry he amassed a liberal fortune. His neighbors, seeing his capacity for affairs, pressed him into the public service, believing that he would guard their interests as faithfully as he had his own.

In this judgment they were not mistaken. He proved his executive capacity in affairs of local importance, and in his short term of service in the House of Representatives he impressed himself on all with whom he came in close relations as a man of sound common sense, wise in council, and sincerely devoted to the public welfare.

His death is a public misfortune, and an irreparable loss to his friends and family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I ask that the message of the House of Representatives touching the death of Hon. William T. Price be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives; which were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 9, 1887.

Resolved, That the business of this House be suspended, that appropriate honors may be paid to the memory of Hon. William T. Price, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Price the country has sustained the loss of a patriotic citizen and a most faithful public servant.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, shall adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I submit resolutions which I ask may be read:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. William T. Price, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Wisconsin, and tenders to the family and relatives of the deceased the assurance of its sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. Price a copy of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, less than one-third of the term for which I was chosen to the Senate is gone, and already for the second time it is my duty to review in this presence the ended life of a colleague from my own State in the work of national legislation. Somehow I note from this standpoint, as never from any other, the quick, sad havoc which death is making around me.

> The air is full of farewells to the dying
> And mournings for the dead.

It is strange if there comes not to each one of us, unbidden and unwelcome, anxious, silent questioning as to who of our number is next to sink into the "sleep that no pain shall wake."

On the 6th of last December, the birthday of this session, before the dawn, at his home, in Black River Falls, Wis., his wife and children bending over him, in full possession of his faculties, conscious that his eye was never to greet the sunlight of another day, with a smile upon his face, William Thompson Price, a member of the House of Representatives from the eighth Congressional district, peacefully folded his tired hands and answered the summons of God.

He of whose career I am briefly to speak was no stranger to me. For seventeen years before his death we lived in the same Congressional district, were partisans in the same political cause, acquaintances, and friends. A truthful sketch of his life and a discriminating analysis of his character and career, without a single embellishing touch from the hand of friendship, shows him to the world for what he was—a remarkable man.

Mr. Price was born at Masseyburg, Huntington County, Pennsylvania, on the 17th day of June, 1824. The educational opportunities of his boyhood were limited to four or five terms of the district school, at which he received his education, except that which came to him in the rough school of life. For a time he worked on a farm, and later, for a year or two, he followed the towpath of a Pennsylvania canal. Then for three years he was a clerk in a store in the village of Hollidaysburg, Pa., and during this mercantile apprenticeship his leisure was devoted to reading law.

In the spring of 1845, rich in ambition, energy, and the other elements of true manhood, but, like so many thousands who preceded and who followed him from the populous East to the western land of hope, poor in every other way, he turned his face and steps westward, and landed at Mount Pleasant, in the Territory of Iowa, ill-clad and travel-stained, with only twenty-five cents in his pocket, and an ax, which he well knew how to use, upon his shoulder. In the autumn of the same year he went to Black River Falls, in the then Territory of Wisconsin, where among the stately waving pines he pitched his tent. From that day on he knew no other home.

From the time of his settlement in Wisconsin to his death he was an important factor, both in the public service and in the business life of the region in which he dwelt. In 1849 he was deputy sheriff of Crawford County, which then included what is now the county of Jackson. He was a member of the first law firm in the latter county, and in 1854 was elected the first judge of that county.

He was a member of the Legislative Assembly of the State in 1851 and in 1852, county treasury in 1856 and 1857, collector of internal revenue from 1863 to 1865, presidential elector on the Republican ticket in 1868, member of the State Senate 1857, 1870, 1871, 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, and president of the senate in 1879; president of the agricultural society of his county for seven years, the first president of the Tomah and Lake Saint Croix Railway Company (afterwards the West Wisconsin Railway Company), president of the Jackson County Bank from its organization until 1884, chairman of the town board of his town for eight years or more, and president of the village of Black River Falls. He was elected a member of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, receiving at the last election, though helpless through the illness which resulted in his death and unable to take any part in the canvass, over 12,000 majority, a majority larger than any ever before cast for a Congressional candidate in that State.

For a few years prior to the commercial panic of 1857 he was a member of a firm engaged in the mercantile business. This firm went down in the panic, and all the accumulations which the toil and energy of years had brought to him were in a day swept away, leaving him, as he used to say, over $15,000 worse off than nothing; but, undaunted and undiscouraged, he set to work and in a few years had, single handed, redeemed, with interest, the part which bore the name of his firm. His business life thenceforward was successful and he amassed a comfortable fortune.

During the forty-one years of his life in Wisconsin he was extensively engaged in lumbering operations, and came to be one of the principal loggers in the State, cutting and floating to market during the last five years of his life an average of 60,000,000 feet of logs each year.

As has been seen, he was familiar, almost from the outset of his career in Wisconsin to the day of his death, with public duties of different grades, from the offices of the town and village to that of member of Congress, and I only assert what goes without saying in my State when I say that he brought to the discharge of every public duty tireless industry patient and intelligent attention to detail, and unusual sagacity.

He had a peculiary correct idea of the duties of citizenship. To him the Government, State and national, was not a far-away, fanciful thing in which the individual citizen had no direct interest. He realized that the nation is only an aggregation of individuals, and that under our system of government the ultimate success of the whole vitally depends upon the intelligence and fidelity with which such citizen discharges his duty, and therefore he attended, not as a ward politician or in any sense a political boss but as a citizen, every primary and every meeting which took cognizance of public affairs.

He was married July 10, 1851, to Miss Julia Campbell, who was to him indeed a helpmeet, with whom his home life was exceptionally happy, and upon her face lovingly lingered his last look in life. His family consists of a daughter, just entering upon womanhood, and a son, Hon. HUGH H. PRICE (twenty-seven years of age), whom the electors of the district, partly as a loving tribute to the memory of his father, chose with flattering unanimity to serve out the latter's unexpired term.

There was no neutral tint in this man's character. He was in everything aggressive. He was a force in whatever he undertook. He was no laggard in any relation of life. In business there seemed to be no limit to his capacity or endurance. He managed with great sagacity, energy, and success many different branches of business at the same time, and on a large scale, any one of which would have overtaxed an ordinary man. He employed hundreds of men at a time, always paid them good wages, and demanded of them faithful service.

He despised a drone, and no man better appreciated manly qualities, under whatever guise, and so in the logging camp, and on the great "log-drives" among hundreds of rough men, he was a master, not by reason of his wealth, or because he was employer, but by force of his energy and ability, and because he himself had been a wage-worker among woodsmen. He was an exacting employer, but his men loved him, for he was generous and just to them; and on the wintry day of his burial, which brought prominent men in large numbers from the cities throughout the State to his desolate home, there came out from the lumber-camps, up in the pine woods, red-shirted, kind-hearted lumbermen, to take their part, with bowed heads and tear-blinded eyes, in the last sad rites at his grave.

Mr. Price was a restless man, impatient of restraint, intolerant of opposition, recognizing no obstacle as absolutely insurmountable. Intense, progressive, and a radical in everything, he rarely hesitated to express his opinion of men and things. He was strong in his friendships, bitter in his hatreds, always outspoken and blunt, sometimes harsh in his judgment of friends, sometimes unjust, doubtless, to opponents, but there was in him and in his life so much of generous impulse, of good neighborship, of sympathy for all who suffered, of honest, faithful public service, and of genuine love of country, that he was popular with the whole people of his State, and had troops of partisans and personal friends.

He was of nervous temperament, physically vigorous, and quick of movement, and of exceedingly active and acute mind. With all the details of his great business operations pressing upon him he would attend a session of the Legislature, never voting for an unnecessary adjournment, always at his post, mastering the details of legislation, investigating with scrupulous care all bills proposing to take money from the public Treasury, and contributing his full share and more to the debates of the session. Quick of thought and speech, he analyzed well, and possessed, too, in a rare degree the power of generalization. Such a man could not fail to be a formidable and dangerous antagonist in debate.

I do not remember to have known a more rapid speaker, either in the halls of legislation or on the stump. He was phenomenally quick at repartee, and excelled in vituperative eloquence, but he could be, when the fancy moved him, pathetic also, and I have heard many times from his lips, as a legislator, speeches eloquent and thrilling in words of denunciation and eloquent and thrilling also in words of tenderness and pathos. No man who knew him, or knew of him, will gainsay my statement that he was, taken all in all, a brilliant man.

During the years of my acquaintance with him he was a Republican, sturdy and steadfast in the essential principles of the party, but not always in strict accord with its policies. There were times when he differed from the party; and when he differed from it the party always knew it, and upon what ground he differed. He never concealed his views upon any subject, and though he was thought sometimes to have strayed from the party fold, none denied his right to sit in the party councils, for no one doubted his integrity.

He was a man of great physical courage, and of great moral courage. He would not tolerate an imposition or insult, and he was absolutely fearless of any man anywhere, and yet he was not immodest or without distrust of himself.

He was an attractive speaker to almost any audience. Men always listened to him when he spoke. He was not always right. Who is? He was always earnest, sincere, bright, and original. He hated sham, and was always ready to attack it wherever he found it. He was an iconoclast. He had little reverence for tradition. With him no evil acquired immunity from attack by lapse of time, nor did age constitute a safe armor against his lance.

To the National Congress he brought excellent legislative training, a keen sense of fidelity to public trust, peculiar ability, and a high and reasonable ambition to excel. That he won his way and much impressed himself upon the body of which he was a member eminent associates, oblivious to party lines, warmly testify. He was a substantial factor in Congressional legislation, not simply for the intelligent labor which he performed in committee, nor for the measures which he drafted, and the success of which he promoted, but also in debate.

He compelled attention, challenged investigation, and whether right or wrong in his premises and conclusion, made those around him think. Nothing escaped him. He was pitiless in exposing hypocrisy and denouncing what he deemed extravagance, whether it was in the appropriation of a million dollars to an unwise purpose or a trifling waste of public money in a Congressional funeral or junket. In the State Legislature, as in the higher field of legislation to which he was called, he was careful of the public money. In his view he had no right to be generous with it, as he might be with his own. He was a terror to the promoters of suspicious claims upon the Treasury, and deemed himself absolutely limited as a legislator, in the disbursement of the people's money, to objects and purposes going obviously and directly to the general public good. Sentiment went for little with him in justification of the expenditure of money from the Treasury, and so sometimes to some men he seemed parsimonious may be, but this was his philosophy as to the obligation of a public servant.

He was very tender of the honor of his city, of his county, of his State, and of the nation. If the people made a bad bargain, through legislation or otherwise, however unpopular it grew in time, William T. Price would fight determinedly against its repudiation, and for its enforcement, not in letter simply, but in spirit also. Every man who knew him and his history in the State will recall, as I do, more than one instance in which he upheld what he deemed to be a moral obligation of the people, when it brought to him for the time nothing but obloquy, distrust, and abuse.

He was a strong advocate always and everywhere of the rights of women, and of every proposition in legislation which would release them from what he deemed the bondage of the common law and place within their easy reach facilities for education and independence more in harmony with the growing civilization of the world.

He was a devoted friend of the soldier, and a zealous advocate of liberal pensions to the soldier and the soldier's widow and orphan. This was with him little less than a passion. In his very soul he believed that to the valor and endurance of the grand army which marched to the defense of the Union the people, South as well as North, owed a debt which could never be discharged.

There was in his heart, too, a sense of individual obligation to the Union soldier for his home, his fortune, his future, and the happiness and prosperity of those whom he held dear. The faded, dust-stained, battle-torn uniform of the Federal soldier was to him brighter than the purple robes of royalty, and an honorable discharge from the Union Army was in his opinion the highest patent of nobility that could come to any man on earth; and so it was that he labored in season and out of season for the benefit of the soldier, and "pension night" always found William T. Price in his seat.

He had upon this subject, as upon all others, his own notions, and the RECORD shows him to have voted alone sometimes when it would have been much easier for him to have gone with the multitude. Whatever may be said of his positions, none but his enemies questioned his motives, and even they could not fail to admire his moral courage.

He was a public spirited and generous man. Public improvements found in him always a firm friend. When a charity was to be inaugurated the first man to head a subscription paper was Mr. Price; when a church debt, whatever the denomination, was to be lifted he put his shoulder under the load; when a public library was to be procured he was princely and prompt in his donation.

His secretary tells me that when at the end of the last session, weary and ill, he was going home to rest he assisted him to reckon up his expenditures for the session, and Mr. Price found himself about $900 short and unaccounted for. Upon investigation he discovered that he had sent it in little sums from time to time during the session to soldiers and soldiers' widows and orphans, whose pitiful letters had touched his heart, and who were waiting in distress for the day to come when the Pension Department should afford them relief.

The circle of his private benefactions was a large one. No one but he knew how large it was, for he gave in his own way, and in his own time, and published no bulletin of his charities. He was the good angel of many a poor man's home. When the specter of starvation stood at the threshhold Price drove it away. When sickness came to a neighhor, and the shadow of death settled upon any one's home within his knowledge, he was there, in his own way, and it was not quite like any other man's way, to comfort and to help.

No reasonably complete sketch of Mr. Price's life can be silent as to his attitude upon the question of temperance. In the early days of his Wisconsin life, and while yet his home was on the frontier, he sometimes joined the revels of the hardy and adventurous men by whom he was surrounded; but long, long years ago he turned with loathing from the wine-cup, and to the hour of his death was a strong, active, aggressive temperance orator and agitator, and so known throughout the State.

He was a firm believer in prohibition and strove earnestly and persistently to bring it about, but he always sought the accomplishment of this purpose within the ranks of his own political party. He considered the traffic in intoxicating drink an unmitigated curse, and was opposed to recognizing its legality by license laws or otherwise. He demanded its obliteration. In the lecture-room, on the stump, in the Legislature, in the Halls of Congress, everywhere, he never failed to denounce it with all the power and eloquence and sarcasm which he possessed, and he everywhere pleaded with powerful pathos for all the good which temperance brings and which drunkenness destroys.

He had bitterness of heart and speech for those, whether men or women, who tempted, anywhere on the earth, a brother to put the chalice to his lips; but, Mr. President, he had even womanly tenderness and pity and a patience almost more than human for him who was held in thralldom by the habit of drink. To such he was patient, watchful, helpful. No matter how often they stumbled and fell, his hand was outstretched to them, and many such an one encouraged, aided, and strengthened by him, was led

> To build a new life on a ruined life,
> To make the future fairer than the past,
> And make the past appear a troubled dream.

In the region where he lived, and lies buried, many a child has been and will be taught to look upon his pictured face as that of the friend whose sympathy and substantial help led the husband and father of that household out from the blackness of night into the soft, sweet light of a happy home.

Mr. Price was very near to the popular heart in Wisconsin, and his name and fame will be always bright among her treasures. His most exacting friend can wish for him no better epitaph than the true story of what he did and was, and no nobler monument than that which he himself did build.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives communicating the intelligence of the death of Hon. William H. Cole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives; which were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 28, 1887.

Resolved, That the business of this House be suspended that appropriate honors may be paid to the memory of Hon. William H. Cole, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Cole the country has sustained the loss of a patriotic citizen and a most faithful public servant.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. I submit a series of resolutions, and ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. William H. Cole, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Maryland, and tenders to the relatives of the deceased the assurance of their sympathy with them under their bereavement.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. Cole a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, in asking the Senate to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life and public services of the Hon. William H. Cole, late a Representative from the State of Maryland, it is my privilege to bear testimony to the personal worth, the private character, and public services of one I have known intimately for many years.

The condition of the public business at this late stage of the session forbids any elaborate eulogy on any deceased friend, but it is my pleasure to be able to look back upon his life and find no failure of duty, no betrayal of trust; and to be able to say of him that in every position to which he was called the discharge of duty in a faithful, unobtrusive manner was the one object of his life.

As a member of the press of the city of Baltimore he brought to his work a well-cultivated and improved mind, an integrity of purpose, and a regard for the rights and character of others, which made him a most valuable contributer to the public journals of that city. His personal qualifications soon attracted attention, and he was selected for various public places; as reading clerk to the city council, and of the house of delegates he became familiar with legislative routine, and well fitted for the duties of Representative of the people in the Congress of the United States.

As a member of the House, he devoted himself to the business matters of his constituents with the Government of the United States, preferring to serve in a useful way those who had honored him, than to attempt a more imposing rôle. And in that line of duty his immediate constituents have never had a more zealous, industrious, and indefatigable Representative.

He applied himself with vigor and intelligence to every minute detail of the business of his constituents, and the records of the Departments of the Government will bear testimony that he left no duty unperformed and no trust unexecuted. Nor was this duty a light one, the proximity of his district to the capital of the country, and as a part of a large, prospering city like Baltimore, brought more of the Departmental work upon Mr. Cole than perhaps fell to the lot of any other Representative.

Under the severe strain of harrowing disease this duty was performed from day to day, but no bodily pain was permitted to interfere with its performance. This unselfish devotion to the business of his constituents won for him a more than political regard; it created a warm affection which will cause his services to be long and affectionately remembered.

His election to the House of Representatives was secured by no brilliant public service, it was won by personal regard, by personal popularity, and by a feeling on the part of the people of his district that he had, in other positions of public trust to which he had been appointed, so faithfully discharged his duty that he deserved a reward of higher honor and more extended responsibility.

His private as well as his public life was without a blemish. He was a dutiful son, a faithful and affectionate husband, a kind and generous friend, as well as a worthy citizen.

It would give me a sad pleasure, Mr. President, to dwell longer on the virtues and usefulness of my deceased friend, but I know at this hour of the session public duty demands the sacrifice of some of that honor which the Senate would under other circumstances be glad to pay to the memory of a faithful, industrious member of Congress.

The State has lost a good citizen, the district an earnest Representative, society a useful member, and a large circle of friends mourn the death of one near and dear to them.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. President, I had not the slightest expectation till just before the recess of the Senate this evening that I should be called upon to participate in these ceremonies. Although poorly prepared for the duty, I feel that I can not properly decline its attempted discharge.

When I entered this Chamber on the 19th day of March, 1885, to take the oath of office as a member of this body the first man I saw was William H. Cole, a Representative from my State in the other House.

I have often thought of the startled gesture of surprise which he involuntarily made when he first saw me, a pale, thin, haggard man, just arisen from a bed of dangerous and protracted illness. To me, small then did the chances appear that I would live as a friend to lament his death, and as a fellow Representative in Congress to lay a tribute upon his grave. To all outward appearance he was then a man of strong vitality, being of large frame and of superfluous flesh. But even then the insidious approaches of disease were undermining his health, and it soon became apparent that he was hastening to the grave.

Limited as we now are as to time, being in the last busy hours of an expiring Congress, I for one am not willing that we shall adjourn without a few words of respect towards an honest and worthy man, who died in the service of his country as a member of Congress. Better, far better that the custom of delivering eulogies upon deceased members should forever cease than that any one of such a class should be remitted by us to an unhonored and forgotten grave.

Sir, Dr. Cole was to me a comparative stranger. I had not often met him before the beginning of the present Congress. His health was so poor during the first year of its duration that our opportunities for social or business intercourse was quite limited before disease laid its hand upon him so heavily as to hold him a prisoner in his home.

But what I had been permitted to see of him fully prepared me to believe what others in the spirit of intimate acquaintance and of friendship have said of him, that he was a man of an unselfish nature, strong devotion to duty, generous and steady friendship, open-hearted charity, genial and kindly disposition, strong convictions, and indomitable energy.

Those who knew him most intimately thought that his great power of will actually stayed the progress of disease and the arrival of the mortal hour. However this may be, it is certain that this strong trait of character, which lies as much at the foundation of human greatness as even great abilities, bore him steadily on to the goal of his ambition, a seat in Congress.

Fortunately for the success of this dream of his earlier life, after his return to Maryland at the close of the war, he embarked in the honorable profession of journalism. With the exception of the law (and it sometimes seems as if it might in time even outstrip that noble calling) no other profession is better calculated to fully equip an ambitious man for success in the political world than that of a journalist. From it have already sprung some of our ablest, most successful, and useful public men.

It will inevitably prove a more and more potent factor in controlling and shaping the destinies of the civilized world. It must be the devout wish of every patriot's heart, that, fully knowing their power for weal or woe to their country and to mankind, the members of this noble profession will strive for a lofty ideal in their high calling, and will continually aim to keep up at a high standard that statesmanship which is becoming, day by day, more and more linked with their own aims and aspirations.

Dr. Cole's connection with journalism was, no doubt, the stepping stone for him to a seat in Congress. But just there the fell destroyer cut short his career, leaving him no room, but for a short time, to show his great zeal and untiring devotion to the interests of his State and of his immediate constituents. As he was devoted and true in every other relation of life, so he was in that one upon which depends more than upon all others the happiness of our race, that of a husband and head of a family. And as such devotion deserved, he was blessed with a partner in his joys and in his sorrows whose pleasure and pride it ever was nobly to cheer and help him onward in all his efforts and aspirations.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the resolutions offered by my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, in respect to the memory of our late associates in the public service, the deceased members of the House of Representatives from the States of Maryland, New York, and Wisconsin, whose lives and characters have been so feelingly portrayed to us to-night, I move that the Senate now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 2, at 11 o'clock a. m.

---

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1887.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. MAXEY (at 11 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m.). I think we would save time by dispensing with the reading of the Journal; and I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects, and the reading of the Journal will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; and it was approved.

A. H. LAZARE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 22d ultimo, requesting copies of certain letters, dated June 8, 1886, and September 20, 1886, addressed by the counsel of A. H. Lazare to the Secretary of State, in regard to the award against the Republic of Hayti in favor of A. H. Lazare, under the protocol signed by the Secretary of State and the minister of Hayti on May 24, 1884, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State upon the subject.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 1, 1887.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedule of claims allowed by the Sixth Auditor on account of compensation of postmasters readjusted under the act of March 3, 1883; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, stating that a reply to the resolution of February 11, 1887, calling for a copy of Col. Henry B. Carrington's History of the Indian Operations on the Plains will be furnished as soon as practicable; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 11, 1887, the correspondence with General Miles relative to the surrender of Geronimo; which was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] who called for that information is not present; and I move that this communication, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting certain judgments against the United States in the Court of Claims rendered too late to be reported to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. HALE. I wish it to be sent to the Committee on Appropriations without printing, because the committee wishes to consider it to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without printing.

BRIDGE BETWEEN OMAHA AND COUNCIL BLUFFS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes; which was, after the word "bridge," in line 13, at the end of section 4, to insert:

And all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them, including the fixing of compensation for the use of said bridge, shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Inasmuch as the amendment of the House of Representatives is the usual provision incorporated in bills of this kind, providing for the use of the bridge by other companies on the payment of reasonable compensation, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 10146) authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River and a certain island therein; and

A bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] had that bill in charge. He is absent.

Mr. PALMER. I was going to say that I only want to enter the motion now, and I will speak to the Senator from Kansas when he comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill indicated by him was passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg leave to insist, until the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] shall come in, that the motion to reconsider be now put. I do not intend to interrupt anybody, but I think the Senator from Kansas, as it is said that we are getting toward the end of the session, ought to have the opportunity, without having a struggle to get it up again, to consider whether he would not like the question of reconsideration determined at once, if the Chair will kindly wait for a moment until he comes in.

Mr. PALMER. I suppose that I have a right to the notification of a day under the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Michigan has the right to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I knew he had the right to make the motion and to have it go on the Calendar if nobody insisted on its being put now; but I do not think the rules provide for any entering of a motion. He makes a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been the uniform practice that a motion to reconsider is entered for subsequent consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly, the motion is made and placed on the Calendar, or somewhere, or is disposed of instanter, as the Senate may determine. My request was that the Senator in charge of the bill should have the opportunity to take the judgment of the Senate as to what it will do with the motion now before it passes away, as a mere matter of fairness to him. I do not care anything about it.

Mr. PALMER. I will say that I wish all the rights of the Senator from Kansas to be preserved in the matter, and I should not object when he came in to taking any course he saw fit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right. That settles it.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to understand whether the Senator from Michigan enters a motion to reconsider, or whether he gives notice of such a motion.

Mr. CAMERON. He gives notice.

Mr. TELLER. Then it will be in order to move to lay that on the table, will it not? I will move to lay that motion on the table, unless the Senator has some particular reason that I would not wish to interfere with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the matter has passed from the consideration of the Senate, the motion having been entered and agreed to be laid over until the Senator from Kansas comes in. The presentation of petitions is now in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Charles D. Lippincott and other druggists, of Titusville, Pa., praying for the repeal of internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BERRY. I present a petition of fifteen hotel and boarding-house keepers in Hot Springs, Ark., one hundred and forty-eight visitors and persons who bathe there, and from the president of the board of health and twenty-eight resident physicians of Hot Springs, Ark., praying that the bath-houses located off the reservation be not deprived of the use of the hot water.

I desire to state very briefly in connection with the petition that under the ruling of Secretary Schurz, when he was Secretary of the Interior, bath-houses were authorized to be erected off the reservation to be supplied with hot water from the reservation. Mr. Montgomery, the Assistant Attorney-General, has recently given an opinion that the Secretary of the Interior has no power to allow hot water to be taken off the reservation. There is a bill pending here, unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands, settling this entire Hot Springs matter. I have tried from time to time to get the consideration of that bill, but have failed. When it is in order, I propose to introduce a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to continue the supply to the bath-houses off the reservation, provided it shall in no wise interfere with the supply necessary to the Army and Navy Hospital and the bath-houses on the reservation.

If it is in order now, by unanimous consent, to present the resolution, I wish to do so, and ask for its immediate consideration. If not in order I shall present it when in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not now in order. What disposition does the Senator desire to be made of the petition?

Mr. BERRY. I ask that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented resolutions adopted by Meade Post, No. 50, Grand Army of the Republic, Anita, Iowa, and resolutions adopted by Annett Post, No. 124, Grand Army of the Republic, Spencer, Iowa, urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON presented resolutions adopted by Roberts Post, No. 104, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Nebraska, of Brock, Nebr., a resolution adopted by Whitehead Post, No. 114, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Nebraska, of Orleans, Nebr., and a resolution adopted by McPherson Post, No. 4, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Nebraska, of Fremont, Nebr., in favor of the passage of the dependent relative and service pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR presented resolutions adopted by John Sedgwick Post, No. 4, Grand Army of the Republic, Keene, N. H., urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHACE presented the memorial of Alfred H. Love, of Philadelphia, Pa., on behalf of the Universal Peace Union, remonstrating against the passage of all bills for warlike purposes, and favoring the passage of bills providing for peaceful negotiation and arbitration; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3320) to create a naval reserve of auxiliary cruisers, officers, and men from the mercantile marine of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am authorized informally by such members of the Committee on the Judiciary as I could consult, to report and ask to be discharged from the consideration of Senate bill 3349, respecting the rectification of certain defects in some acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory on account of a trouble in their title, or something, which should have gone to the Committee on Territories. I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3349) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6535) to close the account of Franklin W. McCauley, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10146) authorizing the city of Winona, Minn., to construct a bridge across a part of the Mississippi River and a certain island therein, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Georgiana M. Amidon (represented to be the sole heir of General Frederic T. Ward, deceased), praying for such assistance as Congress can afford in procuring a settlement of a claim which she makes against the Chinese Government for the services rendered by General Ward to that government, submitted a report thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES.

Mr. MANDERSON. From the Committee on Printing I report favorably, with amendments, the joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, and William H. Cole, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The first amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 12, after the word "Representatives," to insert:

SEC. 2. That there be also printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Austin F. Pike, a Senator from New Hampshire, 12,000 copies, of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, before the word "And," to insert "Sec. 3," and to strike out "And" and insert "That;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 15, before the word "William," to strike out the word "and," and in the same line, after the word "Cole," to insert "and Austin F. Pike;" so as to read:

William T. Price, William H. Cole, and Austin F. Pike.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" so as to read:

The sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, William H. Cole, and Austin F. Pike."

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

CUSTOMS FRAUDS AT NEW YORK.

Mr. ALDRICH. By direction of the Committee on Finance, I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Finance Committee have power to continue the investigation into undervaluations of imported merchandise during the recess of Congress, subject to the provisions and with the powers granted in the resolutions of the Senate of December 21, 1885, and January 19, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that wait a little while. I want to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects, and the resolution goes over.

Mr. VANCE. I move to take up, if it be in order—to take up a bill that is on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of morning business is not yet closed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am advised by people a great deal wiser than I am that it is really essential to the public interest that this resolution about the Finance Committee should go through, and therefore, under that friendly compulsion that I always yield to, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR, March 1, reported it without amendment; and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit during the coming recess of Congress for the purpose of continuing the investigation ordered by the Senate by the resolutions of January 26 and 28, 1887; and that the necessary expenses be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or by the chairman of a subcommittee.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to amend the resolution by putting in the words "and to employ a clerk." I do not know that it is necessary, but the insertion of the words would make it clear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Congress" insert the words "and to employ a clerk;" so as to read:

That the Committee on Privileges and Electons be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit during the coming recess of Congress, and to employ a clerk, for the purpose of continuing the investigation, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad; wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points;

A bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of the Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. BERRY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 117) to authorize the use of hot water off the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BERRY. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to continue to furnish to bath-houses located off the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., a sufficient amount of hot water for drinking and bathing purposes: Provided, That furnishing such bath-houses shall in no way interfere with the supply of hot water necessary for the use of the army and navy hospital and for the bath-houses located upon the permanent reservation.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is to be now considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A joint resolution offered by the Senator from Arkansas. It will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that reported from a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is introduced by the Senator from Arkansas this morning.

Mr. BERRY. If I may be permitted I will state to the Senator from Vermont that there is a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands embodying this idea with many other provisions, for which we have failed to get consideration.

The Secretary of the Interior heretofore ruled that certain bath-houses located off the reservation could be furnished with the waste water that was not used for those on it. The Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. Montgomery, has recently given an opinion that no such authority exists. That water has been furnished for eight or ten years. I presented a petition here from a large number of citizens, physicians, and others, asking that that practice be continued until legislation can be had—to just let it remain as it is until consideration can be had.

I stated that the Committee on Public Lands unanimously reported in favor of allowing the supply to continue, and that was upon a bill and not upon a joint resolution. I have been forced to introduce the joint resolution because I could not get consideration of the bill. It does not interfere with any of the bath-houses or with the Army and Navy Hospital. It simply provides that the present practice may continue until legislation can be had on the subject, provided that it shall not interfere with bath-houses on the reservation or with the Army and Navy Hospital. I think that there is no one at the Hot Springs or elsewhere who can properly object to the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly am very much indisposed to hasty legislation, but as this is a case where hot water for cleansing purposes seems to be necessary (and I am sorry I can not pour it upon some of our legislation) I shall not object if my friend will add to the joint resolution what is probably entirely unnecessary, "subject to any further action of Congress on the subject," so as to make it clear that this is not a grant in any way that would give these people a right to say that they were entitled to some redress or payment if it should be cut off.

Mr. BERRY. I will add those words with very great pleasure.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to the joint resolution:

Subject to any further action of Congress on the subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA STREET RAILROADS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 10899, and the said bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. CAMERON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution being objected to, lies over.

Mr. VAN WYCK subsequently said: I ask consent to withdraw the last clause in the resolution I submitted during the call for morning business. I ask to modify the resolution by withdrawing that clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution proposed to be modified by the Senator from Nebraska.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 10899, and the said bill be taken up for consideration.

It is proposed to strike out the words "and the said bill be taken up for consideration."

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the resolation went over under objection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But I ask consent that it may be modified, so that when taken up to-morrow the resolution will stand as I now propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification will be made.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas rise to morning business?

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to morning business. I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], entered some time ago, to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed yesterday the bill known as the Ontonagon land-grant forfeiture bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator pardon the Chair a moment? The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] has taken the floor, and seems to have morning business.

CAMPBELL'S IMPROVED LEDGER.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I report favorably from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] January 31, 1887. I ask its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase, for use in the Senate folding-room, Campbell's Copyright Improved Method and Distributing Ledger at a price fixed by said committee, the amount thus fixed to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund.

FLORA F. FARLEY.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I report back from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] February 26, 1887, with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be placed in the amendments to the deficiency appropriation bill.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay to Flora F. Farley, widow of Hon. James T. Farley, late a Senator from California, deceased, the sum of $1,248.80 out of the contingent fund of the Senate, being the amount which would have been due him for mileage had he attended the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate House bill 679.

That is a bill which passed the Senate some time ago, having been amended here. I ask to have it returned. When it is returned, if it shall be returned, I will ask the Senate, on considerations which I shall present, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was amended.

Mr. CONGER. What is the bill?

Mr. PLUMB. A bill to open up to settlement and homestead lands lying south of Kansas.

Mr. CONGER. What was done with the Senator's other motion?

Mr. PLUMB. I will renew that in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MICHIGAN LAND GRANT.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was a resolution which came over from yesterday——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of morning business has not yet been concluded. Are there further resolutions?

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to lay on the table the motion entered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c.

Mr. CONGER. The slight mingling of courtesy with the zeal with which the Senator proposes to table the motion made by my colleague, on which he wished to make some remarks, I think will strike the Senator himself as being a little peculiar. It is not usual when a Senator makes a motion to reconsider for the purpose of making some remarks that he should be cut off from the opportunity of so doing. I do not know how long the morning hour will be; but if the Senator wishes to give opportunity for some comments on this occasion both by my colleague and myself, we may as well perhaps take up the matter now as at any other time.

Mr. PLUMB. The defenseless position of the Senator's colleague excites my commiseration. I supposed if he had anything to say about it he would say it himself. I was not aware before that he desired to make any remarks on the subject.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator himself knows that there is considerable responsibility resting both on my colleague and myself from the remarks my colleague did make yesterday, and following those remarks, even with the valuable assistance of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], in a thin house, the Senator from Kansas succeeded in getting, not a majority of the Senators as we know, but a majority of the persons present, to vote us down. It seems to me the matter ought to be considered further. We ought not to have a snap judgment coming in that way, and especially taking up a motion made by another Senator and disposing of it in a somswhat hasty way.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not aware of anybody except a Senator who can make a motion on this floor, and consequently that suggestion does not strike me as of any importance. If the Senator has not had a chance to talk about Ontonagon, I am the last man in the world who would want to cut him off.

Mr. CONGER. We have not quite had the opportunity our constituents desire, and many Senators would like to hear us further on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will conclude the call for morning business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the morning business is concluded I should like a resolution that comes over from yesterday to be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to call for further resolutions.

CUSTOMS NIGHT INSPECTORS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury report to the Senate at his earliest convenience the rules and regulations in force at the custom-houses in New York during the years 1876 to 1878, and at Baltimore during the years 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, and 1875 in regard to the duties and the hours of service of night inspectors, and whether any of such night inspectors performed services for a greater length of time than others, and, if so, under what circumstances and regulations and at what prices, and how and by whom paid; whether any such night inspectors at the time made or presented any claim or demand for any other or greater compensation than they received, and, if so, the names of such night inspectors, and the nature and amount of their claims or demands, and what action has been taken thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Clara G. Scott have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relating to her claim for pension, no adverse report having been made.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY LEGISLATIVE ACTS.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I ask leave at this time to make a report from the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. I report back favorably from the Committee on Territories, with an amendment, the bill (S. 3349) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and for other purposes, and I ask that the bill may be now considered.

Mr. CAMERON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut reports the bill named by him and asks for its immediate consideration. The Chair understands the Senator from Pennsylvania to object.

Mr. CAMERON. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill just reported by him.

Mr. HARRIS. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT. I ask to be heard one moment with relation to this matter, and I ask that the Senate may be in order that I may be heard.

The Revised Statutes require that every act which is passed in Washington Territory shall contain but one object and shall state the object in its title. The Territory, overlooking this law, has passed several acts without stating the object in the title, and some containing more than one object. This bill simply provides that those acts shall be validated so far as those defects are concerned. It will pass upon the mere reading.

Mr. HARRIS. If the bill will lead to no debate I shall withdraw the objection I made, but if it leads to any debate I must insist on the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3349) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and for other purposes.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Territories was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That any act heretofore passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, and approved by the governor of said Territory, which has failed to express in its title the object embraced in the act, as required by section 1924 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which has embraced therein more than one object, in contravention of said section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, validated so far as respects the defect before mentioned, and any such act shall continue to be subject to be disapproved by Congress as other acts of said Legislative Assembly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOGNITION OF HUMANE TREATMENT.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report favorably an amendment to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill. I desire to have it read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

To enable the President to extend to the inhabitants of the island of Tanegashima, Japan, some suitable recognition of their kind and humane treatment of the survivors of the crew of the American bark Cashmere, lost off that coast in 1885, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FRYE. I move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendment be printed?

Mr. FRYE. No, there is not time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred without printing.

Mr. FRYE. That is what I desire.

JOHN R. REYNOLDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on the 28th of February, which comes over under the rule, and which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the claim of John R. Reynolds, now of the city of Dayton, in the State of Ohio, and late of the State of Mississippi, for quartermaster and commissary stores and supplies and other property alleged to have been sold to and taken and used by the United States Army during the late war from the plantation of said Reynolds, in the vicinity of Natchez, Miss., be referred to the Secretary of War, who shall investigate the justice and equity of said claim and the loyalty of said claimant, and report the amount and value of said supplies sold to the said Army, and the amount and value of other said property taken and used by the said Army, and also what amount, if any, has been paid on the same, and that he report all the facts and evidence in the case for the further consideration of the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report favorably a resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] on the 28th of February. I ask its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, continued and authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, and that the necessary expenses thereof be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

EXTRA PAY TO CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am also instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 107) providing for one month's extra pay for certain employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, to report it favorably without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. If it will not involve discussion.

Mr. CAMERON. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CRISP, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. HAYDEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of the Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points; and

A bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to move that the bridge bills which have come and are coming over from the House may be referred to the Committee on Commerce without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made without objection. The bills will not be sent to the Printing Office.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order. I move that the Senate proceed to consider House bills under the Harris rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar favorably reported under what is known as the Harris rule.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case will be stated.

DISTRICT SCHOOL BOARD.

The bill (H. R. 9125) to create a school board for the District of Columbia, and to prescribe its powers and duties was announced as first in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to consider the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. CULLOM. Is that in order during the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust it will not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, that the Senate proceed to consider the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was not agreed to.

PORT OF ENTRY AT HARTFORD, CONN.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the next case on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator listen to me a moment? I ask for the consideration of a House bill favorably reported, coming under our rule, but we skipped it the other day for a temporary reason.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it was passed over without prejudice, it can be called up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the bill was passed over retaining its place on the Calendar, it can be called up.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill is Order of Business 1950, being the bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry, in place of Middletown.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that the regular order under the rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the bill was passed over on a previous day informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. And so can be called up at any time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so advised.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry, in place of Middletown.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. This bill comes from the House of Representatives, and has been reported upon favorably by the Committee on Commerce. Its consideration was delayed here that certain opponents might be heard. They have had their hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, and the report is adhered to by that committee—a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce. It is simply changing the port of entry in the Connecticut River district from Middletown to Hartford. At Middletown last year they collected $500, and at Hartford $250,000, and the collector has to live at Hartford and do his work there. We want to make that the port of entry. The Treasury Department unqualifiedly recommends it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not presume at this stage of the session, with the report of the Committee on Commerce in favor of this House bill, I can prevent its passage, but I simply want to say that it does not receive my support.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. MORRISON.

Mr. KENNA. I ask to have taken up at this time Order of Business 2259.

Mr. CAMERON. I object.

Mr. KENNA. If the Senate will let me have a half minute to make a single statement, I am sure no Senator will object.

This bill has passed the House unanimously, and it is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs here. The old gentleman interested is about to be thrown out of his home. I hope the Senate will consider the bill. It will not take a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 2259, being the bill (H. R. 2629) for the relief of William M. Morrison.

Mr. CAMERON. I object.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill in order will be stated.

ALFRED HEDBERG.

The bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 6, before the words "of infantry," to strike out "captain" and insert "second lieutenant," and in line 7, after "United States," to strike out "with his former rank and date of commission;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Alfred Hedberg (late a captain in the Fifteenth Infantry) a second lieutenant of infantry in the Army of the United States; and that he, the said Alfred Hedberg, shall be assigned to the first vacancy of his grade occurring in the Fifteenth Regiment of the United States Army: Provided, That said Alfred Hedberg shall receive no pay for the time he was out of service, but only from the date of his appointment under this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am opposed to this bill and to the principle that is involved in it. It is an attempt to restore to the Army an officer who has been cashiered and dismissed. It is a dangerous proceeding; it is demoralizing to the Army; it is bidding defiance to the courts-martial for the trial of cases and the action of the President in approving their findings. Now I ask that the record of the court-martial in this case, with the charges and specifications and the findings, may be read. Here is an official copy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper sent up by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the paper.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the further consideration of this bill. It is manifestly a long case.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the reading must be very nearly done. I am unable to know what the Chief Clerk has been reading; but evidently it must be very nearly completed. I know that the bill will take a little time, unexpectedly very much to my regret, but I think the bill is a matter of justice. It will not take much time to complete the reading now. It is about as short to go through the woods at once as to put off the journey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio insist on his objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not if it will take but a moment to complete the reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand that under the present order of the Senate under the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] one objection carries a bill over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it carries a bill over, but it is subject to be moved for consideration notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be proceeded with if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the paper, as follows:

GENERAL COURT-MARTIAL ORDERS NO. 4.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January, 15, 1873.

I. Before a general court-martial which convened at Santa Fé, N. Mex., August 8, 1872, pursuant to Special Orders No. 105, dated June 21; No. 113, dated July 12; No. 122, dated July 26; and No. 125, dated August 1, 1872, Headquarters Department of the Missouri, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and of which Lieut. Col. Frederick Myers, deputy quartermaster-general, United States Army, is president, was arraigned and tried:

Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Infantry.

CHARGE I. "Violation of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1863, entitled 'An act to prevent and punish frauds upon the United States.'"

Specification 1.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being on duty as commanding officer, post of Fort Cummings, New Mexico, did, by virtue of his official position as such, enter the carpenter shop of the United States Quartermaster's Department at said post, and did take therefrom one hundred tools, the property of the United States, consisting of brace-bits, augers, chisels, gauges, gimlets, chalk-lines, planes, rules, square, saws, tap, and die, for which Second Lieut. Edmund T. Ryan, Fifteenth United States Infantry, acting assistant quartermaster, is responsible to the United States, and that said Captain Hedberg did, wrongfully and knowingly, sell, convey, and dispose of said tools, and appropriate the same to his own use and benefit, the said tools having been furnished by the United States to be used in the military service thereof. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about and between the 15th day of January, 1871, and the 16th day of September, 1871."

Specification 2.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being on duty as commanding officer, Post of Fort Cummings, N. Mex., did, by virtue of his official position as such, enter the United States commissary store-room at said post, and did take and cause to be taken therefrom 650 pounds of bacon, the property of the United States, and for which Second Lieut. Edmund T. Ryan, Fifteenth Infantry, acting commissary of subsistence, is responsible, and did, wrongfully and knowingly, sell, convey, and dispose of the said bacon, and appropriate the same to his own use and benefit, and said bacon having been furnished by the United States, to be used in the military service thereof. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about the 1st day of December, 1871."

CHARGE II.—"Conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman."

(Specifications 1 and 2 will not be published.)

Specification 3.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, when asked by Second Lieut. Edmund T. Ryan, Fifteenth Infantry, A. A. Q. M., whether he, Captain Hedberg, had taken or caused to be taken, from the quartermaster's storehouse, four sets of ambulance harness, the property of the United States, for which he, Lieutenant Ryan, was responsible, did deny all knowledge of the taking of said harness, which said denial was willfully false within the knowledge and intention of said Captain Hedberg, in that he, the said Capt. Alfred Hedberg, had taken, and caused to be taken, the said harness, with intent to appropriate the same to his own use and benefit. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about the 21st of June, 1871."

CHARGE III.—"Conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline."

Specification 1.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being in command of the Post of Fort Cummings, N. Mex., did absent himself from said command over seven days without leave of his superior officer, and visit, during said absence, Camp Bowie, Ariz., distant from his regular station about 114 miles, and did fail to report such absence to his next superior officer, and did take with him on his said visit three enlisted men of his command, and did use for his transportation four mules, the property of the United States, for which the acting assistant quartermaster at said Fort Cummings is responsible. This at the places above specified, and on or about the 5th day of May, 1871."

Specification 2.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being in command of the post of Fort Cummings, N. Mex., did absent himself from said command over seven days, without leave of his superior officer, and visit, during said absence, Camp Bowie, Ariz., distant from his regular station about 114 miles, and did fail to report such absence to his next superior officer, and did take with him on his said visit three enlisted men of his command, and use for his transportation four mules, the property of the United States, for which the acting assistant quartermaster of said Fort Cummings is responsible. This at the places above specified, and on or about the 20th day of December, 1871."

Specification 3.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, did, without authority from his superior officer, send Sergeant John Neagle and two private soldiers of Company E, Fifteenth Infantry, with eight mules, harness, and wagon, complete, the property of the United States, to Camp Bowie, Ariz., in the military department of Arizona, and distant from Fort Cummings, N. Mex., the station of said Captain Hedberg, and the soldiers aforesaid, about 114 miles, he, Captain Hedberg, not intending that the said soldiers and means of transportation aforesaid were to be used on any public business whatever, and in consequence of such action on the part of the said Captain Hedberg, in the said improper application of said means of transportation, one of said mules sickened and died on said journey. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about the 15th day of December, 1871."

Specification 4.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being on duty as commanding officer, post of Fort Cummings, N. Mex., and having ordered privates James Orr and Alexander Hubbard, Company E, Fifteenth Infantry, soldiers of his command, with one army wagon, six mules, and harness, complete (the property of the United States), to proceed to Silver City, near Fort Bayard, N. Mex., on business pertaining to the Quartermaster's Department of said Fort Cummings, and having been notified by Capt. Charles Steelhammer, A. A. Q. M., at said Fort Bayard, that the said enlisted men, with the wagon, mules, and harness aforesaid, had left said Fort Bayard en route for said Fort Cummings, the distance between these posts being two days' march, or about 40 miles, and the said enlisted men, with the means of transportation aforesaid, not having reported at said Fort Cummings within a reasonable time after said notification, did willfully fail and neglect to ascertain the whereabouts of said enlisted men and the means of transportation aforesaid, in consequence of which neglect on the part of said Captain Hedberg the said privates James Orr and Alexander Hubbard made good their escape and deserted the service of the United States, taking with them in their flight the said six mules, with harness and wagon complete, and which were thus lost to the United States. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about the 6th day of January, 1872."

Specification 5.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being in command of Company E, Fifteenth Infantry, and charged with the custody of the fund arising from savings in the economical use of the rations of said company, and having by this means accumulated a fund to the amount of about $100, to be applied to the exclusive use of the enlisted men of said company, and having purchased, about the month of October, 1869, from Mr. R. V. Newsham, of Fort Cummings, N. Mex., five or more hogs, for the sum of $80 (from the said company fund of $100), to be used for the exclusive use and benefit of the enlisted men of said company, and the hogs so purchased having increased by breeding to the number of forty or thereabouts, the said Captain Hedberg did, on or about the month of March, 1871, sell and dispose of said hogs (forty, more or less), to Mr. John Brockman, of the Rio Membries, New Mexico, for the sum of $200 (or the equivalent of $200 in bran, at the rate of 2 cents per pound), and did appropriate and apply the same to his own use and benefit, thereby defrauding the enlisted men of said company and regiment out of the said forty hogs, or their equivalent in money value to the amount of $200. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex."

Specification 6.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being on duty as commanding officer, Post of Fort Cummings, N. Mex., with First Lieut. Julian R. Fitch, Fifteenth United States Infantry, acting assistant quartermaster at said post, did, under a written contract between Maj. J. A. Potter, quartermaster, United States Army, chief quartermaster district of New Mexico, on behalf of the United States, and Mr. J. Edgar Griggs, of Messilla, N. Mex., contractor, of date of October 15, 1870, for the delivery of 200,000 pounds of corn to the United States at said Fort Cummings, agree, fraudulently, to induce the said contractor to allow said Captain Hedberg to deliver to the United States, under said contract, 9,000 pounds of bran in lieu of 15,750 pounds of corn, and in pursuance of said fraudulent agreement, said Captain Hedberg did cause and procure the said quantity of bran, in lieu of said corn, to be delivered as aforesaid, and for which said bran the said Captain Hedberg received payment as for 15,750 pounds of corn, to the amount in money value of $417, from the United States, through said contractor, and that the said Captain Hedberg, in the manner and form aforesaid, did cheat and defraud the United States out of said 15,750 pounds of corn. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about the 9th day of May, 1871."

Specification 7.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being in command of Company E, Fifteenth Infantry, and charged with the custody of the fund, and with keeping the accounts arising from the savings in the economical use of the rations of the enlisted men of said company, did fraudulently and falsely charge said company, and credit himself, Hedberg, in said account with the purchase of 900 pounds of pork, at 28 cents per pound, amounting to $252; which sum he, Hedberg, obtained and collected from the said fund of said company, and appropriated and applied the same to his own use and benefit, thereby defrauding the enlisted men of said company and regiment out of the said sum of $252. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about the 18th day of February, 1871."

Specification 8.—"In that Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Regiment of United States Infantry, being in command of E Company, Fifteenth Infantry, and charged with the custody of the fund and with keeping the accounts arising from the savings in the economical use of the rations of the enlisted men of said company, and having sold 250 pounds of bacon, arising from said savings of said company, for the sum of $75, did appropriate and apply the said $75 to his own use and benefit, thereby defrauding the enlisted men of said company and regiment out of the said sum of $75. This at Fort Cummings, N. Mex., on or about the 15th day of November, 1871."

Charge four and its specification stricken out by the court.

To which charges and specifications the accused, Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Infantry, pleaded "Not guilty."

FINDING.

The court, have maturely considered the evidence adduced, finds the accused, Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Infantry, as follows:

CHARGE I.

Of the first specification, "Guilty, except the words 'carpenter shop,' and substituting therefor the word 'store-room;' of the excepted words not guilty, and of the substituted word guilty."

Of the second specification, "Guilty, except the words 'and appropriate the same to his own use and benefit,' and attach no criminality thereto; of the excepted words not guilty."

Of the charge, "Guilty."

CHARGE II.

Of the first specification, "Guilty."
Of the second specification, "Guilty."
Of the third specification, "Guilty."
Of the charge, "Guilty."

CHARGE III.

Of the first specification, "Guilty, except the words 'over seven days without leave from his superior officer,' and 'and did fail to report such absence to his next superior officer;' of the excepted words, not guilty."

Of the second specification, "Guilty, but attach no criminality to so much of the specification as relates to the absence of the accused from his regular station."

Of the third specification, "Guilty."
Of the fourth specification, "Guilty."
Of the fifth specification, "Guilty."
Of the sixth specification, "Guilty."
Of the seventh specification, "Guilty."
Of the eighth specification, "Guilty."

SENTENCE.

And the court does therefore sentence him, Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Infantry, "To be dismissed and cashiered the service; to refund to the United States the sum of $617, and to Company E, Fifteenth United States Infantry, the sum of $527, and to be confined in such penitentiary as the proper authority may direct for the period of one year, and until such further time as the said sums of money aforesaid shall be refunded; and that the crime, name of the accused, and sentence of the court be published in the Santa Fé New Mexican, Las Cruces Borderer, and the Army and Navy Journal."

II.—In conformity with the 65th of the Rules and Articles of War, the proceedings of the general court-martial in the foregoing case of Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Infantry, have been forwarded to the Secretary of War for the action of the President of the United States.

The department commander approved the proceedings, findings, and sentence, except so much of the sentence as relates to refunding to Company E, Fifteenth Infantry, the sum of $527, which he disapproved as unauthorized by law.

The proceedings, findings, and sentence, with above exception, are approved.

So much of the sentence as relates to confinement in the penitentiary is remitted.

The remainder of the sentence, as approved, will be duly executed.

III.—Capt. Alfred Hedberg, Fifteenth Infantry, ceases to be an officer of the Army from the date of this order.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND, Adjutant-General.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MANDERSON. Let us vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will not occupy the Senate at length in discussing this question, because that would be to trespass too much on their time and patience. I simply say that I am not aware that there has been an adverse report upon this case. It has been in several Congresses. I have here several favorable reports from different committees, all favorable, and all speaking with indignation of the character of the prosecution of this officer.

He was a young Dane, an educated gentleman, who had served in the Army and Navy. He came to this country, but being unable to speak the English language he went in as a private. He rose to be a captain in the regular Army. I have read testimonial after testimonial that he was a specially good soldier and disciplinarian, a gentleman of excellent character and his behavior uniformly excellent.

Here is the record of the court-martial. I affirm that I have read everything that is material in that disagreeable pile of manuscript, and that I believe it was a prosecution unjustified by the evidence. The chief accusation against him that would affect your consideration of his honor was one that he had taken possession of and sold a full set of tools of the Government as his own. It is proved unquestionably in the evidence that—

Hedberg had a full set of tools of his own, which he brought to New Mexico from Texas, and which he permitted to be mingled with the Government tools and used for Government work; and Lieutenant Ryan, who is said to have been responsible for these tools, made two returns of the Government property, with which he was chargeable before he discovered the alleged abstraction of Government tools, and confessed that he never made an inventory of what the Government did own.

Any one who will read the evidence will say that this gentleman of established character would not steal a few tools of the Army.

The other point which would condemn him beyond question, and if he had been properly found guilty of it the committee would have had nothing to say about it, was a charge of rape. I affirm here, upon my judgment as a lawyer and as a fair-minded man that the evidence against him that convicted him of rape ought not to convict the vilest scoundrel in these streets. The alleged rape was committed upon a camp-follower, a disgusting creature who had been a follower of that camp and the wife, nominally, of scores of soldiers in succession. The alleged rape was committed in the camp within 100 yards of where her husband was at work, and where her cry would be heard alarming scores of other people who were within reach. There was no cry heard and no complaint made at the time.

I affirm that five of the officers concerned in that prosecution have been cashiered and dismissed from the Army, and Ryan, the main chief in it, was dismissed for embezzlement and drunkenness. I can give the names of some of them, if it be advisable to add to the disgrace they have already attained. I have here in one of the House reports the name of one Blair. I do not see at this moment the others, but I affirm that five officers connected with that prosecution, and especially the man at the head of that wrong, Ryan, who was chief prosecutor, was dismissed for embezzlement and drunkenness.

Of course it is impossible to go through the argument in detail, but I put against the statement urged here, the mere record of the charges and specifications, the fact that he was not found guilty upon all of them, but mitigating circumstances were found in some of them; and I put against that record the evidence of successive committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate, and the opinion of several officers who formerly served with him in the Army, and the opinion of this committee which has made this report, that it was an unjust prosecution, ay, a persecution, and that upon the dishonorable charges that ought to have dismissed him from the Army there is not sufficient proof on which you would convict a loafer in these streets. That is my candid opinion.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. I have in my hand a letter from an officer connected with the Army in the West, who says:

I never saw Captain Hedberg, and know nothing of him only by reputation, and that is unsavory. We do not want him in our regiment.

In addition to his bad character, if he should come to us he would deprive of promotion one of the most deserving lieutenants of the Army, who fought during the war and has maintained an excellent character in every respect, and who is now fifty-three years old.

I wish to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether if this bill should become a law it would prevent the promotion of the senior lieutenant here referred to?

Mr. HAWLEY. The bills, as originally presented in both the other House and the Senate, provided for putting him back as captain in his former rank and with the former date of commission. That would put him ahead of some officers who have come up since then, and know nothing about these affairs. While it is considered only an act of partial justice, the Senate Military Committee amends the bill to give him the chance to be made a second lieutenant, which will put him at the foot of the Army. It simply restores him to the Army, but bars nobody's promotion, as the Senate committee asks to have the bill passed.

Mr. FRYE. That being the case, I shall make no special opposition.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the names of the officers who were concerned in this matter, and who have since been discharged. They are Colonel Devin, who was aided by Lieutenant Ryan, who was afterwards cashiered for embezzlement and drunkenness; Captain Eckles, Fifteenth Infantry, afterwards cashiered for attempting to bribe a council of administration, and who ran away; Capt. Thomas Blair, alias Thomas Nichols, Fifteenth Infantry, who was court-martialed and dismissed the service for bigamy, having left the country to avoid the civil law.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Were they officers of the court?

Mr. HAWLEY. Some were engaged in the prosecution as witnesses. Judge-Advocate-General Swaim was asked to give an opinion, but did not feel at liberty to do so; still, he made the observation that—

The evidence in support of the findings is exceedingly conflicting, and there is no doubt but the accuser and prosecutor of the charges upon which Captain Hedberg was dismissed was very much prejudiced against him. Aside from this consideration, I believe that previous to his dismissal Captain Hedberg had the reputation of an efficient officer.

Capt. T. H. Norton, United States Army, retired, a commissioned officer of the same regiment, says:

WHEELING, W. VA., October 12, 1874.

DEAR SIR: I am duly in receipt of your letter, dated 3d instant, requesting me to furnish you a certificate of character and conduct during the time you served under my command in the United States Army.

In reply I have to say, that from 1862 until 1870 you were a commissioned officer in the same regiment (Fifteenth United States Infantry) to which I belonged, and that during that period you maintained an excellent reputation as a careful, active, and capable officer and soldier.

Your uprightness and integrity, either personally or officially, were never brought into question, and all your duties were discharged in a manner equally creditable to yourself and satisfactory to your superiors.

I remain, very respectfully, &c.,

T. H. NORTON,
Captain, United States Army, Retired.

ALFRED HEDBERG, Esq.,
Late Captain Fifteenth United States Infantry,
No. 112 Fulton Street, New York.

Capt. A. M. Brown, United States Army, says:

I take great pleasure in offering this letter as my testimony in your behalf, and will say that during the time I have known and served with you that I have never known a more temperate, honest, and efficient officer.

Lieut. Col. John D. Wilkins, Eighth Infantry, says:

FRIEND HEDBERG: In answer to your letter it affords me much pleasure to state that your conduct as an officer and a gentleman during the period you served under my command was excellent. Your strict attention to duty was remarked by me.

I was very much surprised to learn of your misfortune, and hope that you will succeed in clearing up the matter to your satisfaction.

If I can add anything to the above that will assist you, call on me.

N. A. M. Dudley, major Third United States Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army, commanding Fort McPherson, says:

HEADQUARTERS FORT MCPHERSON, NEBR., September 14, 1874.

To whom it may concern:

First Lieut. Alfred Hedberg served as an officer in the Twenty-fourth United States Infantry, under my immediate command and daily observation, about one year, at Vicksburg, Miss., in the years 1865 and 1866, during which time I found him to be a zealous, prompt, and efficient young officer, of good habits, attentive to all his military duties, and at that time few young officers gave promise of higher future usefulness than Lieutenant Hedberg. Since which time I have had no personal knowledge of him.

Wager Swayne, colonel United States Army, retired, writes:

TOLEDO, OHIO, September 3, 1877.

SIR: Alfred Hedberg, late captain Fifteenth United States Infantry, and dismissed in 1873, informs me that he is about to apply for a reconsideration of his case, and asks me for such testimonial as I feel at liberty to give.

I have no personal knowledge which bears on the fact of his dismissal. I only know that while serving with his regiment in 1866–'67 he was for a considerable time under my orders, and strongly attracted my attention by his energy, intelligence, and frankness, and further interested me by the fact that he had certainly rendered good service in fighting for a country to which he was not native. I was surprised and distressed when I heard of his dismissal, which impressed me as very harsh. If there was that about it which can be justly remedied, I trust it may be done.

Your obedient servant.

W. W. Dudley, ex-Commissioner of Pensions, says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In response to your communication of the 18th instant, relative to the standing as a man and an official of Capt. A. Hedberg, of this bureau, I have the honor to state that it gives me pleasure to inform you that so far as my knowledge goes his standing as a man is of the highest character, and his qualifications as a clerk in this office are of the very highest order.

(Captain Hedberg was appointed June 1, 1881.)

Very respectfully,

W. W. DUDLEY, Commissioner.

Hon. MARTIN MCGINNIS,
House of Representatives.

He has been a clerk there nearly ever since his dismissal. His private conduct has been unexceptionable there. Ex-Senator Spencer knew him for eleven years. He says that Captain Hedberg is, in his belief—

A man of honesty, integrity, and one whose statements are worthy of confidence.

That is the best I can do in the matter without going into an hour's detail.

Mr. COCKRELL. These charges are very grave. Captain Hedberg was summoned before the court. He was heard; there was a trial; no objection was made to any member of the court; the trial was had; and the finding of the court was submitted to the department commander. He reviewed it and approved the sentence, all except that part which required a payment of $527 to the company. It then went up to the War Department, and was there approved. They had before them the record which the Senator has; they examined it; they sifted the conflicting statements; and that was their judgment. In the face of that, upon testimony that he was an honorable and a brave gentleman from 1861 to 1867 or 1868, we are asked to condone what was done then.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. What is the difference, so far as the proceeding is concerned, between this case and the case of Fitz-John Porter?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose there are two material differences; and I do not know, but I have no doubt that the Senator knows one of them. The difference between setting aside the proceedings as far as they go in the Fitz-John Porter case and this case is very material. There was simply a disobedience of orders in that case; and here there is a disobedience of orders, there is a charge of rape, there is a charge of embezzlement, there is a charge of converting the funds of the company to his own private, individual use. On all these charges this man was found guilty.

Mr. CAMERON. Let us have the question.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 47, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—47.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill just passed and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. CAMERON, and Mr. CAMDEN were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 118) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs;

A bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for a term of court at Duluth, Minn.;

A bill (H. R. 1449) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry B. Jay;

A bill (H. R. 752) granting a pension to James Smithpeter;

A bill (H. R. 731) granting a pension to William H. Heister;

A bill (H. R. 11199) for the relief of Thomas B. Nalle;

A bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island;

A bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same; and

A bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

RIGHT OF WAY TO SALT LAKE AND FORT DOUGLAS RAILWAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5959) granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by adding a new paragraph:

This act shall be at all times subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal as in the judgment of Congress the public good may require.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. This act shall be at all times subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal as in the judgment of Congress the public good may require.

Mr. MANDERSON. I certainly would have no objection to this amendment, for I think it is a provision which it would be very proper to place on this bill, but I fear that at this late hour of the session, if it should be insisted on, it might jeopardize the passage of the bill, which is one that is quite carefully guarded and I think protects all interests. I submit to the Senator from Vermont whether that right would not apply even without such an enactment in this bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much afraid that it would not, and this seems to affect a great many different interests, and the preservation of legislative control over this grant ought to be made absolutely secure.

Mr. MANDERSON. Can you get it through?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. CAMERON, and Mr. HAMPTON were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 10233) to convey to and confirm in the city of Aurora, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois, a small island in Fox River, located within the limits of said city;

A bill (H. R. 2244) for the relief of J. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 5477) to restore to John W. Mears a fine improperly imposed on him; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CALL and Mr. MAXEY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COLQUITT, Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. VAN WYCK submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. At the request of many Senators I have refrained from seeking to bring up earlier the naval appropriation bill, but as the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived I feel it my duty now to ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration. Of course it is important that it should be got through and the amendments engrossed and the bill enrolled to be sent to the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the bill be considered, the committee amendments to be acted on as reached in the reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to all points of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made subject to the reservation made by the Senator from Vermont. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Pay, miscellaneous," in section 1, line 37, after the word "library," to insert "including purchase of books and periodicals;" so as to read:

Care of library, including purchase of books and periodicals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," in section 1, line 86, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

For preparing and engraving on copper-plates the surveys of Mexican coast, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 86, to insert:

Naval training station, Coaster's Harbor Island: For repairs and improvements of the buildings now used under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for the instruction of naval officers; heating, lighting, and furniture for same; books and stationery; freight and other contingent expenses, including facing building with Portland cement, $12,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. HALE. The Government is the owner of this property. By act of Congress it accepted the cession to it some years ago for the purpose of having at the place what is called a training school of the younger officers of the Navy who have graduated at Annapolis and who are found in the active service. The property is near Newport, off the State of Rhode Island. The property is all owned by the Government and this is for the protection and use of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How large is it?

Mr. HALE. It is a small island—Coaster's Island.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do the United States own the whole island?

Mr. HALE. It was ceded to the United States, and accepted by act of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the "Bureau of Ordnance," in section 1, line 141, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of land for proving and ranging ground for naval guns, and for constructing buildings, butts, shelters, and batteries, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting," in section 1, line 204, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "equipment of vessels" from $600,000 to $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, in section 1, after line 230, to insert:

Navy-yard, League Island, Pennsylvania: For one clerk, at $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 236, after the word "all," to strike out "nine thousand one" and insert "eleven thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $11,525. And no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," in section 1, line 261, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Public works: For rebuilding wharves at the navy-yard, Boston, Mass., $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the civil establishment of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, in section 1 to strike out the clause from line 340 to line 342, inclusive, as follows:

Navy-yard Pensacola, Fla.: For one clerk to civil engineer, at $1,200; one mail messenger, at $600 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 356, after the word "all," to strike out "forty-five thousand seven" and insert "forty-three thousand nine;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $43,949.09. And no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Provisions and Clothing," in section 1, line 451, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the civil establishment, to include clerks, firemen, writers, receivers, assistant receivers, messengers, leading men and pressmen in inspection office, superintendent of coffee and spice mill, box maker, coffee-roaster, engine-tender, teamster, telephone-operating, cutter, machine operator, and laborers, $40,000. And no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Construction and Repair," in section 1, line 457, after the word "kinds," to insert "for steam-steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam-capstans, steam-windlasses, and other steam auxiliaries;" and in line 460, after the word "machinery," to strike out "rights of patented articles;" so as to read:

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; for steam-steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam-capstans, steam-windlasses, and other steam auxiliaries; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery, and tools for use in shops; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat, and for general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses, such as advertising, freight, foreign postages, telegrams, photographing, books, plans, stationery, and instruments for drawing-room, $900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 481, after the word "Enterprise," to insert "or such of said vessels as the Secretary of the Navy may deem advisable;" so as to make the clause read:

For repair on the Hartford, Kearsarge, Trenton, Swatara, Thetis, Richmond, Nipsic, and Enterprise, or such of said vessels as the Secretary of the Navy may deem advisable, $200,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, from the appropriations for the civil establishment of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, to strike out lines 507 and 508, as follows:

Navy-yard, Pensacola, Fla.: For one writer, at $1,017.25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 512, after the word "all," to strike out "$20,989.75" and insert "$19,972.90;" so as to read:

In all, $19,972.90. And no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of such services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 516, after the word "services," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such additional draughtsmen, writers, and model makers on the designs therefor as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Steam-Engineering," in section 1, line 523, after the words "new boilers," to strike out "steam-steerers, pneumatic-steerers, steam-capstans, steam-windlasses, and other steam auxiliaries;" so as to read:

Steam-machinery: For completion, repairs, and preservation of machinery and boilers of naval vessels, including cost of new boilers; for preservation of and small repairs to machinery and boilers in vessels in ordinary, receiving and training vessels, repair and care of machinery of yard tugs and launches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 528, after the word "purchase," to insert "handling and preservation;" so as to read:

For purchase, handling, and preservation of materials and stores; for purchase, fitting, repair, and preservation of machinery and tools in the navy-yards and stations; running yard-engines; for incidental expenses for naval vessels, yards, and the bureau, such as foreign postages, telegrams, advertising, freight, photographing, books, stationery, and instruments, $675,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 534, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated costs of such repair shall exceed 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power; but nothing herein contained shall prevent the repair or building of boilers for wooden ships the hulls of which can be fully repaired for 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and materials.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, to strike from the appropriations for the civil establishment of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, lines 562 and 563, as follows:

Navy yard, Pensacola, Fla.: For writer, at $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 567, after the word "all," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "sixteen;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $16,200. And no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, under the head of "Increase of the Navy," to strike out, beginning in line 830, the following clauses:

For the construction by contract of two swift double-bottomed steel cruisers, each of about 4,000 tons displacement, of the type of the Newark, except boilers and machinery; four of about 1,700 tons displacement, of the type of gunboat No. 1, each, and one swift torpedo-boat, said vessels to cost altogether, exclusive of armament, not more than $4,950,000, the sum of $2,470,000 is hereby appropriated.

That each of the aforesaid vessels shall be built, as near as may be, in compliance with the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment."

The amendment was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory;

A bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North; and

A bill (S. 2958) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a free bridge by the county of Davidson, Tennessee, over the Cumberland River.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.;

A bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the city of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. 11061) to authorize the Tombigbee Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Columbus, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.; and

A bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of the Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say that there are some other House bridge bills coming over, and that I desire within a reasonable opportunity to take up the House bridge bills and have them passed; as soon as the naval appropriation bill is disposed of, perhaps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Increase of the Navy," after line 843, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract, six protected steel cruisers, with such armament for each as the Navy Department may deem suitable, each of said vessels to have a maximum speed of not less than 20 knots over the measured mile, such speed to be exhibited under such test or tests and conditions as the Navy Department may impose. The cost of all of said cruisers in the aggregate, complete, exclusive of armament, shall not be more than $9,000,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during the five years from March 4, 1887. That in the construction of the aforesaid vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, so far as the same relate to vessels constructed under contract, save that in all their parts they shall be of domestic manufacture. The contracts for the construction of said vessels shall contain provisions to the effect that the contractor guarantees that when completed and tested for speed, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, the vessel shall exhibit a maximum speed of at least 20 knots per hour; and for every quarter knot of speed so exhibited above said guarantee the contractor shall receive a premium over and above his contract price of $50,000, and for every quarter knot that said vessel fails of reaching said guaranteed speed there shall be deducted from the contract price the sum of $50,000; and for the purposes provided in this section the sum of $1,200,000, or so much of the same as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That for the armament of the vessels provided for in this section the sum of $2,880,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during five years from March 4, 1887.

In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act, it shall be required that one of such vessels shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, two of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connecting therewith, and three of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, and at such places on or near such coasts or waters as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve.

If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for said contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts, or either of them, until the further action of Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient dispatch.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the sums of money hereinafter named are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the President, in the exercise of his discretion, upon plans and specifications to be furnished by the Navy Department:

For the construction of heavily armored vessels or armored floating batteries or rams, to be used for coast and harbor defense, $6,000,000.

For the construction of light-draught gunboats, suitable for interior water ways and canal service, $720,000; said gunboats to be completed and tested within twelve months from the date of the signing of any contract for their construction.

For the construction of torpedo-boats of the highest attainable speed and efficiency, $600,000; said torpedo-boats to be completed and tested within twelve months from the signing of any contract for their construction.

For torpedoes and other explosives and torpedo appliances, including the trial and testing of explosives, such torpedoes and other explosives and torpedo appliances to be operated from naval vessels, floating batteries, or rams, $600,000, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available.

For the armament of the vessels provided for in this section, $1,800,000.

That the material used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same, shall be furnished and manufactured in the United States, and all contracts made for their construction shall be under the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment:" Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such civilian expert aids, additional draughtsmen, writers, copyists, and model-makers on the designs therefor as may be necessary. That the appropriations made under this section shall be available during five years from March 4, 1887.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, before the amendment of the committee is voted on I should like to make an observation and an inquiry as to the policy of that part of the amendment commencing in line 45 of section 2, which provides that one of the cruisers proposed by the amendment shall be built upon the waters of the Pacific Ocean, two on the Gulf of Mexico and waters connecting therewith, and three of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean.

I am heartily in favor of the general object and policy of the amendment of the committee, and for that purpose I want to see the Secretary of the Navy clothed with such power as shall enable him to accomplish that object in the most expeditious, in the most successful, and in the most advantageous manner to the people of this country; and I do not see why he should be trammeled in this amendment, which looks to the creation of six cruisers, by a provision which may result in producing only two.

Mr. HALE. I was unable to hear what portion of the amendment the Senator from Delaware was seeking to call to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. Commencing at line 45 of section 2 of the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). On page 37 of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I see.

Mr. GRAY. It will be observed that by the latter part of the section, commencing at line 54, it is provided that—

If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for said contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts, or either of them, until the further action of Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient dispatch.

It may very well happen that after these proposals are published and the bids opened it shall appear to the President of the United States that these cruisers can not be constructed with advantage to the service and the people of the United States upon the Pacific coast or upon the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, and in that case it will be his duty, if this part of the amendment becomes a law, to dispense with the construction of three of the cruisers which are provided for by the amendment.

I want to see the object proposed by the committee achieved. I want to see six cruisers of the class and of the general character described in this amendment in the possession of the Navy Department of this country. Therefore it seems to me that the provision in the latter part of section 2 is only trammeling the Secretary of the Navy and interfering with the accomplishment of the general object proposed by the amendment.

What we are all interested in is in building up our navy, is in bringing into the possession of the United States suitable, efficient, and practically useful cruisers; and I do not know that any part of that object is the distribution of the work territorially or geographically over the United States. It would be very well, and I should rejoice to know that there were establishments on the Pacific coast or on the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters adjacent thereto, which could turn out the cruisers contemplated by the amendment; but why should we limit the Secretary of the Navy and those who will have the duty of carrying into effect this provision by limiting them as to where they can best provide for the building of the vessels that are described in the first section of the amendment?

Therefore, as I am in favor of the accomplishment of what the committee propose, to wit, the creation of six available swift and efficient cruisers, I am in favor of striking out of that section all after line 45 down to the end of the section; and I now move you, sir, as an amendment, that those lines from line 45 to the end of section 2 be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. The provisions in the amendment which has been reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which the Senator from Delaware desires to strike from the bill, were adopted by the Senate after full discussion upon the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The bill here embodied, as originally reported by the Naval Committee of this body, contained no such division as to the building of these ships. It was all left to the constructors of the country wherever they might be, contracting under bids with specifications and safeguards such as the committee threw about the bill by its provisions.

On motion of the Senator from Alabama, who I see is in his seat, the Senate adopted this other feature. I believed then and believe now that one or two of these vessels can be built and built speedily on the Pacific coast. The original bill as it passed the Senate provided for ten cruisers, two of which were to be built on the Pacific coast and three upon the Gulf. Of course there are no facilities at present upon the Gulf coast, or upon any waters connecting with the Gulf of Mexico.

The thought that the Senator from Alabama had in his mind, as I perceived and as the Senate saw, was that by a little delay and by propositions being offered to enterprising mechanics and contractors, private yards and plants would be built up and established there, and that after some delay these vessels might be built, utilizing the great natural products of that region, the timber, the coal, the iron, that exist there and which are found in such great abundance.

Upon that theory, as the Senate had adopted it upon debate, the Committee on Appropriations in reporting the bill embodied these features in their amendment, taking a proportionate number, as the whole bill was cut down, and instead of giving two to the Pacific coast and three to the Gulf it gave one to the Pacific coast and two to the Gulf, leaving three to be built on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment which I prepared in the Senate when the bill for constructing ten cruisers was up has been copied almost literally by the Committee on Appropriations in the clause which is under consideration. I desire that the Government of the United States, in building these vessels out of American material, for that is the result of it, and with American workmanship and upon American soil, shall give to the different sections of this country that are capable of building ships a fair opportunity to embark in this business.

It is very true that we have no ship-yards in any of the Southern States and along the Gulf of Mexico, but it is equally true that they are demanded by the necessities of the Government as well as by the rights of the people in that section of the country. If hostile fleets were to meet in the Gulf of Mexico, or if our navy cruising in the Gulf of Mexico should meet with disasters of any kind and it was found to be a dangerous journey to bring a ship from the Gulf of Mexico around as far north as Chester or the Brooklyn navy-yard or the Norfolk navy-yard, we should find the Government at very great inconvenience for the want of some place to repair a ship, and in time of war it would be almost a matter of impossibility to bring a crippled ship out of the Gulf of Mexico for repair into any of the Northern or Northeastern navy-yards. You might just as well start with it to San Francisco as to start with it to New York in the presence of hostile fleets, and when your ships would be crippled by storm or by accident of any kind, or in war, the Gulf of Mexico would be just as good as lost to them.

So, as a matter of national importance, not to say necessity, there should be in the waters, or near the waters, of the Gulf of Mexico places where ships can be taken in for repair. If you will establish a construction yard anywhere accessible to the Gulf of Mexico you will have there a plant and a place where your ships can also be repaired.

Taking that view of it, I think that the Senate would not be willing to pass by such an important fact as this, if by any modification of this amendment the objection of the Senator from Delaware can be met. I suggest to him now that a modification can easily be made in section 2, commencing with the word "he," in line 59, striking out from line 59 all that occurs in that clause of the bill, and inserting:

He may consider and accept bids for building vessels at other places.

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senator indicate again the amendment that he proposes? I think perhaps that may be a way out of the difficulty, and it may be acceptable to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say a few words before I put in any amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I have already commented very briefly upon the governmental necessity of having a construction yard somewhere near the Gulf of Mexico. Of course it is not necessary to comment upon the necessity of having one upon the Pacific coast. I wish to say that it will not cost exceeding $100,000 to put upon the Alabama River, or at Pensacola, or on the Mississippi River, as good a plant as John Roach has at Chester, entirely new, for the building of a ship. I do not mean the building of engines; I am now talking about the construction of a ship.

What is a ship-yard for the construction of an iron or a steel vessel? It is nothing but a series of blocks of wood set down upon the firm surface of the earth, which are so adjusted as that they give proper shape to the keel of the ship, and then, with certain props, as the ship goes up, on either side to hold it in position, with no cover over it, no house, nor anything of the sort, but built out in the open air. With your shears, and your riveting machines, and your bending machines, and your different furnaces that you have about for these purposes, which are very simple in construction, you have the whole outfit necessary for the construction of a steel or iron ship.

The keel of the great Pocahontas, which I believe is to be by next November the leading ship, is now being laid at Alexandria, Va., in the manner I state. They first get a firm foundation. They then lay their keel down upon either blocks of wood or stone, wood being preferable. Then they commence building, and they build it out in the open air. So there is nothing about a construction yard for building steel or iron vessels that requires any outlay of expense except the machinery necessary to fit the pieces of steel and iron that are brought there, and to rivet them.

We have at Pensacola a dry-dock. I do not know the dimensions of it. Perhaps the Senator from Florida can state.

Mr. BECK. It is not large enough for a great cruiser.

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps it could be enlarged, I do not know; but at all events we have a dry-dock there sufficient to accommodate ships of war that may be in a wrecked condition from any cause. We must have one. The Government of the United States under a governmental agency needs just such an establishment somewhere upon the coast of the Gulf of Mexico.

You let out these contracts, a million and a half to the ship, for that is the amount of money we appropriate as an average for these six cruisers, the whole amount being $9,000,000. The President in offering these contracts says to the ship-builder, "here is a million and a half of dollars for the construction of a vessel of a certain size and shape," giving all her dimensions, "and you have the option to put a bid on the construction of this vessel on the Atlantic coast, on the Pacific coast, or on the Gulf coast.

Before passing on to the point that I was about to come to, I call attention to page 12, line 266, of the bill as it came from the House:

For two timber dry-docks, to be located at such navy-yards as the Secretary of the Navy may indicate, each dock to be not less than 480 feet in length, the cost of the two docks not to exceed in the aggregate the amount herein appropriated, $1,100,000.

There the Committee on Naval Affairs of the other House prepared for the very emergency, it occurs to me, of which I have been speaking, that of making dry-docks along the Gulf coast where it is necessary to place them, dry-docks for the repair of Government ships when they become crippled. So the provision which was inserted by the committee of the Senate is sustained by the one to which I have just adverted.

Now, I will proceed with the point I was making. The President offers these contracts to ship-builders. A ship-builder looks over the field to see where he can construct his vessel with the greatest convenience and at the least expense, and in the greatest security. He turns his eye to the manufacturing establishments in Alabama, in Georgia, in Tennessee, and all along the Mississippi River, and up to Pittsburgh, including Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and if you please, Chicago. He says, "I can assemble the material, whether it is steel, whether it is iron, or whatever it may be, at the navy-yard at Pensacola, or at the ship-yard at Mount Vernon, on the Alabama River, or at a ship-yard upon the Mississippi River at a convenient location, cheaper than I can get the same material hauled by rail from any part of the United States to the seacoast." If he should choose to build that ship at Mount Vernon, the place I have in my mind and for which, of course, I shall be a firm advocate, giving to every other person concerned the advantage certainly of whatever another place may possess in the way of superior inducements—if he should conclude to build a ship at Mount Vernon arsenal grounds, on the Alabama River, he would find himself there in immediate contact with three of the most costly elements in ship-building, and of any work of this kind, the iron, the coal, and the timber that is necessary for all of the scaffolding and everything of that kind about a ship. It requires, of course, a very considerable amount to sustain any large ship or any ship while you are building it.

There is no place in the United States where these three great elements of cost in the construction of a ship can be assembled cheaper than they can at the Mount Vernon arsenal, on the Alabama River. There would be very little additional cost in going to Pensacola, and there might still be some saving in one of the materials if you were to stop your boats on the Mississippi River and find some suitable place there to be selected for the building of the ship.

But this contractor would see that he could pay for his plant $100,000, if it cost that much, and more, and make the money back out of his contract, and after he had gotten through with the construction of these two ships he would then be prepared to build ships of commerce or other ships of war, and he would be prepared with all the necessary material and machinery for the repair of ships of the United States; though I think that the ships of the United States ought all of them to be repaired in the navy-yards, it ought to be done under the direction of naval officers in the navy-yards; but the construction of ships of war depends upon an entirely different principle.

I want the opportunity furnished to the people who will engage in building these ships to select a Southern place for their construction, and that is fair and right. We pay our taxes to the Government of the United States in a larger proportion per capita than any other part of the United States, because the people of the South are larger consumers per capita than those of any other part of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. Larger consumers of what?

Mr. MORGAN. Of all that is dutiable of the imports of this country, and consuming a large amount of whisky and a good deal of tobacco. We have a population in the South, particularly our colored population, who are very fond of both. They are there in very large numbers, and they are very extravagant consumers. The fact is that the difficulty is getting the negroes to accumulate almost anything at all is because of the extravagance of their expenditures. They have no economy, or very little idea of it.

But, sir, we are large tax-payers in proportion to our population, and we are growing to be more and more important in that connection; and it is only fair and right that the people of the Gulf States should have an opportunity to embark with their cheap material, in iron and coal and timber, in the construction of these vessels. It is to secure that that I propose to have these contracts so made, or so offered at least, as that the ship-builders there will bid upon them, and then if the President of the United States saw that the bids were too high compared with those from other parts of the United States, he might go elsewhere and make his contracts.

The provision of the amendment is that it shall bring the subject back to Congress, and I think that is a correct provision, because it must depend upon the will of Congress unless the President chooses to exercise his discretion in the direction that I think is correct. It must depend upon the will of Congress, after all, whether the South is going to have any hand in building these ships, and I do not see why there should be any objection to that. The building of these ships runs over a period of five years; the expenditure of this $9,000,000 is spread over five years. There is ample time within that period to make this establishment and build a great many more than six ships.

It does not require five years to build a heavy-armored ship of war. The largest armored ship that we shall have in the United States Navy can be built and the engines put in her and put afloat on the ocean inside of two years. The ship I have just referred to, the Pocahontas, that is to be built at Alexandria, it is stated, will be afloat in November next, and that is a ship which has more intricacy of construction than perhaps any that was ever built in the world. I have no doubt of that, and I believe it is going to be one of the grandest successes of this or any other era in ship-building. But I am referring now to the length of time that is required. There is no reason at all that I can see why this matter should not be brought back to Congress, and there are many good reasons why it should come back to Congress, for we rely upon Congress, and we insist that Congress shall help us go forward and make this foundation in the South for ship-building. I think it is the duty of Congress to do it, and I hope the Senator from Delaware will not move to strike anything out of this provision of the bill. I believe it is correct as it stands.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I was quite willing to accept the modification of my amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama. I do not understand whether he still proposes it or not. Does the Senator from Alabama still propose the modification?

Mr. MORGAN. Not yet; I will see further on.

Mr. GRAY. I was quite willing to accept that amendment because the paramount reason with me in proposing the amendment I offered was that the object the Committee on Naval Affairs had in view when this amendment was proposed to the bill was that these cruisers should be obtained, and therefore as the modification suggested by the Senator from Alabama kept it still quite in the power of the President to achieve that object, I was willing to accept it, and if he shall see fit to propose it (he says he is not yet ready to propose it), I shall be quite willing to accept it.

But before doing so I wish to say a word about another objection that I have to this portion of the amendment of the committee. No one rejoices more than I do at the nascent manufacturing prosperity of the South. No one views with more satisfaction than I do the signs of the growing wealth and industrial well-being of the Gulf States, and especially of the State of which the Senator is an honored representative. I have no objection to seeing, nay, I have the greatest wish to see every proper encouragement given to those industries which seem to have lately taken root and are growing up and flourishing; but that growth was commenced and that growth will go on, if it is to go on, in health without governmental protection and without governmental interference. I do not believe that the policy indicated by that portion of the amendment to which I have called attention will be conducive of the best results to the manufacturing interests of that section of the country.

I do not believe in Government partnerships, either directly or indirectly, in the business of this country. If there are ship-building industries on the Pacific coast, commencing or growing, then I shall be glad to see them competing with the industries of the Atlantic coast or wherever else they may be; but the policy of this amendment is by an arbitrary geographical distribution of the construction of these ships to bring into competition with those ship-building industries that have grown up from individual enterprise and in the natural and healthy progress of individual enterprise—to bring into competition with them concerns that are not now able to compete, and which only will be able to compete by reason of this indirect interference on the part of the Government and this quasi Government partnership.

If this bill should become a law with a provision that one or two of these ships should be built in the State of Alabama, then ex necessitate all other ship-building interests as to that particular work in which all the people of the United States are interested are thrown out of the competition, and the State of Alabama receives from the Government that particular favor, that particular encouragement which it is not right that any section or any set of men or any concern should ever receive from the common government of all. It runs athwart of that principle which it seems to me should guide us not only in this but in all other governmental action. It is the vice of the protective system, it is the vice of that policy which would bring the Government into partnership with or participation in the common affairs and business of every-day life that I object to in this part of the amendment.

For that reason as well as the first reason I have stated, I am opposed to this policy, and yet, notwithstanding that, I will accept the modification that was suggested but not yet offered by the Senator from Alabama, that if the bids from these localities shall not be such as to commend themselves to the President of the United States as fair and advantageous the ships shall still be built by open competition common to all the ship-building industries of the United States.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I went over this matter with my colleagues on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations trusting very much to the better judgment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and also to what had been done by the Senate, and hoping to come to some agreement with the other House in the closing hours of the session, so that we should have some bill; and I thought upon the whole it was the very best that we could possibly do.

I think no one will accuse me of being a protectionist, and yet I believe that wherever the United States, contradistinguished from an individual, has to provide for its own protection, we ought to endeavor to protect ourselves within ourselves, and have all the material possible to do that, and not be dependent upon any other nation. Therefore, if we are to make big guns I have been willing to help any one to establish a plant that would make big guns at home, and not to have to go to Krupp or anybody else abroad. So with our torpedoes; I do not want to go to Mr. Whitehead or anybody else abroad; I want to make them at home.

Of the three great divisions mentioned in the amendment, the Pacific coast will more and more need protection against foreign invasion as we extend our commerce over the Pacific Ocean. Therefore I desire something there to enable us to build and repair ships. The Gulf of Mexico covers a very important portion of the country, close to Cuba and near all the West India Islands where trouble may come, and if a plant could be established there I feel anxious that it should be done, but the majority, or at least half of the whole, ought to be placed along the Atlantic seaboard.

I agreed to the immediate provision that is now being discussed, because this is a new enterprise along the Gulf coast. I know there are great developments in iron and steel, and perhaps steel has not yet been brought up to the highest point of basic or other process that is used in Europe and applied at Birmingham and in other parts of Europe; but when it is understood that there is a chance to use it and that the United States desires to use it, I hope there will be a great plant made there by private enterprise, which will enable us to build two of the six ships on or near the Gulf.

But the difficulty I think with the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware and that of the Senator from Alabama at present is that the Gulf coast is not yet provided with those things while that portion of the country which has had ship-yards heretofore is measurably so provided. They may not be able to make satisfactory ships within the time the next few ships are to be made, but I believe they will with the development going on, when they see they are going to have a chance next fall, make proper bids. If they do not the reason will be given in the report which is to be made to Congress. The chances are that there will be such an organization among themselves as will give us a plant on the Gulf coast.

Of course, the Senator from Delaware desires as much as I do that we should be protected along the Gulf coast. I know that he does; and if development can be made there to enable us to build ships, and they should have a chance, I did not feel quite willing that this summer, when three ships are to be built on the Atlantic and they will be started and contracts made for them, that we should deprive those people whose attention had not been turned in that direction without giving them at least some reasonable opportunity to see if they could not do it, and next fall we shall ascertain that fact by the report that is to be made to us. They may be able to do it at once, but as to the suggestion of making them elsewhere without giving any such opportunity as I think they ought to have, but to confine them all to the Atlantic seaboard, and as three can be started there any how, I think that this summer we ought to have a report made as to the reason why the others did not progress, if that reason should in fact exist.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. President, while I might and would, in two or three regards, criticise the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, I shall vote for the entire proposition in recognition of the fact that it will after all remain to the conferees representing the two Houses to harmonize upon a measure for the final judgment of the Senate and House. I shall therefore vote for it although, as I said, in my mind I would criticise it, or I would not support it in its details if submitted to me for final action. For instance, in the second section the committee's amendment provides that—

> For every quarter knot of speed so exhibited above said guarantee the contractor shall receive a premium over and above his contract-price of $50,000, and for every quarter knot that said vessel fails of reaching said guaranteed speed there shall be deducted from the contract-price the sum of $50,000.

Too many bad jobs in the history of the navy have been loaded upon the Government, if not for the benefit of the contractor, certainly at the expense of the people, and I would do nothing which would encourage such a state of things, or which would be likely to lead to the multiplication of worthless vessels upon the Navy register. I would, therefore, limit by amendment this reduction from 20 knots to 19 or 18½ knots.

Again, I think in section 3, line 7, where authority is given and an appropriation of $6,000,000 is made for the construction of heavily armed vessels, or armored floating batteries, or rams, to be used for coast and harbor defenses, if Congress means heavily-armored vessels it ought to say so. If it does not mean them, it ought not to confer this discretion upon the Secretary of the Navy. He might absorb, either upon one line or the other, all the amount of money here appropriated.

For one, I do not deem heavily armored vessels a necessity. Nature protects the coast of America, and the heavily armored vessels of the world can not enter our harbors. Nature has done more for us than any heavily armored vessel will do.

Mr. BUTLER. Will it disturb my friend if I ask him a question right there?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It will not.

Mr. BUTLER. What he says is entirely true as to our harbors being protected in a measure by nature, but I should like to ask the Senator if very many of the heavily armored vessels of foreign countries might not lie off the harbors and destroy a vast amount of property in this country without entering at all?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I think it quite likely in case of war, especially if the parties were in earnest, that somebody would get hurt and property would probably be destroyed. I do not think even a fort, however strong it might be built, would prevent such destruction or such a contingency as is involved in the question of my friend from South Carolina.

Making this criticism upon the proposed amendment of the Committee, I beg to repeat that I will vote for the amendment as submitted by the committee, and especially I favor that portion of the amendment criticised by the Senator from Delaware. It will be observed upon reading the amendment that it is recited in lines 45 and 46 of section 3:

> In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act.

The first section of this amendment not only means cruisers, but gunboats, rams, and other classes of vessels which may be built upon the Mississippi River at almost any point from Saint Louis to its mouth. They can be built upon the Alabama River; and I submit to the Senator from Delaware that there are established industries already in that section of our country which are prepared, and would be prepared, to build the lighter class of vessels here provided for. It so happens that the matter which he has criticised comes, as I take it, from the fact that two separate bills passed by the Senate have been embodied as one amendment to this bill; but with the proper and legitimate, not protection, but duty of the Government, to each and every section of this country under its grant of war powers, it is absolutely necessary, and in time of peace eminently proper, that you should provide each section with the means and facilities of defense.

Hence, I shall very cheerfully support so much of the amendment, and indeed all of it, trusting that when it goes to a committee of conference the united judgment of both Houses will support the action of that conference.

Mr. GRAY. I will modify my amendment in the respect suggested by the Senator from Alabama by confining it to striking out all after the word "he," in line 59, of the second section, down to its close, and inserting in lieu thereof the following words:

> May consider and accept bids for building said vessels at other places.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Page 37, line 59, after the word "he," strike out down to and including the word "dispatch," in line 63, as follows:

> Shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts, or either of them, until the further action of Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient dispatch.

And in lieu thereof insert:

> May consider and accept bids for building said vessels at other places.

So as to read:

> If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for said contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he may consider and accept bids for building said vessels at other places.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will not be adopted. The result of the argument of the Senator from Delaware is that this large expenditure of money shall be made at ship-yards at Wilmington and upon the Delaware. There is a law that is more potent than any enactment of a Legislature, and under that law of the economy of business, as this bill would be when amended by him, it would be a bill for the construction of these ships on the Delaware and at one or two other places.

The great objection to the bill in all its parts is that it is a bill which does not concern the people of the United States. Its expenditure is for the benefit of particular individuals and particular localities. If my vote could defeat this bill it would be defeated. While I acknowledge the ability of the Senator from Maine and his zealous interest in the public service, and while I acknowledge the personal gallantry and character and the high type of men who compose the United States Navy, I can not forget the fact that in the past twenty years $500,000,000, or about that amount, has been expended without benefit to the country and without creating a navy, while the results of the same amount of expenditure in England, France, Spain, and all the European countries has produced a great development of naval power. While we have no navy and the flag of this country is not represented abroad, foreign countries with the same expenditure of money control the seas and everywhere have made an impression of the national character and power of their countries, which gives protection to their people and encourages and develops their commerce, enterprise, and wealth.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of him what the $500,000,000 which he speaks of has been expended for?

Mr. CALL. A great deal of it for the support of a naval establishment, a navy in the same direction this bill provides.

Mr. PLATT. Less than $90,000,000, I understand, have been expended for ships and the repair of ships.

Mr. CALL. Very well; but how does that answer the proposition that as compared with the expenditure of $500,000,000 by England, France, and Spain, or by any other country in the world that less than $90,000,000 have been expended for ships and repairs and $410,000,000 for the establishment? Why is it that we cannot have a better business economy than to spend $500,000,000 without any result, but to have supported so many persons, while the same amount of money in foreign countries has produced a great result? It is because of the methods of administration. It is because of the favoritism, the disreregard of public interest that characterizes the bills which have been passed; the bureaucratic character of the Navy Department; the favorites who are placed in positions without regard to their efficiency; and while I say this, I pay as high a tribute to the personal character and gallantry and accomplishments of the men who compose the United States Navy as any other person. I was impressed with this when some years since an officer of the Navy, a stranger to me, left a home of wealth and luxury and volunteered in an expedition to the polar seas, at the imminent risk of his life. These bills have expended these vast sums of money as this bill will do—not for the benefit of the people or the honor and dignity of the Government, but for the benefit of favorite places and favorite persons.

The fact is manifest that $500,000,000 can not be expended and produce no results without there being a disgrace upon the business administration of the country.

Well, now, Mr. President, what is this bill? Here is navy-yard after navy-yard, each with its commandant and equipment. What for? What are they doing, what service to the country, except to support the families of the men who receive this money? I am willing to vote as large an amount of money as a taxation on my people as any other man to support a navy and build ships and reorganize this Department, to make the flag of the United States respected abroad; but I am not willing to vote one cent to continue this disgraceful misappropriation of the public moneys which for twenty years has existed, expending as the result $500,000,000 with nothing whatever either for the honor and glory of the country or its efficiency in time of war, except the personal character of the men who are officers and sailors in the Navy. This fact speaks with a force that has impressed the people. England, France, Spain, Russia, Italy, Prussia—all with a navy. The United States, after $500,000,000 expended, no ships, no sailors, nothing but a naval establishment of bureaus and bureau officers, and an annual bill passed by Congress imposing taxes to the amount of millions of dollars to find soft places for them.

But, Mr. President, this amendment will not be of any service whatever to the people of the Southern States, because there is no plant there to build ships. The navy-yards there are left unequipped except with a few favorite office holders from other States. If there is a single human being of the State of Florida who will be benefited one dollar by this expenditure of money I do not know it. If there is one who is in the employment of the Navy, even in the navy-yard at Pensacola, in position, from a charwoman up, except a few cadets of the Naval Academy and one or two graduates, I do not believe it and I do not know it. I have never heard of it, although frequent applications have been made. The navy-yard there is left without any equipment whatever, and yet the navy-yard at Pensacola is in closer proximity than any other to the best iron, to the most inexhaustible supply of wood. At Pensacola alone, I am informed, there are millions of dollars' worth of the best live-oak in the world, stored in a pond covered with water, of which the Navy Department, so far as I have ever heard, has no knowledge whatever—bought for the Government and thrown away years ago and entirely forgotten; the finest timber in the world, so I have been advised.

I do appreciate the ability of the present Secretary of the Navy and do not doubt his patriotism, but I have not seen any evidences that he is advised that there is such a State as Florida and that there are some citizens of the United States who have some rights, at least to an occasional recognition, if only by way of compliment. Under the administration of his predecessor the little places at the Pensacola navy-yard were filled by Florida people, but I do not believe there is a single citizen of Florida in the employment of the Navy Department, and, so far as I have any knowledge, the magnificent navy-yard there, with its unequaled advantages, its capacious deep-water harbor, its salt and its fresh water, where two of the best ships of the old Navy—the Pensacola, of 2,800 tons, and the Seminole, of 1,200 tons—have been built in past times, is kept only as a place of refuge for a few families.

I am told that the Secretary has no power; that he is only the head of a few bureau officers who hold office under the statutes, and are not subject to removal. I do not know how this may be, but it is certainly true that there is a grave fault somewhere, and it ought to be remedied by law and a proper organization made before any more money shall be expended.

Now, Mr. President, what is the result of this amendment? It simply says that the people of the South, and no more of the South than of the Pacific coast, have a right to whatever benefits may proceed from the disbursement of the public money. Why is the Senator from Delaware so anxious that this amendment shall be defeated, but that the money shall be disbursed upon the Delaware and in Wilmington, in his section of the country? Why is it that these ships can be built nowhere else but there? With the establishment of a plant at Pensacola navy-yard, the finest harbor on the Gulf of Mexico, with an abundant depth of water, easy of entry and perfectly protected, every inducement would be furnished to combinations of capital and labor to build ships there, and they can be built more cheaply there than anywhere else. They will never be built there under your policy, which concentrates the expenditure of this vast revenue, this $500,000,000 in the last twenty years, in a few localities upon the Atlantic coast and for the benefit of a few individuals.

Sir, I am not at all narrow in my views. I want your country to have the benefit of the larger proportion of the disbursement, but I do not want your bills to be constructed, as they are, so that the money will be necessarily expended there, and when the Senator from Alabama in this amendment has simply suggested a provision by which it is possible, and barely possible, that these ships may be built on the Gulf, it is sought to be stricken out.

Mr. President, these navy-yards ought to be equipped at a reasonable and economical cost. They ought to be prepared for the construction of ships and the policy of the act of 1883 carried out. That policy was to leave the navy-yards with their equipment to those who may propose contracts to the Government to build ships, in order that a monopoly of this business may not be given to men of vast capital to the exclusion of the enterprise of the American mechanics of limited means.

There is ability, skill, and talent among the poor American men of this country—the mechanics—sufficient to build as fine a ship as ever was built in any foreign country. Give them by your Government policy the opportunity to do it. I propose to put plants in your useless navy-yards instead of your clerks and your commandants; require them to do something, habilitate these navy-yards, equip them properly, and then in all parts of this country the public interest in the Navy will revive. You will have ships, as you ought to have, to a reasonable extent, and you can no longer be reproached with a half a hundred millions of money expended without any result. The country will then feel that these vast sums of money are being expended for the benefit of the country and with some permanent, beneficial results, and not for the advantage of a limited number of persons. The people of the United States in all parts of the country will derive benefit from the expenditure of the money. American enterprise and mechanical skill and invention will combine to produce the finest ships in the world.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if I understood my own motive in offering the amendment to this bill, it certainly was no such narrow and insufficient one as that suggested by the Senator from Florida. He says he is as much in favor of my country as his own. Those are strange words here in the Senate of the United States. His country is my country and my country is his, and I shall rejoice in all that makes for the prosperity of the locality in which he lives as much as I would for that which makes up the prosperity of that in which I live. It is because I want these ships built by the free competition of all the people of this country who are competent to build ships that I offered the amendment, and if as he says they can be built as cheaply or more cheaply at the navy-yard at Pensacola, then I say they ought to be built there. All I propose to effect by this amendment is to take away the narrowing policy that would seek to have one section of our country or one State of this Union or one particular locality made the special region in which this work shall be done by law and not leave it to the open competition of all the mechanics and all the men of genius in the shipbuilding craft.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me a word?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. Does the Senator from Delaware believe that this amendment will promote the building of these ships on the Delaware River or in his section of the country?

Mr. GRAY. I do not know that it will; but, whether it does or not, if the ships proposed by this amendment can be built more advantageously on the Pacific coast, or on the Gulf of Mexico, or in the harbor of Pensacola, then I say that there should be the opportunity by this bill to have them so built.

My original motion went to striking out from this section every allusion to localities, every allusion to sections, and to leave the matter of the construction of these ships open to free competition among the mechanics and ship-builders of this country. That is all. Whether my section or his section will be ultimately benefited does not affect the principle.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, there can be no question of the imperative necessity of providing for the common defense, especially on the seaboard and on the Gulf coast. We have made no substantial progress during the last twenty years towards the accomplishment of that purpose. Abortive efforts have been made now and then to provide for the common defense and protect the seaboard, but so far nothing of value has been accomplished.

At this Congress public sentiment beyond the limits of the two Houses and public sentiment as expressed in the two Houses favors a broad, liberal provision for the common defense, especially for the protection of our seaboard. That is a question entirely apart from and has nothing whatever to do with the point now presented, which is a commercial question.

From the very foundation of this Government the wisest statesmen have urged that we should provide for our common defense within our borders, and every sensible man ought to know that we should have within the limits of our own country every provision needed for large guns and small guns, and for every necessary advance in the building of ships, the casting of great cannon, and small-arms, in order to make provision for the common defense.

Now, I go one step further——

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator pardon me a moment? He must have misunderstood me if he understood me to say that the principle involved in this portion of the amendment was the principle of the protective tariff. I did use the word "protection," I admit, but it was merely by way of illustration that this matter of partnership in the private business of the country was one of the vices that entered into the protective system; but I entirely agree with the Senator from Texas that the policy of this bill does not at all occupy the same ground.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not understand the Senator in the way he seems to think because he and I stand together on that question, but I referred to a remark previously made.

It is essential that this country should make ample provision for its own defense under any circumstances. Now, with an overflowing Treasury and without the hope of a reduction of taxation at present, with an absolute necessity that the over-gorged vaults of the Treasury should be opened and the money therein put in circulation among the people, there never was and there never will be a better time for providing for the common defense than now.

I have said before, and I repeat, that I for one would favor ample provision for the defense of every one of our seaports, great and small, in proportion to the necessity of that defense. More than that, we should make provision for building ships. I would go a step further. In a great country, with the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf seaboard and the Pacific seaboard, there should be plants in every portion of this country, so that in any of the casualties of war we should be prepared to make our own cannon, our own small-arms, and our own ships in the navy-yards in the Northern States, in the Central States, in the Gulf States, and on the Pacific seaboard.

When it comes to the question of the common defense, many of the seaports along the Atlantic seaboard can be defended chiefly by land defenses, aided by torpedoes and by properly equipped armored vessels; but on the Gulf coast, so far as I know, and so far as I believe—and I think I understand that question reasonably well—you have to depend on ships. We have no strategic points of defense on the Gulf seaboard. You must have your gunboats and your ships mainly there, and there should be a plant for the building of ships there.

We have practically no navy-yards at this time, but we should look to the future. We have there the best material in the world. I say to-day that in the great State of Alabama they have iron without limit. They have it in Tennessee and in my own State. I say here that there is not on the wide earth iron ore superior to that of Texas. It has been compared by Professor Everhardt, of the University of Texas, with the finest ores of the world, the ores of Sweden, the ores of England, the ores of Port Henry, N. Y., and the ores of Canada, and there is not to-day on the wide earth ore superior to the iron ore of the State of Texas. It contains 27 per cent. of pure oxide of iron, 59 per cent of peroxide of iron, with few impurities of any kind whatever, and not a trace of sulphuric acid. It is the only one of the great ores of the world that does not contain that unfortunate trace of sulphuric acid. It makes a car-wheel without admixture with any other ore, and has greater power of resistance than any steel which is made. It makes the finest horseshoe, nearly, of any iron in the world.

We have live oak as fine as ever grew out of the earth, and the pines in the Sabine country of my State will furnish that and all the materials necessary, and would be equal to any that ever came out of the earth. I speak only of that because I know it.

Everywhere through the South we have materials for the building up of great navy-yards and the building of a great navy. I agree with what the Senator from Delaware has so well said. It is painful for me to hear any one in the Senate Chamber speak of portions of the United States as separate and distinct countries. We are all one great country. The time has been—I thank God that time is far in the rear—when this country was divided into hostile sections, and the people followed different flags; but all that has passed by, and to-day we are under one flag; we are one people, having one destiny, and all parts of this country are merely parts of that great whole. Make provision for the common defense, make provision for every part of the country. What makes prosperous the great State of Pennsylvania makes the State of Texas prosperous; what prospers the New England States makes my State prosperous. We raise the raw material, and they manufacture that raw material, but unless we have a market our cotton-fields would not find a customer. Every part of this great country is necessary to every other part of this great country, and I want the whole of this country defended and amply defended.

Living as I do in a Gulf State, knowing as I do that the Gulf coast, from Pensacola around to the mouth of the Rio Grande, must be defended chiefly and mainly by armored vessels in this enlightened quarter of the nineteenth century of the world, I want, for one, to see the nucleus for the establishment somewhere on that coast of a great navy-yard, where we have the finest iron ore in the world and where we have live oak in abundance.

These are my views. This Congress, in my judgment, would act blindly if it adjourned without making some provision for the common defense.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House the bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 9858) to authorize the Louisiana North and South Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River, in Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 34) to authorize the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River;

A bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry in place of Middletown; and

A bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes.

RETURN OF A HOUSE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 2, 1887.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the request will be granted, and the bill returned to the House of Representatives.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his Secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 1st instant, approved and signed the act (S. 1119) to organize the Hospital Corps of the Army of the United States, to define its duty, and to fix its pay.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, for about six thousand years the human race has been engaged in the science and the art of war, which is simply the prosecution of those methods by which human beings can best destroy each other. The chief burdens that mankind have borne and that now overload civilization are the results of this tendency to war; and it has seemed to me, I confess, that if the millenium which we are accustomed to believe in is not an absolute myth, a nation like our own with sixty millions of the most highly civilized people that the world has ever seen, still evolving and developing, it may be for the first time in the records of history, might set to the world the example of an effort to settle the controversies which arise between nations without resorting to the destructive arts of butchery.

For one, though I vote all that is asked, it is with great reluctance that I support these bills which call for such enormous expenditures purely in contemplation of conflicts which are to come. Though it may be a sentiment hardly proper to enunciate and which it is certainly not popular to enunciate, yet I still think the American people need do very little in the way of preparing for actual war.

I believe that this nation is great enough and strong enough in its intellectual and moral worth and character to defy the possibility of any conflict by appealing to the sense of justice of the world, and that refusing to engage in warfare from this day forth we might initiate an era which, if not absolute peace at once, would result within a short period in the elimination of wars from among civilized nations; and the great wars of the world have only been those among civilized nations, for only those are capable of a comprehensive concentration of effort which makes a great war.

While I suppose that we are sure to have some expenditure in this direction, I would be very sure to limit the appropriations and expenditure to what may be strictly called national defense. I would not willingly vote to appropriate a single dollar which I thought would induce this nation under any circumstances, even of great provocation, to engage in anything like aggressive war.

But the expenditure for war of a defensive character, the construction of vessels, the making of great guns, the development of new agencies of destruction by modern inventions, such as dynamite, nitroglycerine, and many others, will require, of course, large amounts, and I am willing to vote something, only being assured as far as possible that the expenditures will be simply in the way of defense.

I think, too, that if this be done, it is very proper that measures be taken to secure the expenditure in such a way in different parts of the country as to give to all of our people the advantage of the expenditure of the public funds in their own vicinity. I do not know precisely what the amendment moved may be, but there can be no doubt that the claim of our friends from the Southern country that labor is cheaper there, that raw materials which may be used in the construction of these vessels, or these great guns are cheaper there—there can be no doubt I say that this claim is true, and if these conditions were to continue, I have no doubt that in the not remote future the industries and the labor of the North would find themselves suffering from a form of competition greater than that which we are likely to suffer from, even from the repeal of our protective tariff, and by the introduction of Chinese labor to our shores without limit or stint to any degree whatever.

It is because the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] touched upon this point that I am ready at this time to make a few remarks which I had prepared for another occasion, bearing upon this question, which needs to be more considered I think in our country than it has been as yet—the advantages which one section has in this matter of labor; and this is the great item after all of expenditure, for of all the amounts of money that are paid out from one year's end to the other in the form of wages, in the form of payment for materials, at least 90 or 95 per cent. of the whole represents wages for labor; and in this direction I wish to submit a few remarks at this time.

The war between the nation and the Southern States——

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me a question? I know that we are all very desirous of listening to the remarks which the Senator, as he says, has prepared for another occasion; but will not the Senator give way for five or ten minutes and let us pass this bill in order that it may get through and go to the President? Of course, I understand the Senator can go on and I do not attempt to take him from the floor except by his entire good-will and assent.

Mr. BLAIR. Under the circumstances I think the Senator will not press his request.

Mr. HALE. I am at the mercy of the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. I think the Senator is, and at the same time I will remind him that he has not often been at my mercy in the effort to assert any title of occupancy to this floor. I promise the Senator that I will offer remarks which it will be worth while for him to consider, and that it will be worth while for him and for the President to whom he appeals for his cordial signature to this bill to consider these same remarks. They are pertinent now; they will be pertinent on many other occasions; and it will do the Senator no harm to have these ideas in his mind as he goes on during the remainder of his Senatorial term.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would wait and let me hear them after the Senate has adjourned at 12 o'clock on the 4th day of March.

Mr. BLAIR. I have indicated my desire and propose to be no further interrupted.

The war between the nation and the Southern States was a conflict between systems of industrial production. One system secured to the wage-laborer high returns for his toil and to the individual producer high prices for his commodity. The other system paid the common laborer the scant necessaries of life, just enough to create and preserve him as a profitable animal or an efficient machine, while the entire product as well as the plant of fixed, circulating, and living capital was owned by the employer.

These two systems collided in Kansas, and the war which followed abolished the forms of slavery, retaining much of its power, because the ignorance which made slavery possible with the prejudice against work which grew out of its degradation was neither removed nor seriously diminished.

More than twenty years have now elapsed since peace was restored, during which long period considerable progress has been made in the South in the diversification of industries and of production and in the increase of general intelligence. A corresponding increase of compensation has resulted to all laboring men, whether wage-workers or producers with small capital of their own, and some advancement has been made.

The wonderful natural resources of the South are now being constantly bought up by the capital of the North and of other countries. Already the Southern market for many forms of goods once furnished from the North or from Europe as well as for agricultural productions and raw materials is being supplied, as it should be, at home. More than this, the South is already invading the Northern and Northwestern markets and is competing for trade with production of which the highly paid labor and capital of the North is the chief element.

Foreseeing the inevitable, Northern capital and investments are seeking the South where, with labor of all kinds, agricultural, mechanical, and operative skilled and unskilled, upon an average not more than one-half or two-thirds as high when paid in actual money or in commodities at cash prices as in the North, the profits of their new location will replace the depreciation and losses which are impending to their investments at home.

It is safe to predict that within ten years, unless new and important factors are combined with existing conditions, the productions of the South after fully supplying their own will compete in Northern markets with most of the commodities which now are the chief production of the old free States at prices so low as to make it a matter of indifference to Northern labor whether the protective tariff against the products of "foreign pauper labor" be removed or continued, or even whether Chinese or foreign contract labor be longer excluded from our shores.

The farm laborers and operatives of both races in the South are rapidly acquiring the skill required to equal that of corresponding classes at the North. While the fact that women and children are more generally employed, and that all work more hours than at the North enables a given population if of equal intelligence and skill to produce more for a time at least than the same number could under the more liberal treatment of manual workers in the old free-labor States.

The South contains very nearly, perhaps fully, one-half the natural resources of the whole country, and is certainly capable of greater rapidity of development during the next quarter of a century than the North and further West. Already she has more than one-third the entire population of the Union. Her rate of natural increase is equal to that of the North with our advantage by reason of emigration, while this advantage even is passing away as the capabilities of the South are becoming better known.

The two principal facts to be noted are these: That the average cash compensation for labor at the South is not more than one-half or two-thirds the amount paid for the same at the North, and that capital, cognizant of this fact, and of the superior resources, facilities, and capabilities of the South, is already rushing there from all directions as the most promising field for permanent investment in active production.

On the 10th day of the month of November, 1886, I was in North Carolina and ascertained the wages paid to the men who had charge of the yard work at an important railroad station, the shifting of cars, making up of trains, &c., and to section-men and common laborers. The foreman received the highest pay of any one in the yard, which was $1 a day cash or a check on the bank, including Sabbath, or $30 per month, boarding himself, while the section-men received 50 cents and board, making about 75 cents per diem. Good farm-hands work for $6 per month.

I have here a slip, which I have verified to a large extent, from a gentleman who writes to the editor of the Press, of Philadelphia:

COLORED LABOR AT THE SOUTH—THE WAGES PAID TO THE HANDS ON A VIRGINIA PLANTATION.

To the Editor of the Press:

SIR: I read every few days in the Record and Times of Philadelphia that the negro laborer receives as much in wages at the South as North. Now, I wish to say if they mean the men who work on the farms and plantations receive as much, I beg to state it is not so. I own two plantations in Virginia, about as good as any, and I have men who farm them on shares. They pay, and I never knew any other parties to pay, but 40 cents a day and rations. The rations consist of fifteen pounds of bacon and a bushel and a half of cornmeal a month, and even at 40 cents a day they do not have steady work. Now, if the laborers here do not get more than that I would like to know it. I can hire hundreds South on farms in Virginia at 40 cents a day and the rations specified above, and I know what I am talking about, as they draw on me for money to help run their places. Dr. Bradley, who is connected with your office, can inform you who I am.

C. P. FARNER.

BURLINGTON, N. J., December 12, 1886.

You can go out from here anywhere 5, 10, 15, or 20 miles into either Virginia or Maryland and you will find that the prices for common labor are not in excess of what I have mentioned, and if anyone chooses to be at the trouble of consulting the evidence taken by the Committee on Education and Labor two or three years ago in the South he will find that these statements as to the compensation for ordinary labor, which is the great mass of labor, are not overstated in the direction of a minimum. It is true that here and there skilled labor, where it is itself in the nature of instruction, giving instruction to the surrounding labor, commands as high prices as in the North. That is very true. But the great mass of labor—ninetenths of the labor which enters into the production of the South—is this cheap form of labor with which Northern labor has to compete.

But I will not load the pages of the RECORD with the details which establish the well-known proposition that, although here and there skilled labor may be paid nearly the same as in the North, yet as a rule the cost of labor as an element in Southern production is little, if any, more than one-half the cost of like labor at the North, and that this great fact foreshadows a competition ruinous to Northern industries and with no corresponding benefit to the cheap labor in the Southern States. As an illustration of the rapidity with which capital is investing in the Southern States I cite an authoritative statement, recently given to the public, that during the first nine months of the year 1886 eighty-one millions of dollars were invested from other States and countries in Southern enterprises, chiefly manufacturing cloths and metals, with every reason to anticipate at least one hundred millions thus invested as the total for the year 1886. When we consider that this sum is more than one twenty-eighth part of the total of manufacturing capital in the United States, according to the last census, the fact becomes of startling significance to capital fixed in Northern plants, and still more so to Northern laborers, operatives, and mechanics.

Another fact should be comprehended also by the Northern people, and that is the wonderful uprising of the spirit of thrift, energy, and industry observable all over the South.

The traditional conception of the Southern people is no longer true. A new generation controls that land of surpassing resources and natural advantages. The war destroyed the old form of patrician and semi-military supremacy which madly appealed to arms to prolong its power. But informed as well as chastened by defeat the survivors of the struggle and the generation now upon the stage are full of life and hope and enterprise, and are eagerly at work to rebuild their fortunes and restore the power and prestige of their section of our common country by imitating and, if possible, surpassing all the conditions which enabled the North to triumph in the mighty conflict. No one can witness this display of fortitude in adversity and of aggressive courage, when there was room for despair, without admiration. But all the more do these facts demand the attention of the North.

Their contemplation can occasion regret only in the breast of a common enemy of both sections of the country. But they point with unerring certainty to a coming competition between the producers of both sections for the home market in all the common articles of consumption in comparison with which that between American labor and the cheap production of the Old World is mere fun. The protective tariff, or absolute prohibition, is the omnipresent and complete defense of American labor and capital whenever threatened with destruction by the commodities of lower civilizations planted on foreign soils. But here we find a cheaper production by a laborer with fewer wants than our own upon which no tariff can be levied and against which no prohibition can be raised. On the contrary, every power of the government, both State and national, is or may be invoked for its development and defense.

In this emergency what shall be done by Northern labor and by Northern capital? The question has already been answered and is being answered by the owners of a great mass of the surplus which those hitherto engaged in the diversified industries of the North, as we have already seen, are planting in the South, where future profits may replace the inevitable losses upon like investments in the North resulting from the coming competition.

But how about that capital fixed in plants already in operation in the North, and which can not be transferred to the more favorable conditions of the South, and whose owners have no capital to invest elsewhere? More serious still is this problem to Northern labor which must, as a whole, live or die where it is. Capital can endure delay, may be transferred elsewhere, or suffer absolute destruction even before its owner is reduced to the level of necessity all the while occupied by the toiler for his daily bread. The laborer must have his work every day, for he is hungry three times every day. So are his wife and their little ones.

Mr. Blaine has recently called public attention to this relation between Northern and Southern labor with his usual ability and power, but no solution of the difficulty or relief from coming calamities to the Northern laborer has been suggested. None can or ought to be suggested which will interfere with the uplifting of laborers at the South or with the rapid progress of that great section of the country in wealth and power. In April, 1886, I had occasion to discuss this subject, and believe the suggestions then made worthy of public attention, and accordingly will reproduce the substance of what was then said.

The late war was a conflict between cheap labor, which cost the master little more than its board and clothes under the institution of slavery, and the intelligent, free, highly civilized, and, consequently, highly paid labor of the North.

The war freed the slaves so far as the Constitution and statutes were concerned, but left him merely a freed man—not a free man—ignorant, unskilled, and, therefore, condemned to low wages and poverty; and so ever since the irrepressible conflict has continued between intelligence and ignorance, free labor and labor still enslaved by ignorance—cheap labor at the South and labor better paid at the North. Hitherto that competition has not been active.

But now new conditions are arising, and throughout the South Northern and European capital are developing that region of wonderful and universal resources, comprising one-third of the territory of the nation, producing all things which come from the soil, the forest, and the mine, close by abounding water-powers, with cheap transportation already provided, and all these combined with the remaining factor of very cheap labor and long hours.

This state of things is becoming more and more formidable, and Southern products and manufactures, free from all restrictions of the tariff and the like, which protect us from ruinous foreign competition—that is, enjoying the benefits of free trade forever between the States—are already disputing with us our own markets and controlling them in many articles of cotton, wool, and iron, those of the Middle and Western States especially, while the Southern market, to us so valuable, is rapidly disappearing by supplying itself.

What does all this save cheap, because ignorant, labor? Labor with long hours imposed upon children as well as adults; because labor is too ignorant and therefore too weak to defend itself.

Northern manufacturers as well as laborers will go to the wall in the end as surely as though the tariff were wholly removed and European production and Asiatic immigration were perfectly free.

Nothing but dense stupidity can fail to see that the manufacturing capital and cities of New England and the North generally are doomed if they are to compete with the cheap labor of the South, which is already becoming skillful with the hand, although, unfortunately, not fully intelligent in the discharge of the duties and in the exercise of the powers of citizenship. This condition comes only with education in the art of reading and writing and in the other common branches of knowledge, thus giving capacity to receive the benefits of that great instructor and preserver of the life of republics—the press.

It has become a question not of extending our markets, but of preserving those we now have; not of preserving our own in one line of production, but already in many lines, and ultimately in nearly all. Every Northern industry is threatened by this cheap labor of the South—the boot and the shoe maker, and the iron-worker no less than the manufacturer and the operative in cotton and wool. It is a question of preserving our vested capital and prosperity and of protecting the masses of our people in reasonable hours of continuous employment with fair pay, which enable them to supply the wants of an advanced civilization.

To one who reflects upon the fact that political unity in a genuine republic depends upon the universal diffusion of intelligence among the people, the converse is also apparent that so far as unity of political jurisdiction extends, if it is to be permanent, there must be established throughout that jurisdiction a high and homogeneous standard of intelligent thought and of moral action. Resulting from these conditions will be a uniformity of individual power, which will enable the producer in every path of industry to secure fair pay for the supply of his wants.

With wise reference to the establishment of this general condition or intelligence, and consequently of industrial independence and equality throughout the country, the national education bill has been earnestly advocated by those who have long forseen, what is now so patent that politicians and statesmen and patriots are sounding the alarm and pressing home upon our people the importance of universal intelligence and industrial training as the only remedy.

What does this national education bill propose to do? Not to lessen the development of the South by any means; but, on the contrary, to increase it. It proposes to make Southern labor and the Southern masses more intelligent, and therefore more highly civilized; to create among their rapidly-multiplying millions of both races a vast increase of the wants of life which must be supplied, so that Southern labor will consume, and therefore enjoy, as well as produce and thus be obliged to receive in order that it may purchase, as high wages as Northern labor, putting an end to the competition between the products of the North and of the South, and improving both sections by uplifting the masses of the people all over the country.

Consumption can only increase by increasing the capacity to enjoy, that is, by adding to the wants of life by higher civilization and providing higher wages or returns for labor wherewith to purchase the more diversified and costly supply of the necessaries and comforts of a higher life. Increased intelligence constitutes that better civilization and gives the power which enables its possessor to command his rightful share in the production of his labor combined with the capital of the employer. This subject of the general diffusion of intelligence throughout the country is thus seen to be as important to the North as to the South. It is the only remedy for our threatened Northern industries except a dissolution of the Government and the establishment of new political relations which will enable the North to apply the principle of protection against Southern cheap production the same as against that of any other foreign power—or a gradual sinking of the pay of Northern producers to the lower level of average Southern compensation for toil.

The schools—common and industrial—with wise and conservative organization of labor are the agencies upon which we must rely. I have abiding faith that these great agencies already in action will carry on their beneficent work until the perfect day. But every philanthropist and patriot should contribute his utmost to stimulate every energy of the individual, the State, and the nation, to lift all portions of our common country to the level of the highest, that nowhere shall any recede or fall.

I hope the gentleman in charge of this bill will be able to make these suggestions of some service to him.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am so desirous of pushing this measure to a vote and getting it out of the Senate that I shall take no time but simply ask that the pending amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment pending is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2 on page 37, line 59, after the word "he," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "dispatch" in line 63 at the end of the section, as follows:

Shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts, or either of them, until the further action of Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient dispatch.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

May consider and accept bids for building said vessels at other places.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out of section 3 the paragraph from line 7 to line 9, inclusive, and also, at the proper time, the paragraph included from line 10 to line 14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, on page 38, it is proposed to strike out the paragraph from line 7 to line 9, inclusive, as follows:

For the construction of heavily armored vessels or armored floating batteries or rams, to be used for coast and harbor defense, $6,000,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall make another motion before the bill is concluded to strike out, in line 3 of the amendment, "6" and insert "2."

I am aware that the Senate has heretofore committed itself not only to this expenditure, but to a much larger one in the same line. The Senator having charge of this bill said to the committee that he had taken six-tenths of the two bills for the purpose of the increase of the Navy heretofore passed by the Senate, and embodied them in the amendment which is now before the Senate as the recommendation of the Committee on Appproriations. I did not vote for the measures which passed the Senate, as heretofore stated, and the reasons which induced me to oppose them lead me now to advocate a modification of the amendment of the committee, which has in view the same general object, though not carrying so much money.

I do not question the propriety of some increase of what is called the navy. About five or six years ago, when I first came to consider this question as a member of the Appropriations Committee, the concern was then about heavily-armored vessels, and the thought of the world on that question of weapons of offense and defense on the water was largely in the direction of the creation of heavily-armored ships exclusively.

Since that time, as the result of experiment and observation, an almost directly opposite conclusion has been arrived at; that is, to the effect that it is not possible to make manageable armored vessels with a resisting capacity which will keep pace with the increasing power of powder and projectiles. In other words, the power of offense is greater than that of defense as applied to anything which can be manufactured of steel or iron and put afloat. It would, of course, be possible to put armor on a fort or turret on land of a thickness to resist any possible projectile, but that is not the case on the sea. And so now in place of providing, as we were a few years ago very desirous of doing, heavily armored ships for our Navy, we have gone to the other extreme, as the balance of the world is also doing, and are providing for what are called protected cruisers, which are practically unarmored ships, and whose merit is chiefly speed and not the ability to resist the power of projectiles.

I am not quite sure that we have got to the end of our tether as to knowledge to be gained either by experience of our own or by the experience of others, and I am unwilling at this time to commit Congress to the very large expenditure provided in this bill upon the theory that we are now to do the very best thing for all coming time in regard to the character of vessels to compose our Navy; but I am quite sure that if along with this bill we had to provide by new taxation the money for this expenditure the expenditure would not be made. To some extent lavish appropriations are the result of the accumulation of a large amount of money in the Treasury beyond that necessary for current expenses.

I do not wish to deny to the Senator from Maine that pleasure which he will have some of these days in case the amendment is adopted by the Senate, as I suppose it will be, of putting to flight that disorganized mob which now constitutes the House of Representatives, and which has no convictions on this subject or any other subject, and is only going to consult, when this comes into conference, its determination that there shall not be any extra session of Congress.

The Senator from Maine has been with this question a long time. This amendment represents largely his fixed judgment of what is necessary and proper. He has devoted himself to this question for many years. I will not say that like Paul he magnifies his office, but no doubt he is governed somewhat by the local feeling which he represents, and his ideas and those of others who have not given so much attention to it and who do not live upon the seacoast ought ultimately to be reconciled in order to get that which is not only the best for the country, but which fairly represents public opinion; and this means concession.

Possibly to some extent he may have been induced to recommend this large expenditure because of a feeling that it was the only thing had any prospect of being done in the way of what is called national defense. I think probably he is justified in believing that there will be no fortification bill passed this year, and that therefore if we are to have anything at all for the defense of our coast out of this year's appropriation it must be by means of additions made to our Navy. But I think he will agree with me that if we are to have coast defenses the first thing that we need is not armored gunboats, but guns. To sum up in three words, we need guns, guns, guns. That is the situation in regard to coast defense. Without guns, and those of the highest power, we can not have anything adequate in the way of defense.

With guns we may have everything, because everything else except the guns can, if necessary, be improvised within a short period of time. Boats which will carry the guns, fortifications behind which they can be manned, rafts, all the impedimenta to be put in the way of ships entering our harbor, can, all of them, be brought together quickly in case of emergency, but for the manufacture of high-power guns, which shall be equal to the emergency that might be presented in the case of war, a great deal of time is necessary.

For several years past the Senate has been desirous of having ample provision made for the manufacture of high-power guns, and has been soliciting the House of Representatives to join it in measures calculated to produce the desired result. So far nothing has been done, and I very much fear that the present session will close without anything being accomplished. But it is not wise because we can not get that which we ought to have to take that which is of minor value, as these gunboats will certainly be. I am opposed to taking advantage of the present condition of the House of Representatives, nearly one-half of whose members have not been elected to the next Congress, and all of whom are desirous of getting out of Washington at the earliest possible moment, the public interest to the contrary notwithstanding—a public interest which they have totally and wholly neglected during all the present session of Congress, and which they are prepared now to shirk by accepting anything that the Senate may offer, provided that thereby their own personal convenience may be subserved.

It is cruel in the Senator from Maine to impose on them to the extent contemplated. Has he no bowels of compassion? Will he insist on doing what the public interest does not require merely to show what he can do in the way of compulsion?

But this proposition is unfortunate because of the time at which it has been made. There has been a good deal of agitation about the question of the surplus in the Treasury, and while there have been suggestions for expending it and thus relieving the Treasury from the burden of carrying it, those propositions which have received the greatest favor have been the ones which contemplated the reduction of this surplus by the relief of the people from taxation.

For myself I greatly prefer before any extravagant expenditure of public money for a navy, or for any other purpose, that some sort of reduction of that surplus by a reduction of the taxes which bear upon the people shall be made. This measure will be regarded as in some sense one designed to forestall action of that kind. It comes at a time when we have had some talk about our strained relations with our neighboring Dominion of Canada and with the Government of Great Britain. While there is no emergency whatever, some debates and facts of recent occurrence will lead to the conclusion in the minds of many that this proposed increase of the navy is prompted by a feeling that trouble is likely to ensue, or perhaps that the pretense of trouble is made to excuse this and similar appropriations.

I am not in favor of building guns because there is any present emergency, or because I believe that within any reasonable period of time there will be anything to be provided for except the merest accidents. Of course some accidental occurrence might take place which would precipitate a conflict with some neighboring power, not, however, as I believe, with any first-class power, and it is the part of wisdom to be prepared for every possible contingency, and the one item of preparation that we need more than anything else is the procurement of guns of large caliber and high power. Given the gun, which will take several years to provide, and the other elements of defense can easily be provided, and we need not fear that we shall be set upon in an unwary moment to our disadvantage.

I know that there has been an apparent determination on the part of certain newspapers and also by the Chamber of Commerce of New York to get up an excitement on this question and to crowd Congress into precipitate action, and these newspapers and the Chamber of Commerce have assumed to represent an overruling public opinion. But it is all a mistake. There is not a body of men on the American continent who so little represent public opinion as the Chamber of Commerce of New York. That institution is in a moribund condition. It is ready for the grave. It comes occasionally in a galvanic way to utter prophecies about silver and to demand the retirement of the greenback, but the current which gives it utterance comes from London and not from America. It has neither sympathies nor interests with anything American. In the present case it is merely acting as a tender to the last speculator who desired to make use of its ancient name in order to gratify his cupidity, and so, when analyzed, it will be found that the demand of the Chamber of Commerce is not for national defense except no condition that we have it by the use of cast-iron guns. If other material is to be used, then there is no danger. More than half the pamphlet which has been sent to every Senator is devoted to denunciation of the Ordnance Bureau of the Army because it goes with the world for steel guns, and in the advocacy of the use of cast iron. Such utterances can safely be discarded.

Mr. President, the great body of the American people have not been disturbed by recent occurrences or by clamor. They are as placid as a pan of new milk. They are going about their ordinary avocations without any fear of war at home or abroad; and while they are desirous, I have no doubt sincerely so, that reasonable measures shall be adopted for the national defense, to put the Government in a condition to meet contingencies which may arise, however improbable they may seem now, they do not look upon this as any time of emergency, as any time in which anything unusual should be done, and they will be a great deal more thankful to the Government if it would take the tariff off lumber and salt, and measurably at least off sugar and other necessaries of life, than they will if the Government shall, while continuing to impose these taxes, use unnecessarily large sums of money in what they believe to be a reckless way in providing for an assumed emergency.

For two sessions of Congress, that is to say during the last and the present session, a committee of conference representing the two Houses of Congress has been at work endeavoring to perfect an agreement upon a bill which would result in the manufacture of some high-power guns, and thus put the Government in the possession of that which is not only primary but essential in the matter of defense. Nothing extravagant has been asked for by the Senate conferees. At the very outside they have been willing to take a sum not exceeding one-half what is proposed now for the navy alone by the Senate amendment under consideration. They have only asked that what knowledge was now available might be put to reasonable use.

They have been desirous that this dreary round of experiment which has been going on for the past twelve or fifteen years, and which has resulted in the expenditure of a million and a half of money without bringing to the Government one single gun fitted to be called a modern implement of warfare, should not longer be continued, to the exclusion of the doing of that which done would give us as effective guns as other governments have provided for their own use—and the possesion of which would amply provide for every emergency.

Perhaps I may, without impropriety, in view of what has found its way into the public prints, and because no better opportunity may offer before the close of the session, make mention of the differences which have arisen in that conference.

There has been a more or less widespread opinion for some time that the Ordnance Bureau of the Army was not as enterprising as it ought to be, that it was rather given to following precedents than to making them, that it had got too much into old ruts, committed itself too much to the things of the past, and consequently could not be relied upon for the genius and the enterprise as well as the practical ability necessary for the construction of the best possible weapons for modern warfare. Yielding to that not wholly from conviction but largely from a desire for an accommodation which made practical results possible, the Senate conferees said they were willing to have a board which should control these expenditures, composed of men of character, judgment, and responsibility, and which should give to the country an assurance that the very best possible would be done with the moneys we appropriate for the production of the desired results, and we proposed that a board should be created by the order of the President, to embrace but two members of the Ordnance Corps of the Navy and of the Army, the majority to be composed of the General of the Army and two civilians.

We were met by the remarkable proposition that the President of the United States should not be trusted to create this board, and that however composed it should be upon the appointment of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. And when finally, after long contention, in which precious days were wasted, there was a concession that the President should create the board, the determination was then expressed that at least a majority of that board should come from outside the Army and the Navy. And when after further discussion the point was conceded that the board should consist of the Secretaries of War and of the Navy and the General of the Army and of two civilians, to be appointed by the President, there was still such determination that this board should not in any sense recognize the existing executive authority that it was gravely proposed to call it a board of defense. It was not to be a board to advise the President.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for a moment. I submit to the Senator, with all due deference, so long as this matter is in conference and we all hope to come to an agreement within the next twelve hours, whether it would not be better to let the committee of conference come to its conclusions, and then make any statement that may be desirable. I suggest to the Senator that his remarks giving a statement of what has occurred in this very long conference may lead to results which will not be beneficial to the public interests.

Mr. PLUMB. The substance of all this has been made public ahead and presumably by the House conferees. They have put it in type and it has been cast around from time to time and it has been seen by whoever cared to know about it; it has gone into the current reports of the day from time to time, and it is no more private in a practical sense than the proceedings of this body have been private.

Mr. DAWES. With the Senator's permission I wish to say that this committee of conference has had a biographer following it persistently. Every morning after it has held a session the biography has been submitted to the public, the day's proceedings published in the newspapers with such comments and such a glossary or dictionary accompanying it as suited the purpose of some members of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. This board was to be officially called a Board of Defense. It was not to be an advisory board, it was not to be helpful to the executive authority of the country either as represented by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy or the President, but it was to be an independent body, very much I suppose such as was set up by the French people after their government had disappeared at Sedan, very much like the vigilance committee that arose at San Francisco when the civil authority was paralyzed there—a separate entity over which the President could have no control—a permanent institution exercising powers which belong to the Executive.

But this board of defense was not to be empowered to authorize the manufacture of guns. It was merely to enter upon a new series of experiments to last for years, and as the result of which at the end of five years the country would have been so far as the possession of suitable guns was concerned exactly where it is now, and such was no doubt the design.

To some extent the proposition contained in this naval bill is the reaction from this practical failure, but as it is in the wrong direction and is providing that which I do not think is essential, as it comes to us in a late hour in the session without the opportunity for that full discussion which ought to be the accompaniment of the expenditure of large sums of money, and in new directions, I think we ought not now to engage in it. I think that if we engage in the construction of two new cruisers each year we shall be better off after the lapse of a few years than we will be if we enter now pell-mell into the expenditure of $24,000,000 or $25,000,000 for the erection not only of six cruisers, but for a flotilla of gunboats, large and small.

We are now proposing to have cruisers with a speed of 20 knots an hour, and yet five years ago when we came seriously to contemplate this question of naval vessels we would have been satisfied if we could have reached a maximum limit of speed of 16 knots an hour. There has been great progress in naval architecture since that time, and who can doubt that there will be progress hereafter? While I would not wait always on experiments, but would proceed each year to utilize existing knowledge and put into our fleets the best that we can make according to our present light, I am not in favor of discounting the future to the extent that is proposed in this bill and to say that we know all or chiefly all that we shall know during the next five or six years, and therefore make an expenditure which will practically tie us up during that period of time from doing better if we can.

This comes at an inopportune time. It will convey the impression, whether we will or not, that we have had more or less partnership with the House of Representatives in that shameful neglect of duty which has prevented the reduction of taxes and thereby reduced the surplus which is the constant temptation to extravagant appropriations. The Senate has had no part in this neglect of duty. It is not permitted by the Constitution to originate revenue bills. That duty is devolved exclusively upon the other branch of Congress, and it is a duty which they have not only evaded but the responsibility of which should be left to rest upon them alone, and let the increasing surplus of the money of the people, taken from them by unnecessary taxation, stand as a monument to that inefficiency.

I would spend what was meet, but I would not spend more in these bills than I would spend if the taxes had to be levied in the bills themselves to produce the necessary money to meet the expenditure.

I think that it would be better to strike out the provision for these gunboats. They are not of the highest type of defensive vessels; they are of a kind which can be, as I said a moment ago, improvised in an emergency. We could then save some of our revenues for the time when we shall have a House of Representatives mindful of its duties and of its obligations, which will be willing to join with us in the construction of that which is essential to national defense—guns of high power.

I was in sympathy with what I understood the Senator from Alabama to say about the paragraph on page 37 of the bill, which provides that if the President shall find that the vessels ordered to be constructed on the Pacific coast or the Gulf of Mexico can not be constructed at a proper price he shall suspend such construction. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine why that would not be a useful provision to apply as well to vessels to be constructed on the Atlantic coast? Does he mean thereby to say that if those to be constructed on the Atlantic coast can not be constructed at a reasonable price they are to be constructed anyhow? Let the President build these vessels so far as we agree to build them, and certify as to all of them, no matter what the bids may be, that in his judgment the prices are fair and reasonable, and let that certification be as broad as the power of contract, applying as well to vessels manufactured in the older ship-yards on the Atlantic coast as to those in yards yet to be constructed on the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific coast.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, so much of the discussion that has arisen upon this bill has been entirely foreign to all its provisions, that I feel some sense of intrusion in trying to address myself to the amendments that are now sought to be stricken out.

This is not so formidable a bill nor so extravagant a bill as the total amounts provided in it at first view would seem to indicate. The Senate committee in reporting it have increased the appropriations contained in the House bill by the sum of twenty million nine hundred and seventy-eight thousand and odd dollars, in round numbers $21,000,000, but the amendments the Senator from Kansas seeks to strike from the bill, unlike most legislation which Congress has embarked in heretofore for the purpose of building up the Navy, do not appropriate piecemeal, they do not separately and distinctively appropriate, year by year, and thereby in each bill carry the amount of actual increase for the year, but learning by experience, as the Senator from Kansas has recommended that we do, and in that has given wise and pertinent counsel, the committee has found that in building these great naval structures, or in building armament for them, or armor plate for their protection and to make them impregnable, or relatively so, the money can be much better expended and more reasonable contracts can be made if the total amount necessary to begin and continue upon and complete these works is all given at once.

If investigation into the different branches of this great subject has disclosed anything it is this: If the Senate, including the Senator from Kansas, who has been engaged in long and laborious and faithful service in looking at one of the great branches of the national defense subject, has learned anything it is that piecemeal appropriations are not the need, but that general extensive appropriations, covering, reaching out and embracing the entire subject are in the end the cheapest. So the Committee on Appropriations in the amendments submitted to the Senate has provided that the entire appropriations for the six new, fast cruisers, for the structures for harbor defense, for torpedoes and torpedo-boats, and for everything contained in the former bills, shall be appropriated in the bill here. Therefore the amendments contain provisions to the amount of $23,200,000, and, as the Senator from Kansas has said, they do in effect increase this appropriation bill to nearly $40,000,000; but they do not increase the expenditures of the Navy Department for the year to which this appropriation bill applies in any such degree as those figures indicate. The items are made up as follows, aggregating the $23,200,000:

For the six projected steel cruisers, $9,000,000.
Premiums for speed, $1,200,000.

Not one dollar of that may be paid or will be paid if the cruisers do not attain the speed or go beyond the speed of 20 knots an hour, and if they do attain that speed no man here would object to the payment.

Armament for the cruisers, $2,880,000.
Construction of armored vessels with floating batteries and rams for harbor defense, $6,000,000.
Light-draught gunboats, $800,000.
Torpedo-boats, $720,000.
Torpedoes and torpedo appliances, $600,000.
Armament of said vessels, $2,000,000.
Aggregating $23,200,000.

Mr. President, I venture to say that if the bill should pass I will stake any reputation I may have for intelligence upon this subject on the prediction that of the $23,200,000 appropriated in this bill for the purpose specifically designated, not more than $5,000,000 can possibly be expended between now and the first day of July, 1888. I do not believe so much as that can be expended. Everything in the way of preparation has got to be done, which consumes the time and costs nothing. All the specifications, the bids, the conferences upon them, and the final closing of the contract, the entering upon it, must all be taken up in the time between now and July 1, 1888, and what is done after these preliminaries have been gone through in my judgment will not exceed $3,000,000, and I venture the prediction that it will not be over $5,000,000. Then the appropriation for the year is only increased $5,000,000.

The House of Representatives, looking to the increase of the navy, but not as I believe in so wise a direction, although I have great deference for the investigations which have been pursued by the gentlemen interested in that subject at the other end of the Capitol, have put in the bill a provision which increases the appropriations for the next fiscal year for the increase of the navy to the amount of $2,430,000. The appropriations in this bill, if passed as the committee has reported it, will only raise the appropriations for the increase of the navy provided for in the bill as passed by the House of Representatives to the extent of $2,700,000.

So the bill is not a formidable one in the way that the Senator from Kansas deprecates. It does not involve any draft, or raid, or assault upon the gathered surplus in the Treasury. There has not been a year in the last sixteen years that Great Britain has not, in time of profound peace, building upon an already then colossal naval establishment, spent from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 and $12,000,000 a year to increase the efficiency of her navy. The French people in the last ten years have followed in the same direction and spent some years more money than Great Britain has done. So taking Germany and Italy and Spain, and there is not one of those powers that has not exceeded any appropriation that may possibly be expended by this bill during the next fiscal year, with all the navy that they have to start with.

I wish Senators to understand that the Committee on Appropriations in reporting these bills has not forced upon the Senate, intruded upon it any crude and extravagant and remarkable proposition. Indeed the committee on the part of the Senate has held its hands from following the already arrived at conclusion of the Senate. The amendments that are reported here only contain a portion of the two bills that were passed within the last three weeks by the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives, where they have been entombed and no notice given to them. Those bills, instead of six vessels that are included in the amendments now reported by the Committee on Appropriations, provided for ten vessels, and instead of $6,000,000 appropriated in this bill those bills proposed to appropriate $10,000,000. The committee has only taken about three-fifths of the appropriation in the bills that have already passed the Senate, and therefore I claim that the Committee on Appropriations has been moderate in this regard.

The features generally that are here (and I am not going to take much time) are simple, easily explained. They contain, first, the provisions for the fast ships. They contain the provisions which shall be embraced in the contracts with the contractors of an initial point of 20 knots an hour, with an incentive to exceed that in the way of a premium of $200,000 for each knot above, or $50,000 for each quarter knot, and a penalty if they fall below of the same amount, that shall keep the contractor always up, aiming at a high mark. There is no need of limitation as you run down, because the penalty is in itself a limit. If you can build one of these ships for $1,500,000 that shall attain a speed of 20 knots an hour, making her almost the fastest of all the cruisers that to-day float on the globe, it is well worth that and more. If the contractor fails and only produces a 19-knot ship you get her $200,000 cheaper than any man can afford to build. If you can only get an 18-knot ship, which is a remarkably fast ship, you get it for $1,100,000. So the extreme limitation as to speed takes care of itself.

The committee studied this subject carefully. It may have been wrong. It may be that you can not attain 20 knots. It is a great desideratum. It is a marvelous ship that will go 20 knots an hour, but consulting with contractors, looking over what had been done in the Old World, learning that one of the latest contracts that has been entered into by one of the most distinguished firms of naval ship-builders has guaranteed 20 knots an hour, the committee believed that this is a possible thing.

It has faith in the ingenuity, in the device, in the enterprise of the American mechanic, of the naval architect heretofore largely undeveloped in this country. There are provisions in the bill by which the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to call to his aid in making the specifications for these ships all the expert civilian talent, and wit, and genius upon this subject that he may find, so that the contractors in bidding for these structures shall not be limited to cut-and-dried Procrustean plans that are made alone in the Navy Department, but that some of the enterprise, some of the enlightenment, some of the genius which radiates outside of that Department may be evoked by the Secretary and may add to the power that he has, and may help to guide his hand.

All these things have been put in here. They may not and are not a perfect plan; undoubtedly that is so. They may be criticised; they may be improved; but looking at it as carefully as possible, first in the Naval Committee, which sent the two bills to the Senate, then in the Senate that adopted them, then in the Committee on Appropriations that has taken three-fifths of the amount in those bills, this subject has been so far as possible looked into carefully and attentively. I should be glad to see these amendments adopted by the Senate and sent to the other House just as they are, so that in conference we may endeavor to persuade that body to go on.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I have but one word more.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine, before he closes, if he does not regard it as wise economy that the best way for the United States to keep the peace would be to show the nations of the earth the ability of this Government to preserve peace?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. I was going to say, begging pardon for taking up even this little time, for I want to get the bill through, that I hope with the Senator from Kansas we are not on the eve of any hostile conflict with a foreign nation. We have had a wonderful exemption for twenty-five years. While other nations have been spending money we have saved it, and instead of accumulating our debt we have largely paid it. We have reduced taxes in years past as no other country ever did. We have gone on utterly regardless of the question of the public safety as against any possible foe that might menace and endanger our peace and our prosperity. I do not believe that in the next twenty-five years we are to be subject to such a happy exemption from all foreign embroilments or intricacies or complications. When anything may come I do not know. I hope not immediately; but, as the Senator from Texas has well said, the way to avert war, the way to save us for peace and to keep us in security, is to be in some degree prepared if war does come.

We do not need the great colossal establishments of the Old World. We do not propose to build up an English navy, or a French navy, perhaps not an Italian navy; but it is a reproach and a shame that so great a people as ours, with so abundant resources, with an overflowing Treasury, with a sea-coast of 10,000 miles, with billions upon billions of aggregated property in large cities lying open and exposed to any second-rate ship of any third-rate power that may either destroy or levy contribution—it is a shame that the American people are found without a respectable naval establisment. It is worse than a shame that it is found in its harbors upon which are situate these great cities without a single gun that can compete with the arms of foreign nations, and without a single floating structure in the waters of those harbors that may in any way say "nay" to the hostile approach of any foe.

The committee is seeking in these two things in a measure to remedy this difficulty. It can not be done to-morrow; it will take time as it is, but it ought to be begun now, and the amendment reported by the Senate committee ought to be sent to the House of Representatives within the next hour, so that they may be got into conference, and this bill be sent to the President in time for him to examine it, to scrutinize it, to know what is in it, before he will, as I have no doubt he will gladly, affix his name and the signature that makes it the written law.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its amendment to the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 3853) to authorize the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama to erect a bridge across the Coosa River;

A bill (H. R. 3600) for the removal of the charge of desertion from John Rockwell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (H. R. 1710) for the relief of T. J. Payne;

A bill (H. R. 1903) granting a pension to Henry Canode;

A bill (H. R. 2358) granting a pension to Mary Renfro;

A bill (H. R. 3930) for the relief of Wells C. McCool;

A bill (H. R. 3931) to grant a pension to Nancy Gunsales;

A bill (H. R. 3963) granting a pension to Henry P. Reed;

A bill (H. R. 4260) for the relief of Henry Linebaugh, late of Company A, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 4585) granting a pension to Mrs. Fannie Carman;

A. bill (H. R. 4678) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan, deceased, late a private in Company A, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 4745) granting a pension to William S. Bewley;

A bill (H. R. 5056) for the relief of George Lemon;

A bill (H. R. 5171) granting a pension to Missouri Anderson;

A bill (H. R. 5927) for the relief of Louisa Kearney;

A bill (H. R. 6162) granting a pension to Joseph Potter;

A bill (H. R. 6423) for the relief of Mary Kaylor;

A bill (H. R. 6656) for the relief of Mary Tarbell;

A bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of General Speed S. Fry;

A bill (H. R. 6823) granting a pension to Peter P. Hoffman;

A bill (H. R. 6918) to increase the pension of Lewis M. Strong;

A bill (H. R. 6937) for the relief of George D. Paul;

A bill (H. R. 7176) for the relief of Isaac Crawford;

A bill (H. R. 7221) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh;

A bill (H. R. 7643) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart;

A bill (H. R. 7952) granting a pension to Mary Parrott;

A bill (H. R. 8067) to pension Andrew J. Vanorder;

A bill (H. R. 8355) for the relief of Sarah A. Jones;

A bill (H. R. 8384) for the relief of Mahala Brown;

A bill (H. R. 8437) granting a pension to Thomas Weekly;

A bill (H. R. 8591) directing the Secretary of War to cause the name of Fred. B. Barnes to be entered as a private on the muster-roll of Company I, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8798) granting a pension to Thomas J. Hays;

A bill (H. R. 8826) granting a pension to Mary M. Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 8828) granting a pension to Giles Wright;

A bill (H. R. 8829) granting a pension to Jacob Teits;

A bill (H. R. 9143) granting a pension to Dr. Sabin Stocking;

A bill (H. R. 9170) for the relief of Green Fields;

A bill (H. R. 9213) granting a pension to Mary Corbett;

A bill (H. R. 9248) to increase the pension of Richard Foreman;

A bill (H. R. 9301) granting a pension to Joseph Jones;

A bill (H. R. 9401) granting an increase of pension to H. H. Dodd;

A bill (H. R. 9664) placing the name of Mrs. Lydia Burdick on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 9928) granting a pension to Moses Williams;

A bill (H. R. 10050) to increase the pension of Capt. Frank Bell;

A bill (H. R. 10262) granting a pension to Lawrence O'Conner;

A bill (H. R. 10470) granting a pension to Mrs. S. C. Goodin; and

A bill (H. R. 11111) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hilliker.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10425) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River, at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

REPORT ON ASIATIC CHOLERA.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the official report of the investigations of Dr. Edward O. Shakespeare in Europe and Asia, concerning the nature, causes, method of prevention and cure of epidemic or Asiatic cholera, made by the direction of the President of the United States, be printed, with the accompanying illustrations, and that there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of State, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, said report to be printed under the editorial supervision of Dr. Shakespeare.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. LE FEVRE, and Mr. D. B. HENDERSON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS IN IOWA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 2, 1887, a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in regard to lands granted to the State of Iowa by act of May 12, 1864; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine can not more than I do appreciate the necessity of improving every moment of our time. Any unnecessary consumption of it now would be in my opinion well-nigh a crime; but I think it necessary to take a few minutes upon the subject under discussion.

While the Senator from Kansas was endeavoring to explain the difficulties which the conference committee on the part of the Senate had in their efforts to meet the demand for more efficient provision for coast defenses I received a telegram dated New York, and signed "Ambrose Snow, chairman Chamber of Commerce committee on coast defenses and president of the Board of Trade and Transportion," in these words:

The whole commercial community anxiously hope some agreement providing adequate immediate coast defenses may be made. If not, public opinion will compel an extra session, which business men dread. I send duplicate hereof to your fellow-conferees.

I do think, sir, it is time well spent if some one can show to the country why it is that no adequate provision is made for coast defense, and if the Senator from Maine will pardon so much consumption of time I will endeavor as well as I may to let it be known.

The condition of the coast defenses was, six months ago, precisely as it is now. If there is to-day any necessity for what is called in this telegram adequate provision for coast defense, it existed six months ago, and it has so existed for years, yet the House of Representatives, in the face of that condition of things, sent us this provision for the coast defense of the country:

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including the procurement of steel forgings for the manufacture of heavy guns; for guns, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, implements, and materials for which shall all be of American production, their trial and proof, and the testing of improvements of the same, and all necessary expenses incident thereto—

How much? For all the necessary expenses incident to an adequate provision for coast defenses, "$500,000!"

Mr. EDMUNDS. With 4,000 miles of coast and millions of inhabitants in cities along it.

Mr. DAWES. I can not point out now, but I did undertake, when this bill came back to the Senate from the committee, as well as I could, to show how utterly defenseless was every harbor in the United States.

To this provision the Senate in an endeavor to meet in some measure, if not fully, the call of the country for adequate provision for coast defenses attached this amendment:

For the purchase, manufacture, and erection of the necessary tools and machinery for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance at the Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., for guns in process of construction, gun-carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, implements, and materials for the trial and proof of such ordnance, and to complete the two 10-inch breech-loading steel guns now under fabrication, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, including compensation of draughtsman on gun construction while employed in the Ordnance Bureau, $400,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many guns?

Mr. DAWES. Two guns there.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby are, authorized jointly to make contracts with responsible steel manufacturers, after suitable advertisements, to continue not less than thirty days, in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed, for the supply of rough-bored, rough-turned and tempered forged steel in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, for army and navy purposes, in quantity not to exceed 10,000 gross tons, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection and tests at each stage of manufacture and including all the parts of each caliber specified: Provided, That no money shall be expended except for steel accepted and delivered; and each bidder shall contract to deliver yearly a specified quantity of each caliber, the time of delivery of the smaller calibers to commence at the expiration of not more than eighteen months and the largest calibers at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the execution of the contract; and all the forgings shall be of American product and manufactured in the United States; and one-half of the material purchased under this provision shall be for the use of the War Department, and one-half for the use of the Navy Department, in the armament of ships heretofore or hereafter authorized by Congress; and for the purposes of this section the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available during six years from the date of the execution of the contract.

That was not a very adequate provision, Mr. President, but that was an effort to make provision. The country will see how six months ago the question stood between the two branches of the legislative department of the Government, the one proposing an expenditure of $500,000 in the ordinary way of picking up matters and tinkering roofs and repairing sheds and the like, and the other branch, the Senate, proposing to enter upon the work of providing for the production of steel in quantities and in form proper for the production of guns of high power and at the same time of establishing a manufactory where the Government could finish off these guns and in process of time make some progress towards that adequate provision for the defense of the coast of this country; as to which the New York Chamber of Commerce says that unless it is done now within twenty-four or forty-eight hours, public opinion will force upon us an extra session of Congress.

What was the result as between the two branches upon those propositions? The bill went to a committee of conference in the last session. That committee of conference was utterly unable to agree, the Senate conferees adhering to an effort in this manner to produce something for coast defenses and the conferees on the part of the other House adhering to the miserable pittance of $500,000 to be distributed in the manner I have stated; and thus they stood, two distinct disagreements reported to the different branches, and twice a new committee of conference appointed to bring about the result.

The question thus stated between the two branches rested in that committee after these two ineffectual efforts during the vacation, and its sittings were renewed at this session of Congress. In their effort to meet this demand which now is sent to us in this peremptory manner by telegram, the conferees on the part of the Senate offered to add to the proposition for the manufacture of steel guns ample and large provision for the immediate construction of cast-iron guns and cast-iron mortars.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts who it was that sent the peremptory telegram? It was not understood in this part of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman who signs it is Ambrose Snow, chairman of the chamber of commerce committee on coast defenses, and president of the Board of Trade and Transportation, New York.

In addition to the proposition which the Senate made to the House of Representatives at the last session, and which the conferees in conference insisted upon maintaining in view of their conviction as well as that of the Senate that there was a demand for efficient provision for coast defense, the Senate conferees have offered to add to this:

SEC. 7. For the construction of 12-inch rifled mortars, either of cast iron, steel-hooped, or mortars principally or all of cast iron, or mortars principally or all of steel, either muzzle-loading or breech-loading, all as the board hereinafter provided for shall determine, to fire a projectile weighing not less than 615 pounds, to have a maximum range and an accuracy of fire; if of cast iron, to be equally efficient in all respects to any cast-iron mortars of such size yet tested by the Government; if cast iron, steel-hooped, or if made principally of steel, to be equally efficient in all respects with the steel mortars at present made by others, as shown by the published records of like tests, $1,000,000.

Also—

SEC. 9. For the manufacture of twenty 12-inch cast-iron rifle-guns, about 33 calibers length of bore, and weight not less than 104,000 pounds, not exceeding $520,000; for carriages suitable for the same, and such projectiles as the board may order for these guns, including the proving and transportation of these guns, $480,000. Each gun, before it is accepted, shall be subjected to such test as shall be prescribed by said board, not less in effect than that prescribed by statute of July 5, 1884, section 2, making appropriations for fortifications and other purposes, &c.

And also an offer to any person who "shall produce one or more 12-inch, breech-loading, single-charge rifle-guns, of not more than 33 calibers in length of bore, and not more than 104,000 pounds weight, for projectiles of not less than 800 pounds weight each, which guns are to be made principally or wholly of steel"—in short, just such a gun as this—an offer to any private establishment that will produce it to pay for it such a premium as will induce it to make a plant for that purpose, provided the gun shall answer the test, and then to purchase of the maker thirty more such guns.

And also that any man who will produce a cast-iron gun that shall produce a result like to the gun that is now at Sandy Hook, the United States will pay him a premium for that gun sufficient to induce him to make a plant adequate for the production of such guns, and will then purchase of him for a certain price fifty more such guns.

Mr. HAWLEY. That gun has only been fired one hundred and thirty-seven times, and is used up. Are you willing to buy more of them?

Mr. DAWES. The difficulty is that no two men can tell the same story about the results of a trial of a cast-iron gun. The statement that the Senator from Connecticut has just made has been repeated before the committee; but men equally competent, the Senator will permit me to say, have testified that the cast-iron gun at Sandy Hook has borne the severest test ever applied to such a gun, and is now a good gun.

So, without entering into that discussion, whether the gun at Sandy Hook is a good gun or not, we proposed to so guard the proposition that no gun can be put upon the Government that will not in the result be equal to any cast-iron gun ever made. That is the proposition, the details of which I have no time to enter into.

With these propositions for the production of steel and steel guns adopted by the Senate last year, with the other proposition which comes from those at the other end of the Capitol who believe in cast-iron guns more than the Senate does, the Senate conferees have offered to take that load upon their shoulders in order to get the proposition to manufacture steel in such quantities and of such a character as will produce the highest type of steel gun. They have been willing to take any proposition that did anything towards coast defense, whether it be a product that is equal to the test, or only secondary in quality, in order that there might come out of this conference something that would look towards meeting this demand for coast defense. What has been the result?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the Senator from Massachusetts to yield, that a message may be received.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

RETURN OF A BILL.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me to offer a resolution asking for the return of a bill from the House of Representatives?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be received.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi at Grand Tower, Ill.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I am not indorsing cast-iron guns, nor are the Senate conferees. They may be good; they may not. There is a diversity of opinion upon that subject; but the Senate conferees—I am defending them at this moment from the charge made by this biographer of this conference that has followed us everywhere—were willing to take a million and a half dollars of experiments in cast-iron guns, thinking that they would be of secondary use, if not of primary use, in order to get a plant and establish some permanent system for the production of guns that would be of the highest type.

Now, sir, with these propositions from the Senate conferees before the committee of conference, what has been the result? We have had session after session till within the last two or three days. Within the last twenty-four hours four ineffectual invitations have been sent to the conferees on the part of the other House to confer still further upon the question whether the country shall have or shall not have efficient provision made for her coast defense—four ineffectual invitations to confer within the last twenty-four hours have been made to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you mean within the present twenty-four hours?

Mr. DAWES. Within the last twenty-four hours; and if this Congress adjourns without this provision, and if, as is intimated here, public opinion is going to force upon us an extra session of Congress to make this adequate provision, the charge does not lie at the door of the Senate or of its representatives upon this conference. They have done everything they could to secure that end. They have yielded, on suggestions which were explained by the Senator from Kansas, their own judgment upon the question of a board to take charge of this matter.

They thought it best and wisest that the administration of this Government should have charge itself of such a great work as this, those officers being responsible; but the Senate conferees were ready to trust them and put all this power in their hands. They were met, however, as the Senator from Kansas says, with a proposition that we take the subject out of the executive branch of this Government and set up an independent institution, responsible in no respect to the Executive, to carry out this system. When, after a long season of conference we succeeded in getting to this point, we yielding a board, provided the majority of the board should be of the executive branch and the minority appointed by the President himself, all conference in reference to these particular measures, or any measures so far as I know, has been withdrawn, and as I have said within the last twenty-four hours it has been impossible to get a meeting of the conferees.

The country should know why it is, if we are to adjourn in this condition of affairs, whether critical or otherwise, that the whole coasts of this country remain undefended, her great harbors and commercial cities at the mercy of any hostile ship of war that floats on the ocean.

The Senate conferees, in this proposition which they made in addition to the $6,000,000 to be invested in the course of six years in the establishment and production of steel and steel guns, included in their offer, in order to win the support of others, the amount of $11,897,500 in the aggregate, including the $6,000,000 for steel, and yet they are unable to make a report here at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean by that they can not get the conferees to attend?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator wants me to be more explicit. I have said that at least four ineffectual invitations have been sent to the conferees on the part of the other House within the last twenty-four hours to meet and confer on the questions of difference between the two Houses on a bill that has been in conference ever since last July.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to take a moment of the time when I know the Senate is anxious to dispose of the bill now before it, but I can not permit the remarks of the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Massachusetts to go out to the country without a few remarks.

The question of the amount to be appropriated for coast defenses so called has been a matter of very earnest and serious consideration by the committee of conference, of which the Senator from Massachusetts is chairman, since July last, of which committee I am a member. The questions involved have not been considered in any partisan spirit, nor do I think the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Kansas does full justice to the conferees on the part of the House when it is sought to throw on them the entire responsibility of a failure to agree up to this hour.

The fact is known to every member of the Senate and to the country, from the testimony of the highest officials of the Government, that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have since the close of the war, since 1869, recognized that the ordnance officers of this Government, both in the War and Navy Departments, have not kept abreast of the times, and have not manufactured guns and other instruments of warfare that it was considered wise for this Government to expend large amounts upon. Since 1869 down to this hour the whole problem has been in whose hands large amounts of money should be placed for the purpose of manufacturing large guns. As early as 1869 this body, then composed almost two-thirds of members of the Republican party, organized by a resolution a special committee which made a report through its chairman, the late Senator Howard, of Michigan, in which they make some very significant statements. They were true then and are true now. I will read an extract on page 4 of this report—Report No. 266, of the Fortieth Congress, third session:

> First, the ordnance officers, knowing their positions secure to them for life, have not felt the incentive to exertion and improvement which stimulates men not in Government employ, and they have become attached to routine and to the traditions of their corps, jealous of innovation and new ideas, and slow to adopt improvements. An illustration of this is found in the fact that the late war was fought with muzzle-loading guns (with the exception of carbines for cavalry), although a variety of excellent breech-loaders were urged upon the attention of the Government constantly, and the honor was reserved for Prussia, with a weapon inferior to many American inventions, to demonstrate the immeasurable superiority of breech-loading guns.
> In the second place, these officers, educated to a specialty and proud of their positions, come to look upon themselves as possessing all the knowledge extant upon the subject of ordnance, and regard citizen inventors and mechanics who offer improvements in arms as ignorant and designing persons and pretentious innovators who have no claim to consideration. Instead of encouraging the inventive talent of the country, these officers seem to have constantly discouraged it, and many complaints of improper and oppressive treatment have been laid before the committee by persons who have sought to draw the attention of the proper authorities to what were supposed to be vital principles connected with their art. Another difficulty that has retarded progress in the science of ordnance has been the fact that prominent officers have been inventors of arms, and have possessed sufficient influence to secure the adoption and retention in service of their inventions, frequently without due regard to the question of real merit, and to the prejudice of other and better devices brought forward by citizens or developed in other countries. A further difficulty, calling for a remedy, lies in the want of co-operation between the War and Navy ordnance bureaus.

Further on the report says:

> It is impossible—

Mr. President, this was four years after the close of the war—

> It is impossible to use navy ammunition in an army gun or army ammunition in a navy gun. Co-operation between the Army and Navy while in active service is thus greatly restricted, and in some cases has been entirely prevented. Offensive operations on the part of a joint expedition of the two might be brought to an end by the want of projectiles for the land forces, while the ships of the Navy possessed a surplus of the very articles required, which could not be used by the land forces.

Such was the condition of the two Departments charged with the manufacture and construction of guns; and in the report of the Secretary of the Navy submitted to this body, dated on the 30th of November, 1885, the Secretary of the Navy says:

> The highest official authority in our service said in 1876:
> "There is no navy in the world that is not in advance of us with regard to ships and guns, and I, in common with the older officers of the service, feel an anxiety on the subject which can only be appreciated by those who have to command fleets and take them into battle."
> And so recently as 1883 the same distinguished authority stated that it was universally admitted "that we have no navy either for offense or defense."

And the Secretary adds:

> The country has expended since July 1, 1868, more than three years subsequent to the close of the late civil war, over seventy-five millions of money on the construction, repair, equipment, and ordnance of vessels, which sum, with a very slight exception, has been substantially thrown away; the exception being a few ships now in process of construction.

There has not been a report made to Congress from that day to this which has not demonstrated the fact that the Ordnance Bureau, both of the Navy and of the Army, have been unequal to the demands of the country. Their long tenure of office, their desire to exclude the inventive genius of the country from coming forth and producing guns, have kept us in this deplorable condition. It is a most startling illustration of what this theory of excluding the active men who come up from the ordinary avocations of life from positions and opportunities to display their talents in the Government service has brought us to. In this condition of affairs we are met as we were in 1868 and 1869, and the House of Representatives, coming as they do every two years fresh from the people, a House of Representatives, Democratic as it is, has taken the position that every House of Representatives has taken, that we will not make large appropriations for the construction of guns and the manufacture of steel until the door can be thrown open to the inventive genius of our American people to bring forth and produce ordnance equal to that manufactured by any other people on the face of the earth.

I understand the position of the conferees of the House—and until this debate to-day I did not suppose that it was altogether proper to tell the Senate or the country all that occurred in a conference committee—the proposition pure and simple is that we will not, say the conferees on the part of the House, agree to appropriate ten, fifteen, or twenty million dollars for the manufacture of guns or of steel as long as it is under the control of a board of officers who have never produced anything since the war and who, if the report of Mr. Howard is to be credited, as I have no doubt it is, even during the war so conducted the Ordnance Bureau that it was, to say the least, unsatisfactory.

Mr. DAWES. Do not forget to tell what kind of a board we agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. DAWES. Do not forget to tell the Senate how we agreed to take it out of that.

Mr. GORMAN. No, Mr. President, we have not got it out of the rut yet.

Mr. DAWES. No; because the House conferees do not agree to our proposition.

Mr. GORMAN. We have not come to a conclusion yet, and hence I took the liberty with my friend from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to suggest when he brought this question to the attention of the Senate that I did not think it was wise to discuss it while considering the naval bill. I thought it would be better not to bring it before this body until that conference committee was ready to report.

The differences have been radical; there is room for the broadest discussion. The movement has not been made, so far as I have been able to see, in any partisan spirit. A Senate that is Republican, opposed to the present Administration, upon every occasion when the interest of the country required it in the matter of armament and of the construction of guns or the construction of a Navy, has met the question as Americans. You have been probably far in advance of the other branch of Congress in the amount of money that you are ready to appropriate, but the Representatives of the people, equally earnest with the Senate, equally desirous of doing that which the country's interest requires, have not been ready to go so far or exactly in the way that the Senate desires. But still they have the same purpose in view, and will come to the same general result.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator let me read the method by which the Senate conferees proposed to the House to have all this done?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator may do that after I conclude, if he will pardon me.

Mr. DAWES. Will not the Senator read it?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, evidently there is no intention to pay attention to the naval bill before the Senate, and we may as well take a recess now. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Maryland, of course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to a motion for an executive session, and then we can take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. GORMAN. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After one hour and seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

The message also announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. BINGHAM managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

RECESS.

On motion of Mr. PALMER (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the Senate took a recess until half past 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past 8 o'clock p. m.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. MORRILL. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not understand that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas was adopted.

Mr. HALE. If the Chair had not stated what the measure was before the Senate, from the discussion that has occurred nobody would have known what was before the Senate. I trust the vote will be taken at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, on page 38, it is proposed to strike out the clause from line 7 to line 9, inclusive, as follows:

For the construction of heavily armored vessels or armored floating batteries or rams, to be used for coast and harbor defense, $5,000,000.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong this discussion and to finish the statement I was making if the Senator from Maine wishes to go on and complete the bill. If he wishes to have it voted upon without further discussion, I have no desire to detain the Senate a moment even to complete the statement I was making when the Senate took a recess.

Mr. HALE. I do not desire in any way to interfere with the Senator from Maryland. He is in an entirely legitimate way answering things that were presented in this debate upon a subject-matter entirely foreign to the bill which is before the Senate, and I recognize the right that he has and the fitness that there is in his replying; but I should be very glad at this stage of the session and with the intrinsic importance of this bill to have the discussion confined to its merits and demerits, and to have votes upon the different propositions involved in it and upon the amendment offered to it. When we get this measure out of the way, if the unborn report of the committee of conference on the fortification bill of last year is to be considered by the Senate, let the matters which have been under discussion be considered in a proper way upon such report when it does come before us.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no desire to even finish the statement I was making when the Senate took a recess, and I recognize the fact that the discussion has no place in the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. I therefore will yield and reserve whatever I may have to say for some other occasion, when it may be more properly said.

Mr. HALE. I am very much obliged to the Senator, and I hope we shall now have a vote upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that the Senator from Kansas either had proposed or intended to propose another amendment. The clerks inform the Chair that the amendment is not indicated upon the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Are amendments now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments are now in order to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the reading of the bill been concluded?

Mr. HALE. Let that be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs under the previous order of the Senate upon the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. I hope that will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order being that the bill was to be read for amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. So I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the committee?

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at section 4.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section 4, after line 28, at the end of the bill, to insert:

For the purchase by the Secretary of the Navy, if he shall deem the purchase advisable, of the Destroyer, a screw steam-vessel of iron designed and built by Capt. John Ericsson, armed with a submarine gun, and projectile torpedo, with their accessories, including an independent submarine gun, $112,000: Provided, That the said vessel, steam-machinery, guns, projectiles, and their accessories shall be found to be in perfect working order and ready for immediate use: Provided, That it shall satisfactorily appear that said vessel, steam-machinery, guns, projectiles, and experiments developing the same have cost that amount; and to enable the Secretary of the Navy, after said purchase, to care for and operate the same, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. On page 12, in section 1, line 266, after the word "for," I move to insert the words "not more than;" so as to read:

For not more than two timber dry-docks, to be located at such navy-yards as the Secretary of the Navy may indicate, each dock to be not less than 480 feet in length, the cost of the two docks not to exceed in the aggregate the amount herein appropriated, $1,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In section 1, on page 9, after line 192, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, after line 192, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase the steamer Stiletto for use as a torpedo-boat for experimental purposes, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. In section 1, on page 18, after line 425, I propose an amendment. It is proper to say that this amendment was reported by the Naval Committee and sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. That is upon a report of the Naval Committee, is it not?

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but by some mishap it failed to get there in time for the committee to consider it. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, after line 425, it is proposed to insert:

For the improvement of Naval Hospital Park at Portsmouth, Va., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5959) granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

WORK IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the permission of the Senator having the pending appropriation bill in charge to offer a resolution. I ask that it may be printed so that it may be called up in the morning.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the gentleman from Missouri will be read if there be no objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee to consist of five Senators be, and the same is hereby, constituted and appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and examine the methods of business and work in the Executive Departments of the Government, the time and attention devoted to the operations thereof by the persons employed therein, and generally to inquire into and report to the Senate the causes of the delays in transacting the public business said to exist in some of said Departments.

The said committee shall have power and it shall be its duty to inquire and report what further public buildings are necessary to the transaction of the public business in Washington and the proper uses of the public buildings now existing in said city.

Said committee is hereby authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer, and shall have power to send for persons and papers and to sit during the recess of the Senate next to occur. The compensation of any clerk or stenographer, not exceeding the rate of $8 per day, employed by said committee, and its other necessary expenses shall be paid out of the appropriation for the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rules and be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does anybody object to it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was offered this evening, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] stating that he would call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is no objection to it let it be passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there is no objection to it I should like to have it adopted now.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to hear what it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought that matter had gone over. I did not listen to it because the Senator said it would come up in the morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge as to the amendment beginning in line 340, on page 15. I observe that the navy-yard at Pensacola seems to be dismantled entirely by that amendment. I should like to inquire what is the occasion of striking out that provision.

Mr. HALE. The appropriations for clerical force in the navy-yard at Pensacola were stricken out at the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], who desires to have the committee look into the question of the suitability of the appointments there. He states that until within the last two years these places have been filled by Pensacola and Florida residents, as is proper and fitting, but that under the present management and administration of naval affairs all of these places in Florida have been filled by Northern parties imported and sent down there.

It is a reversal of the common idea of the carpet-bagger, and it was a surprise to the committee. Therefore these provisions have been stricken out in order that inquiry might be made whether too many men are there, and whether they have been within the last two years sent down from the North as carpet-baggers to fill these places, which, under a Republican administration, were filled by residents of Florida. I know nothing whatever about it except what the Senator from Florida says.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole have made certain amendments to the bill, and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the amendments read as they are reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 1, line 37, under the head of "miscellaneous," after the word "library" to insert "including purchase of books and periodicals;" so as to read:

Care of library, including purchase of books and periodicals.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont. All of these amendments have been read. I have never known this to be asked before, and I appeal to him to let this bill proceed in the ordinary course, so that it may go to the other branch, and that we may have a conference upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before I vote upon these amendments made in Committee of the Whole I propose to hear them read.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Vermont was not here when they were acted upon as in Committee of the Whole it is not the fault of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the report of the amendments that have been made I demand the reading of the amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment has been read. Does the Senator from Vermont desire to have each amendment acted on separately.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment which has been stated?

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 86, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Publication of surveys of Mexican coast: For preparing and engraving on copper plates the surveys of Mexican coast, $7,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, after line 86, to insert:

Naval training station, Coaster's Harbor Island: For repairs and improvements of the buildings now used under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for the instruction of naval officers; heating, lighting, and furniture for same; books and stationery; freight and other contingent expenses, including facing building with Portland cement, $12,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, under the head of "Bureau of Ordnance," in section 1, line 141, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of land for proving and ranging ground for naval guns, and for constructing buildings, butts, shelters, and batteries, $50,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, after line 192, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase the steamer Stiletto, for use as a torpedo-boat for experimental purposes, $25,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, under the head of "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting," in section 1, line 204, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Equipment of vessels: For coal for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling; hemp, wire, and other materials for the manufacture of rope and cordage; iron for the manufacture of anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, bags, and hammocks; water for steam-launches; heating apparatus for receiving-ships; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipment at home and abroad, and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels and manufacture of equipment articles in the several navy-yards, $700,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, after line 230, to insert:

Navy-yard, League Island, Pennsylvania: For one clerk, at $1,200.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 236, after the words "in all," to strike out "nine thousand one" and insert "eleven thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, California: For one clerk, at $1,200; in all, $11,525. And no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such services.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 261, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Public works: For rebuilding wharves at the navy-yard, Boston, Mass., $50,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 266, after the word "for," to insert "not more than;" so as to make the clause read:

For not more than two timber dry-docks, to be located at such navy-yards as the Secretary of the Navy may indicate, each dock to be not less than 480 in length, the cost of the two docks not to exceed in the aggregate the amount herein appropriated, $1,100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In what line is that? It does not appear in the printed bill.

Mr. MORRILL. That is a new amendment which was put in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask to have it read again. It does not appear in the printed bill.

Mr. HALE. It is an amendment inserted in line 266.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will again read the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 1, to strike out from line 340 to line 342, inclusive, as follows:

Navy-yard, Pensacola, Florida: For one clerk to civil engineer, at $1,200; one mail messenger, at $600 per annum.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 356, after the words "in all," to strike out "forty-five thousand seven" and insert "forty-three thousand nine;" so as to read:

In all, $43,949.09.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, after line 425, to insert:

For the improvement of the Naval Hospital Park at Portsmouth, Va., $5,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 451, after the word "laborers," to strike out "seventy" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

For the civil establishment, to include clerks, firemen, writers, receivers, assistant receivers, messengers, leading men and pressmen in inspection office, superintendent of coffee and spice mill, box-maker, coffee-roaster, engine-tender, teamster, telephone-operating, cutter, machine-operator, and laborers, $40,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 457, after the word "kinds," to insert:

For steam-steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam-capstans, steam-windlasses, and other steam auxiliaries.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, lines 460 and 461, to strike out "rights of patented articles;" so as to read:

Purchase of machinery and tools for use in shop.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 481, after the word "Enterprise," to insert "or such of said vessels as the Secretary of the Navy may deem advisable;" so as to read:

For repair on the Hartford, Kearsarge, Trenton, Swatara, Thetis, Richmond, Nipsic, and Enterprise, or such of said vessels as the Secretary of the Navy may deem advisable, $200,000, to be immediately advailable.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, to strike out lines 507 and 508, as follows:

Navy-yard, Pensacola, Fla.; For one writer, at $1,017.25.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 512, after the words "in all," to strike out "twenty thousand nine hundred and eighty-nine dollars and seventy-five" and insert "nineteen thousand nine hundred and seventy-two dollars and ninety;" so as to read:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, California: For one clerk to naval constructor, at $1,400; two writers, at $1,017.25 each; in all, $19,972.90.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 516, after the word "services," to strike out the proviso down to and including the word "necessary" in line 519, in the following words:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such additional draughtsmen, writers, and model makers on the designs therefor as may be necessary.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 523, after the word "boilers," to strike out:

Steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and other steam auxiliaries.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 528, after the word "purchase" to insert "handling and preservation;" so as to read:

For purchase, handling, and preservation of materials and stores.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 534, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated costs of such repair shall exceed 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power; but nothing herein contained shall prevent the repair or building of boilers for wooden ships the hulls of which can be fully repaired for 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and materials.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, to strike out lines 562 and 563, as follows:

Navy-yard, Pensacola, Fla.: For writer, at $1,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 567, after the word "all," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "sixteen;" so as to read:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, California: For clerk to department, at $1,400; draughtsman, at $1,500; messenger, at $600; writer, at $1,000; in all, $16,200.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is, in section 1, to strike out from line 830 to line 843, inclusive, as follows:

For the construction by contract of two swift double-bottomed steel cruisers, each of about 4,000 tons displacement, of the type of the Newark, except boilers and machinery, four of about 1,700 tons displacement, of the type of gunboat No. 1, each, and one swift torpedo-boat, said vessels to cost altogether, exclusive of armament, not more that $4,950,000, the sum of $2,470,000 is hereby appropriated.

That each of the aforesaid vessels shall be built, as near as may be, in compliance with the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment."

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract, six protected steel cruisers, with such armament for each as the Navy Department may deem suitable, each of said vessels to have a maximum speed of not less than 20 knots over the measured mile, such speed to be exhibited under such test or tests and conditions as the Navy Department may impose. The cost of all of said cruisers in the aggregate, complete, exclusive of armament, shall not be more than $9,000,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during five years from March 4, 1887.

That in the construction of the aforesaid vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, so far as the same relate to vessels constructed under contract, save that in all their parts they shall be of domestic manufacture. The contracts for the construction of said vessels shall contain provisions to the effect that the contractor guarantees that when completed and tested for speed, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, the vessel shall exhibit a maximum speed of at least 20 knots per hour; and for every quarter knot of speed so exhibited above said guarantee the contractor shall receive a premium over and above his contract price of $50,000, and for every quarter knot that said vessel fails of reaching said guaranteed speed there shall be deducted from the contract price the sum of $50,000; and for the purposes provided in this section the sum of $1,200,000, or so much of the same as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That for the armament of the vessels provided for in this section the sum of $2,880,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during five years from March 4, 1887.

In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act, it shall be required that one of such vessels shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, two of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connecting therewith, and three of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, and at such places on or near such coasts or waters as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve.

If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for said contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts, or either of them, until the further action of Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient dispatch.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is the end of that amendment, is it not? Then we come to a second section, and I wish to take the sense of the Senate on this by the yeas and nays, as expressing our judgment of the public service. I am for this amendment, although it has some defects that might be suggested, which I do not stand upon at all, yet I want to take the sense of the Senate on the subject of this increase of the armament of the United States, and so I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator I suppose desires to include in his motion what is written as section 2 of the proposed amendment, and section 3 in the print.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; it was read by the Chief Clerk, to strike out and insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the committee reported as one amendment to strike out all between lines 830 and 843 and to insert what follows down to section 4. It is divisible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that be so, I have no objection to its being read through and taking one vote on the whole thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The remainder of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the sums of money hereinafter named are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the President, in the exercise of his discretion, upon plans and specifications to be furnished by the Navy Department.

For the construction of heavily armored vessels, or armored floating batteries or rams, to be used for coast and harbor defense, $6,000,000.

For the construction of light-draught gunboats, suitable for interior waterways and canal service, $720,000; said gunboats to be completed and tested within twelve months from the date of the signing of any contract for their construction.

For the construction of torpedo-boats of the highest attainable speed and efficiency, $600,000; said torpedo-boats to be completed and tested within twelve months from the signing of any contract for their construction.

For torpedoes and other explosives and torpedo appliances, including the trial and testing of explosives, such torpedoes and other explosives and torpedo appliances to be operated from naval vessels, floating batteries, or rams, $600,000, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available.

For the armament of the vessels provided for in this section, $1,800,000.

That the material used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same, shall be furnished and manufactured in the United States, and all contracts made for their construction shall be under the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment:" Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such civilian expert aids, additional draughtsmen, writers, copyists, and model-makers on the designs therefor as may be necessary. That the appropriations made under this section shall be available during five years from March 4, 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole the Senator from Vermont demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that what is known as section 3?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the entire amendment reported by the committee, striking out and inserting.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the consent of the Senator from Maine and of the Senate to have section 3 amended in line 29 by inserting at the beginning of the line, after the word "be," the words "of American material and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. EDMUNDS. State it again.

Mr. PLUMB. At the beginning of line 29 I move to add the words "of American material and."

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Shall be of American material."

Mr. PLUMB. "Shall be of American material."

Mr. HALE. The clause reads:

That the material—

"Material" is used in the first place—

used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same, shall be furnished and manufactured in the United States.

I think if the Senator will look again he will see that the clause is fundamental in its purpose of procuring not only manufactured products but material in the United States. That was the intention of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. That is to say they shall be furnished in the United States; but where furnished from, I think the provision omits to state.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the amendment, but I do not think it is needed at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 39, section 3, line 29, after the word "be," insert the words "of American material and;" so as to read:

That the material used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same, shall be of American material and furnished and manufactured in the United States.

Mr. BECK. The material of course will be furnished here if possible, but we ought not to be excluded from having the use of the best anywhere if we can not get the best here. That is all there is of it. We may have to fix it.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas to modify that. He will see he has misused the word "material," and that word should be stricken out.

Mr. PLUMB. I will modify my amendment by striking out the word "material" in the amendment. That may put the text in a better shape in what we are seeking without in any way changing it. It will then read, "shall be of American furnished and manufactured," &c.

Mr. HALE. The amendment is all right as it is now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas modifies his amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I believe I shall adhere to it as originally proposed.

Mr. BECK. I suppose we all have the same purpose, that what we need is the best, and we ought not to be deprived of the chance to get the best by any view that may deprive us of the use of the best material. There is the danger of limiting it to a point where perhaps we should be deprived of the best material, if we were compelled to use merely what we have already got. That is all there is of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky, if he will pardon me, and to my friend from Kansas, that the Senator from Kansas modify his amendment to say "so far as practicable."

Mr. BECK. That covers all I ask.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will then cover the whole thing. I can not move it because it would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. BECK. The object of that is the same. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas to put it in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas modify his amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will then read "shall be so far as practicable of American material."

Mr. PLUMB. I think I shall not do that. I have a pretty decided conviction——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas, if he will allow me, for my own information, whether they can make in this country steel shafting, the main shafting for steamships.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. PLUMB. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOAR. I have heard very patriotic men say otherwise. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. PLUMB. I have heard very patriotic men say the best thing we could do was to buy everything we ate and everything we wore, &c., from abroad, but I am not of that kind of thinking.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will excuse me; my informant is not of that style, and I am not of that style.

Mr. HAWLEY. If we are going to modify this in accordance with the view of the Senator from Kansas I should strike out, in line 27, the words "the material used in" and insert the words "of American material" in line 29, after the word "be;" so as to read:

That all naval structures provided for in this act and the armament for the same, shall be of American material, furnished and manufactured in the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that is better.

Mr. HALE. That is better.

Mr. HAWLEY. But I have one suggestion to make on that point, and only one. So far as the manufacture is concerned the Senator from Massachusetts need have no concern whatever. Every single ounce of steel and of all imaginable qualities and quantities can be manufactured in the United States, and it must be, if we are to be capable of self-defense. Nothing is required but reasonable contracts that shall justify the great steel manufacturers in putting in a new plant and employing new capital. Nothing else is needed. We can do everything; we can do better than anybody else in the world has been doing it, within a year after we start it, without any doubt.

But now my limitation comes in. On the Atlantic coast or anywhere east of the Alleghanies it is convenient at the steel concerns, at Johnston, at Steelton near Harrisburg, or the Bethlehem Works at Bethlehem, or the Midvale Works to have a little foreign ore to mix with the native American. Foreign ore low in phosphorus mixed with American makes a good quality of steel. The manufacturers go to the great Agogebic mines and get their ore, and we shall not be troubled if we continue to import a little in order to mix the ores. We have the ores at home, but in the mean time there are a number of the best firms in the United States who would be bothered if they were not allowed to import a little foreign ore to make their steel to mix with our own ores. They pay duty upon it and they then can get it a little cheaper.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to inquire what I believe is the fact, if the cruisers built by Mr. Roach were not built of ores that were imported from abroad?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think he was allowed under the law to import certain foreign ores.

Mr. BECK. The only wish I have is that we should be able to produce the very best and cheapest materials possible. I care nothing about the amount of money required so we have the best, and I want our people to have a chance to get the best and to get the material wherever they can that will enable them to produce the best results. That is what we are looking for now, and what we all hope to accomplish under this bill.

Perhaps the manufacturers are aided now with Mediterranean ores or Spanish ores in the beginning of the development in this country. We have ores equal to the best they have abroad, but, to begin with, I do not think that even the patriotism of the Senator from Kansas would induce him to require our manufacturers to use inferior ore or inferior material if they can buy it cheaper anywhere else.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said in general terms that we could make everything provided for in this bill. I did not mean that we were ready just now to make it all. I am partly answering the Senator from Massachusetts, because in order to make the best steel shafting we ought to have some forging machinery, such as is used by Whitworth. The best steel hammer we have in the country now I think weighs 17 tons.

It is utterly insufficient for making large steel shafting. It flats the steel as with a paddle. You might as well make dough with a spoon for bread. It does not knead the steel as it ought to be kneaded. The Whitworth machinery for hydraulic forgings, making this steel at white heat, makes a shaft as it ought to be made.

When I say we can do it all, I mean if you will offer a chance to steel manufacturers and make a contract such as ought to be made for reasonable work, then they will have the best machinery, and they will give you the process and the product.

Mr. HALE. This is more a question of practical administration than anything else. Guided by every provision that runs through this bill any Secretary of the Navy having charge of this work will see to it with the most sedulous care that the material and the manufacture shall be American. It will be in constructing these great structures, as the Senator from Connecticut has said, that a small component part may be needed of foreign ore, but it is so small that it does not conflict in any way with the theory of the amendment that the manufacture and the product shall be American. It is protection run mad to insist that such a small component part may not be allowed to be purchased to make up what is in effect an American product.

The amendment is well enough as it is now. If there is any discretion left with the Secretary it will be very small. Nobody will buy this material abroad. It will only be some small part of foreign ores necessary for its quick manufacture that will be introduced, and for one I hope that the amendment will be left.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Maine will allow me to suggest to him before he sits down that we are demanding 20 knots an hour, which up to this time has been an almost impossible condition. We are offering a premium for an excess of that speed; we are imposing a penalty upon anything that falls below it. I do not want to have our contractors come before us and say, "We could have given 20 knots and something above it if you had not forced us to use material we did not want when we could have got better."

Mr. HALE. Neither do I. I am told that the Senator from Kansas has made some modification in his amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Under the suggestion of various Senators I will modify the amendment by inserting, after the word "be," in line 29, "so far as practicable of American production."

Mr. HALE. That is entirely satisfactory. I think that everybody will agree to that.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say further in regard to this matter that I do not doubt that it is possible and practicable to produce at points in the United States steel which shall be equal in quality to the best steel made in the world for all the purposes of ship-building, and in fact for all other purposes. The young men in the Ordnance Department of the Army (and I want to say of them that I regard them as intelligent and enterprising, and as possessing the main qualities necessary for the station which they occupy) have said to us over and over again that there is no doubt at all of our being able to procure steel for the high-power guns, which we hope to have some of these days when we shall be able to get legislative concurrence on some plan, which shall be the equal of the best guns made in the world. There is no test to which steel can be applied which is more severe than the powder test. Therefore you can get steel sufficient for making high-power guns and get it for shafting and for all other purposes.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] has made a suggestion, however, which somewhat impresses me, and that is that on the Pacific coast there is not the wide range of material accessible to manufacture that there is east of the Rocky Mountains, and that for the purpose of manufacture within a reasonable price it may be necessary to import a few ores from Spain, not because they are better but because they are cheaper than ores would be taken by rail from the Lake Superior region or from points east of the Rocky Mountains, where they might have to procure them.

I understand perfectly that to produce the best results requires a mixture of ores; but there has been recently a discovery in the upper regions of Wisconsin of a class of ores which competent people say are equal to the best of the Swedish ores. All the time the area of our discovery is extended, as it has been spoken of here, as a quality having reference to the absence of phosphorus, and so far as that substance is concerned there need be no difficulty. But when we come to assemble all these materials and bring them together at a given point, particularly for the purpose of this manufacture, of course there may be a difficulty, not a difficulty that can not be overcome, but a difficulty that will enter into the question of cost, and, inasmuch as in one portion of this amendment the question of cost on the Pacific coast and the question of cost on the Gulf of Mexico is to be subjected to a certain scrutiny, I am willing myself to make this modification.

Mr. HALE. I think that will be acceptable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 29, after the word "be," it is proposed to insert "so far as practicable of American production and;" so as to make the clause read:

That the material used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same, shall be, so far as practicable, of American production, and furnished and manufactured in the United States, and all contracts made for their construction shall be under the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment:" Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such civilian expert aids, additional draughtsmen, writers, copyists, and model-makers on the designs therefor as may be necessary. That the appropriations made under this section shall be available during five years from March 4, 1887.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will fix it exactly.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the amendment as amended the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr BLACKBURN]; but believing that he would vote "yea" on this proposition, I vote "yea."

Mr. DOLPH (after having voted in the affirmative). During the early part of the session to-day I was paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. As I see he is not present, I withdraw my vote. I shall continue to be paired with him.

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I do not know how he would vote if he were here, but I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN. I have good reason to know that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] would vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 9, as follows:

So the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, at the end of section 4, to add:

For the purchase by the Secretary of the Navy, if he shall deem the purchase advisable, of the Destroyer, a screw steam-vessel of iron designed and built by Capt. John Ericsson, armed with a submarine gun and projectile torpedo, with their accessories, including an independent submarine gun, $112,000: Provided, That the said vessel, steam-machinery, guns, projectiles, and their accessories shall be found to be in perfect working order and ready for immediate use: Provided, That it shall satisfactorily appear that said vessel, steam-machinery, guns, projectiles, and experiments developing the same have cost that amount; and to enable the Secretary of the Navy, after said purchase, to care for and operate the same, $10,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have the Senator from Maine give some explanation of that amendment. I ask him what he knows about the value of the vessel and whether he anticipates that under this amendment its value and advantage to the Navy will be considered as ascertained?

Mr. HALE. I do not. This is purely in the domain of experiment. Thirty years ago Captain Ericsson invented a naval vessel which was the scoff and contumely of the naval world. Nobody believed in it. It was difficult to find naval officers or men to embark in the Monitor, but she proved a success and revolutionized modern naval warfare. Everybody has been glad that we adopted and purchased the Monitor.

Now Captain Ericsson has invented or has built this Destroyer which will work under water if she works at all, and will be a wonderfully destructive vessel, if she succeeds, as he believes she will.

On the question of value which the Senator from Kansas raises, I can simply say this: If the Destroyer succeeds and is what is claimed for her, she is invaluable. The Senator from Kansas can not estimate that value; I can not estimate it; no Secretary of the Navy can estimate it; it is beyond all comparison. If she does not succeed and is a failure she is not worth a thousand dollars, probably, as old material.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Maine knows perfectly well that owing to the great anxiety to pass this bill I gave way without completing a statement I was making.

Mr. HALE. I am only answering a question of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GORMAN. I think other members of the Senate understand this amendment thoroughly. I trust there will be no consumption of time upon it.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry to say that I can not hear the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senate understands the amendment thoroughly. It does not require any further debate. I will state to the Senator frankly that if the debate goes on I am entitled to the floor, and shall conclude my remarks to-night.

Mr. HALE. Neither the Senator from Maryland nor any other Senator is afraid that I will occupy much time on this bill. That is not my method of managing bills. I hope to be allowed to answer questions. When the Senator from Kansas asks me about the value of this Destroyer, I answer plainly, if she is good for anything she is invaluable, and if she is not a success she is worth nothing. It is an experiment; and if the Senate does not want to try it, and does not want to purchase this vessel, the Destroyer, strike out the provision from the bill. The element of value is not in it; it is a pure experiment.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend, in line 30, after the word "advisable," by inserting "for naval use," so that the advisability shall relate to the value of the vessel in the estimation of the Secretary of the Navy as an addition to the Navy.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. There is no other purpose than naval use that she would ever be bought for.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have now been disposed of in the Senate.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to make a report from a conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is privileged. The Senator from Kansas will submit the report.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the District appropriation bill be laid before the Senate, and the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. L. WILSON,
BEN. LE FEVRE,
D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I will detain the Senate but a moment by a statement of the differences which have resulted in a disagreement.

With few exceptions all the amendments of the Senate were disposed of, either the Senate receding or the House agreeing to the amendments of the Senate, except in regard to the increased appropriation for the improvement of streets, for the construction of county roads and suburban streets, for the purchase and maintenance of an ice-boat, and for the increase of school facilities in the District of Columbia.

The Senate added $100,000, in round numbers, to the appropriation for the improvement of streets. They added $60,000 for the purpose of the construction of county roads and suburban streets, $85,000 for the purchase, the construction and maintenance of an ice-boat, and about $200,000 to the amount appropriated by the House for the purpose of increased school facilities in the District. Upon these items there has so far been a total disagreement. The House conferees have declined to accede to anything upon either one of these points. The disagreement upon the school facilities was more pronounced, if anything, than on any other item, and under the circumstances the Senate conferees did not feel that they ought to yield.

I will say that the money which is appropriated by the bill as it left the Senate is within the revenues of the District of Columbia. There is no question anywhere that I know of that there is an absolute necessity for the expenditure of all these sums that we have appropriated; and not only that, but there will be a necessity for the expenditure of a very much larger sum in several directions if the money could be provided.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And adequate funds on the present system of taxation equal to the appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. As the Senator from Vermont suggests, and as I think I said, the funds derived from the present system of taxation are equal to the expenditures proposed; and I do not understand that the House conferees themselves challenge the necessity of the expenditures from the ordinary standpoint; that we need better streets in Washington and some improvements on the streets, and so on.

In regard to the schools, that matter was left in a somewhat nebulous condition. The principal objection is that we are appropriating more than the sum appropriated last year, and a larger percentage of appropriation was made last year than the House conferees think advisable; but there is no doubt upon the principle, as I understand that the question is to be discussed from the standpoint of what is necessary for the municipal service.

The evidence before the Committee on Appropriations was to the effect that the school children of the District of Columbia were increasing in number at the rate of seventeen hundred to two thousand per annum. It was the design of the committee to provide beyond any possibility of doubt facilities not only for educating any of those who had been left out under the parsimony of the past, but to take them in hereafter as fast as they become of school age, so that in the city of Washington at least there should not be any lack of school facilities in the primary grades for every child of school age.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did the House object to that?

Mr. PLUMB. The House objected to that.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10717. There will be no debate.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to present a conference report.

Mr. PLUMB. I thought some one else desired to speak on the report I made. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments to the District appropriation bill, and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The President pro tempore was, by unanimous consent, authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

Mr. HOAR. I submit a report from a conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the part proposed to be inserted in the said amendment the words "sixty-three thousand one hundred and sixty-one dollars and sixty-two cents" and insert "one hundred thousand dollars;" and that the House agree to the same.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
M. C. BUTLER,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CONNOLLY F. TRIGG,
CHAS. DOUGHERTY,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the papers here?

Mr. HOAR. The papers are on the Secretary's desk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the message of the House read acting on the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 2, 1887.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

The report was concurred in.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to another conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House resolution entitled joint resolution 170, authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, having met, and after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments and concur in the said amendments with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in the first and second lines, the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and add to the first section as follows:

The term of office of said commissioners shall not extend beyond the beginning of the next session of the Senate. If the Senate shall be convened after the 4th day of March, 1887, and before the 1st of December in said year, and the duties of said commissioners shall not then be completed, the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint three commissioners who shall perform and complete the duties prescribed in this act within the time therein specified.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
WM. M. EVARTS,
JAMES L. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
E. D. HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the papers here, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have they been laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the papers are on the table of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have they been presented to the Senate? Just read the House message and let us see that it comes all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the message.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 2, 1887.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

The report was concurred in.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10717.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the City of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has that bill been printed?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; that bill was received in the Senate to-day, and on motion sent to the Committee on Commerce without printing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did the bill come from the House to-day?

Mr. VEST. It came from the House, and is now reported by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to its present consideration until I can see it.

Mr. VEST. I suppose the bill can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes to the Calendar under objection.

NATIONAL MEMORIAL BRIDGE.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to take up Order of Business 2345, being Senate bill 3330.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3330) for the erection of a national memorial bridge over the Potomac from Washington to Arlington.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. COKE. My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is paired generally with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (after having voted in the affirmative). When I voted I did not notice that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] was absent. I am paired with him. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] on political questions. As this is not a political question, I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. My colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is detained by illness from the Chamber this evening. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If present my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. He is now engaged in the Committee on Appropriations and can not come out. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—30.

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5959) granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MAHONE. I submit at this time a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 8, 9, 12, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 25, and 26, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5, line 1, after the word "including," insert "$50,000 for the continuation of experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and sugar-cane, and also including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies, in all, $56,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby required to make a separate report to Congress, stating fully and accurately an itemized account of every expenditure made under this provision and the results of all experiments made;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5, line 2, strike out "eighty-one" and insert "in all, fifty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert "and a like sum of $5,000 for the same purposes and under the same restrictions and conditions to the California Ladies' Silk Culture Association of California;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment as follows: "One hundred thousand dollars of this sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. MAHONE,
P. B. PLUMB,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. H. HATCH,
WHARTON J. GREEN,
MILO WHITE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the House papers here? I should like to hear the action of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Chair understands that the papers are here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the message from the House be read, so that we may know that we are going straight forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message of the House will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 2, 1887.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to explain to us the principal items—I do not care about the little ones—that this conference report covers, particularly about pleuro-pneumonia, so that we may see where we are.

Mr. MAHONE. The changes of the bill as passed by the Senate are quite immaterial until we get to one item, and that is the production of sugar from sorghum. There the House insisted on cutting down what the Senate had put in, from $75,000 to $50,000.

In respect to the matter of pleuro-pneumonia there is no alteration made in the amount allowed in the bill as passed by the Senate, only that $100,000 of the $500,000 is made immediately available. These constitute the principal alterations in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The other $400,000 is to be available after the 1st of July?

Mr. MAHONE. After the 1st of July.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that $500,000 is appropriated for the purposes of pleuro-pneumonia eradication.

Mr. MAHONE. Half a million dollars is appropriated in this bill as agreed to by the House of Representatives on account of pleuro-pneumonia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bridge bill which my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST] undertook to bring forward a few moments ago. I have read it carefully through, and I think it is fully guarded. I have no further objection to make to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to take up the bill referred to by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10717) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the City of Kansas and the town of Sibley, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTILLED SPIRITS BONDED FOR EXPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting in reply to a resolution of February 25 certain information in relation to the withdrawal of distilled spirits which were bonded for exportation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the communication will be referred to the Committee on Finance, and printed.

Mr. DAWES. On the reference of that to the Committee on Finance I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee as to when we may expect a report on the matters submitted to them in connection therewith.

Mr. MORRILL. It will be impossible to tell until we have read this communication. It is a long communication and we want to have it so that we can see it to-morrow morning.

Mr. DAWES. Is it expected that there may be a report on the subject before the close of the session?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the communication read now if we can not have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont requests the reading of the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. Is that in order at this time?

Mr. MORRILL. The communication has already been referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is in order to have the document read.

Mr. HOAR. I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw my request to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre; and

A bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 2441, Order of Business 2336.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the title be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

Mr. VANCE. Some of us have some bills on the Calendar who are not fortunate enough to be recognized by the Chair, and the only chance we have to get at our bills is to go to the Calendar, and I object to everything that is not taken up by the vote of a majority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not hear the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina objected to the consideration of this bill. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2441) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 33, after the word "inhabitant," to strike out "or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing such proceedings, except as hereinafter provided;" and in line 36, before the word "where," to insert "but;" in the same line, after the word "the," to strike out "controversy" and insert "jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action;" after the word "suit," in line 40, to strike out the words "founded on contract in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover thereon if no assignment had been made, except in cases of bills of exchange," and insert:

Except upon foreign bills of exchange, to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of any assignee, or of any subsequent holder if such instrument be payable to bearer and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment or transfer had been made.

So as to make the clause read:

That the first section of an act entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the circuit courts of the United States shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, or in which controversy the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners or in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different States, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid, or a controversy between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, or a controversy between citizens of a State and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, in which the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value aforesaid, and shall have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except as otherwise provided by law, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the crimes and offenses cognizable by them. But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant; nor shall any circuit or district court have cognizance of any suit, except upon foreign bills of exchange, to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of any assignee, or of any subsequent holder if such instrument be payable to bearer and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment or transfer had been made; and the circuit courts shall also have appellate jurisdiction from the district courts under the regulations and restrictions prescribed by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "district," in line 63, to strike out the following words:

Whenever it is made to appear from the application of such defendant or defendants that his or their defense depends in whole or in part upon a correct construction of some provision of the Constitution or law of the United States, or treaty made by their authority; and.

And in line 73, after the word "therein," to strike out the words—

Provided, That such defendant or defendants are non-residents of the State in which the suit is pending,

And insert the words—

Being non-residents of that State;

So as to make the clause read:

That the second section of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the preceding section, which may now be pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any State court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district. Any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section, and which are now pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any State court, may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein being non-residents of that State."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After "therein," in line 73, the colon ought to go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont suggests that the colon be stricken out and a comma inserted in its place. That correction will be made unless there be objection. The reading of the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in line 84, after the word "State," to strike out "such citizen of another State, whether he be plaintiff or," and insert "any;" in line 85, after the word "defendant," to insert "being such citizen of another State;" in line 89, after the words "appear to," to strike out the words "the satisfaction of the" and insert "said circuit," and in line 91, after the word "court," to insert:

Or in any other State court to which the said defendant may, under the laws of the State, have the right, on account of such prejudice or local influence, to remove said cause: Provided, That if it further appear that said suit can be fully and justly determined as to the other defendants in the State court, without being affected by such prejudice or local influence, and that no party to the suit will be prejudiced by a separation of the parties, said circuit court may direct the suit to be remanded, so far as relates to such other defendants, to the State court, to be proceeded with therein.

So as to make the clause read:

And where a suit is now pending, or may be hereafter brought, in any State court, in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another State, any defendant, being such citizen of another State, may remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district, at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be made to appear to said circuit court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, or in any other State court to which the said defendant may under the laws of the State, have the right, on account of such prejudice or local influence, to remove said cause: Provided, That if it further appear that said suit can be fully and justly determined as to the other defendants in the State court, without being affected by such prejudice or local influence, and that no party to the suit will be prejudiced by a separation of the parties, said circuit court may direct the suit to be remanded, so far as relates to such other defendants, to the State court, to be proceeded with therein.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to vote "no" on that, but the Senate will be for it I suppose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 101, to add:

At any time before the trial of any suit which is now pending in any circuit court or may hereafter be entered therein, and which has been removed to said court from a State court on the affidavit of any party plaintiff that he had reason to believe and did believe that, from prejudice or local influence, he was unable to obtain justice in said State court, the circuit court shall, on application of the other party, examine into the truth of said affidavit and the grounds thereof, and, unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said court that said party will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, it shall cause the same to be remanded thereto.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to vote "no" on that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 112, to insert:

Whenever any cause shall be removed from any State court into any circuit court of the United States, and the circuit court shall decide that the cause was improperly removed, and order the same to be remanded to the State court from whence it came, such remand shall be immediately carried into execution, and no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the circuit court so remanding such cause shall be allowed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "suit," in line 144, to strike out "and any bail that may have been originally taken shall be discharged;" so as to read:

It shall then be the duty of the State court to accept said petition and bond, and proceed no further in such suit; and the said copy being entered as aforesaid in said circuit court of the United States, the cause shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had been originally commenced in the said circuit court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "claim," in line 173, to strike out the following words:

And the trial of issues of fact in the circuit court shall, in all suits except those of equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, be by jury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 176 to line 199, inclusive, as follows:

That the circuit courts of the United States shall not take original cognizance of any suit of a civil nature, either at common law or in equity, between a corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any State and a citizen of any State in which such corporation, at the time the cause of action accrued, may have been carrying on any business authorized by the law creating it, except in cases arising under the patent or copyright laws, and in like cases in which said courts are authorized by this act to take original cognizance of suits between citizens of the same State; nor shall any such suit between such a corporation and a citizen or citizens of a State in which it may be doing business be removed to any circuit court of the United States, except in like cases in which such removal is authorized by the foregoing provision in suits between citizens of the same State.

That section 10 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That section 640 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That this act shall not affect the jurisdiction over or disposition of any suit removed from the court of any State, or suit commenced in any court of the United States, before the passage hereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 2, the following:

SEC. 2. That whenever in any cause pending in any court of the United States there shall be a receiver or manager in possession of any property, such receiver or manager shall manage and operate such property according to the requirements of the valid laws of the State in which such property shall be situated, in the same manner that the owner or possessor thereof would be bound to do if in possession thereof. Any receiver or manager who shall willfully violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $3,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 3, the following:

SEC. 3. That every receiver or manager of any property appointed by any court of the United States may be sued in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with such property, without the previous leave of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed; but such suit shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed, so far as the same shall be necessary to the ends of justice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as section 4, the following:

SEC. 4. That all national banking associations established under the laws of the United States shall, for the purposes of all actions by or against them, real, personal, or mixed, and all suits in equity, be deemed citizens of the States in which they are respectively located; and in such cases the circuit and district courts shall not have jurisdiction other than such as they would have in cases between individual citizens of the same State.

The provisions of this section shall not be held to affect the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in cases commenced by the United States or by direction of any officer thereof, or cases for winding up the affairs of any such bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 5 the following:

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be held, deemed, or construed to repeal or affect any jurisdiction or right mentioned either in sections 641, or in 642, or in 643, or in 722, or in title 24 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or mentioned in section 8 of the act of Congress of which this act is an amendment, or in the act of Congress approved March 1, 1875, entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 6 the following:

SEC. 6. That the last paragraph of section 5 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," and section 640 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, be and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That this act shall not affect the jurisdiction over or disposition of any suit removed from the court of any State, or suit commenced in any court of the United States, before the passage hereof except as otherwise expressly provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I submit an amendment in the form of additional sections to the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. 7. That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States, including the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 8. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall hereafter be appointed by such court or judge to, or employed by such court or judge in, any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

Mr. COKE. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will not make that motion. I supposed he wanted to address the Senate on the subject. I hope he will withdraw the motion for a moment at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator wishes to debate the matter I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment at length, as it has been discussed two or three times in the Senate before, but I very earnestly believe that such a provision ought to be adopted by Congress. I offered the same amendment a few days ago to a bill in which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] was very much interested, and on his appeal I withdrew it. This is a general bill——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me a moment? I desire where the amendment reads "shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum" to say "shall hereafter be not less than $5,000 per annum." There is one California judge that has $6,000 salary now, as I am informed, and we can not, under the Constitution, reduce it.

Mr. CULLOM. I will modify the amendment in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified according to that suggestion.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe that the public sentiment of this country is in favor of a greater allowance to the judges of the country than they are now generally receiving. I believe there is but one district judge in the United States in the class to which this amendment refers who is getting as much as $5,000 a year. There is one perhaps in California who gets a little more.

Mr. HOAR. Six thousand dollars.

Mr. CULLOM. I know myself of one district judge to whom, if the Government of the United States were to pay him a salary of $10,000 a year, it would not pay him more than he earns. I do not believe that the people of this country are disposed to desire that their judges, who are men who give their entire attention to the administration of the law, should be required to work for the public at less than a reasonable salary.

I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment, as it has been discussed by the Senate over and over again in past sessions, but I very much desire that the Senate should have a square vote upon the question whether we are willing to allow an increase of salary to these judges over the country or not.

I hope that the Senator from Texas will not move to lay the amendment on the table, but that he will consent that we may take a direct vote on the question of whether it shall be adopted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask the Senator before he sits down if the salaries of the district judges do not range from $3,500 to $6,000?

Mr. CULLOM. From $3,000 to $4,000, I understand.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Who receives a salary of $6,000?

Mr. CULLOM. One of the judges in California.

Mr. DOLPH. There are none. The highest salary is $5,000.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the salaries range from $3,500 to $5,000.

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator has already said, there is only one that gets a salary of $5,000. The great body of them get $3,500 or $4,000.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Several judges get more than $3,500 or $4,000. They have been graduated, depending somewhat on the amount of labor which they perform. My friend, the Senator from Illinois, says that he has in his mind's eye one judge who discharges his duties so well and has so much labor to perform that he ought to have a very much larger salary, as I understand him.

This very bill continues that injustice and inequality, and when this bill is passed, if passed it should be, regulating the salary at $5,000, at the next session of Congress you will be asked to discriminate as we have done by making a difference in the salaries of these judges commensurate with the ability of the officer or the amount of duty he has to perform. So you start out by doing a rank injustice. The judge in the mind's eye of the Senator, who is worth $5,000 or $10,000, is to receive no more than the judge who has much less labor imposed upon him. So you then commence by doing a rank injustice in placing all the salaries upon an even footing.

My friends talk about the people being anxious that the salary of the judges should be increased. Where is the evidence of that? Where is the evidence that the people demand it? We are always told when we are to increase the salary of an officer that the people are very anxious to have it done. I venture to say that even in the good State of Illinois they have not manifested any very great anxiety in that regard. They are manifesting a great deal of anxiety to have things done which it is impossible to get done here in Congress.

They are begging you to relieve them a little from taxation, and no effort is made to do it, except as you throw out millions upon millions trying to build a navy and erect seacoast defenses, and increase the salaries of judges. But not a single effort is made anywhere to reduce taxation of which the people complain, and they are protesting and begging on that score, not that you shall increase the salaries of the judges or of any other officers. The first thing we are told is that the people are dying to have the salaries of the judges increased, and then you start to do an injustice, for when the judge who does the least work, now receiving $3,500, is paid a salary of $5,000, you do an injustice to the judge you have in your mind's eye who you say can not be compensated in dollars and cents for the work he does.

I beg that the Senate of the United States will not start in that injustice because, as I have said, after we have done it it will be necessary to equalize it. After you have got the minimum to $5,000 then you must equalize from that point up until you get something commensurate with the service performed or the ability of the judge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. COKE. I will ask for a division of the question and a separate vote on the two propositions embraced in that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the question is divisible.

Mr. COKE. The first section of the amendment seeks to make a uniform salary of $5,000; the next section provides against the practice of nepotism by the judges. The latter provision I favor; the first I do not favor. I ask for a division of the question and a square vote upon each proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first section of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have heretofore voted for a measure similar to that presented by the Senator from Illinois, but I am not prepared to vote for it to become a part of this bill. It is a very important bill in the way of relief to the United States courts, and in giving the people of the country local jurisdiction in business affairs; and I should prefer not to have the bill weighed down by this amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senate has twice passed a bill which contains the proposition contained in this amendment. Several attempts have been made to put this measure in as an amendment to a House bill in order to secure a vote there upon it. I suppose I may say properly that it is asserted that a large majority of the members of the other House are in favor of increasing the salary of the district judges to $5,000, and if they could get a direct issue by which a majority vote of the body could adopt the proposition, it would be adopted.

But when it is proposed to put it in a local measure, a bill establishing a new district or changing the time of holding courts, we are at once met with the objection that it will kill the bill, because the bill is not of importance enough to carry it in the other House; and when we propose to put an amendment on a bill of general importance then the suggestion comes that it is too important a bill to put the amendment on.

I hope the amendment will be adopted and the other House given an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill as it came from the House of Representatives was altogether extreme, and the gentlemen of the committee who felt the inconvenience and wrong of subjecting mere local affairs to the great expense of national jurisdiction, diminished their desires so that the committee at last agreed upon the bill as it now stands, which is much less extreme than the one the other House proposed, and which, on the whole, if we correctly understand it, does not do any injustice to any of the people who have national interests in States where they do not live other than carrying the right to go to the United States courts from $500 to $2,000. I thought that was going a little too far, that it had better be $1,500 or $2,000, but on the whole we came to that, and left out of the bill, as the amendments now are, some House provisions which we thought to be quite too extreme.

In this state of things, and wishing myself to diminish the wrong and inconvenience that exist in regard to what is now a national jurisdiction, I was willing to agree to this report. It contains one or two things of small importance and of temporary operation that I should entirely disagree to if they were separate propositions, but the general benefit of the bill, if we correctly understand it, will be greatly to the interest of the people who have merely local controversies with corporations, and so on, that ought fairly to be tried in the local tribunals just as if they were the citizens of the same State.

So, although, as I say, there are two or three small things in the bill that I entirely disagreee to, I do not intend to stand opposed to the bill, but to support it notwithstanding; but I do fear, as much as I am in favor of increasing these salaries to $5,000, that at this late stage in the session it will embarrass getting an agreement on important parts of the bill, and therefore, while I am for the proposition, as I voted for it before, I think it best, being for it, to vote against it now, in order to leave the bill itself as it regards jurisdiction, to see if we can get it into a law.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Vermont on the question of the prospect of defeating the bill by adding this amendment to it, that the fact is that the other House has expressed itself, as I understand, very largely in favor of the provision for the increase of the salary, and instead of defeating the bill it will help to pass the bill in the House of Representatives, as I understand the sentiment of the members of that body. So I hope that the amendment will be added to the bill, as it certainly is a thing that ought to have been done long ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first section of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. The Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea;" my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If I were not paired on this question, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. My colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is ill and unable to be present to-night. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 18; as follows:

So the first section of the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the second section of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

The second section of the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to know from the Judiciary Committee or the Senator having the bill in charge if it does not change the law where a suit is brought by a citizen of one State against a citizen of another State where the Federal jurisdiction arises solely out of that fact, so that a suit may be brought in either the district where the plaintiff resides or the defendant resides? Is there not a radical change in the law in that respect?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No; I do not think there is a radical change.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does not the first section, if it should become a law, enable a person residing in New York, for instance, to sue a person residing in the State of Oregon, for instance, by bringing a suit in the State of New York?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; quite the reverse. He could only sue him in Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not understand it that way. What does this mean?

But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant.

What I wish to call attention to is what follows:

But where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or defendant.

What does that mean if it does not enable a person residing in the State of New York to sue a citizen of the State of Oregon in the district of New York where the jurisdiction arises solely because of the fact that the suit is between citizens of different States?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not think that is a change of the section of the law that this bill proposes to modify in the case stated by the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does the Senator mean to say that that is the law now?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is the law now, and we propose to contract the jurisdiction.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The act which the pending bill proposes to amend, the act of March 3, 1875, in the first section, speaking of jurisdiction provides as follows:

But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts—

That is before the circuit or the district court—against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing such proceedings.

That being the existing law, as I understand it, when a person wishes to sue an inhabitant of the State of California he must go into that State and bring his suit there, unless he happens to find the person he wishes to sue in some other district, and then he may sue there. Now it is proposed to change that, as I understand.

Mr. HOAR. In the first place, the existing law allows a suit to be brought in the United States court between citizens of different States for amounts exceeding $500. That is put up to $2,000. In the next place, it allows a plaintiff to sue a defendant, a citizen of another State, wherever he catches him all over the United States. That is the existing law, but the proposed change in the law is that he can only sue him, they being citizens of different States, either in the defendant's State or if the defendant happens to be in the district of the plaintiff's home then in the plaintiff's district.

So instead of the sixty or seventy districts which by the existing law the plaintiff can sue him in, there are only two left. Suppose the defendant goes to the plaintiff's home and is found there, a man doing business there, the plaintiff can sue him in the State court and the defendant can take him to the United States court. It is certainly reasonable that the plaintiff should be permitted in the first instance to take him into the United States court.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My friend then understands this section to mean that if the plaintiff, for instance, lives in the State of New York and the defendant lives in the State of California, then the plaintiff may either go to California and sue there, or, if he happens to find him in the State of New York, he may sue him there, but he can not sue him anywhere else.

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly; and in the State of New York, without this proposed statute, he can take him into the New York State courts, and the defendant then can remove the cause to the United States court.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have no objection if that is the construction, but it seems to me that this latter part of the clause enables a plaintiff to bring suit in the district where the defendant does not reside and where he is never found.

Mr. HOAR. In all the districts where both parties reside in the same State the State court is presumed to have jurisdiction between the parties.

Mr. MITCHELL. of Oregon. Then the Senator holds that where the United States jurisdiction attaches only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States the suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or defendant, qualified by what is herein provided.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If that is the construction, I think it is a strained construction.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Instead of widening the present law in regard to the bringing of suits out of the district of the residence of either party, it contracts it and requires all suits to be brought either in the district of the plaintiff's or of the defendant's residence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just what the law of nearly every State is.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The clerks advise the Chair that in getting the amendments proposed by the Senator from Illinois there was some confusion, and the Chair will request that they be read again to see whether they were accurately taken by the clerks.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States, including the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, shall hereafter be not less than $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 8. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall hereafter be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator from Illinois if the phrase "not less than" a certain amount is not loose and entirely insignificant. I suppose we are fixing the salary. Who has power to make it any more?

Mr. HOAR. I submitted to the Senator from Illinois in private, on what every Senator would agree was entirely proper authority for me to act upon in making a statement to him in private, that it was understood that one of the district judges had already a salary of $6,000 a year. I am now informed, and I have consulted the statute, that that is not the case. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois to return to his original amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I am perfectly willing to take the amendment as I originally had it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to striking out the words "not less than?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it simply stands at $5,000 a year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment will be regarded as agreed to. The amendment will now be read as it has been modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States, including the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, shall hereafter be $5,000 per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is: Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to say that while I have no doubt the bill contains some wise provisions, I shall vote against it, because I do not believe that the provision which proposes to give a salary of $5,000 to all district judges of the United States is a proper provision. It is very certain that the labors of the judges are very unequal. I would have no objection to giving to the judges who perform a large amount of a labor that salary, but to put them all upon an equality without reference to any of the services which they render the country is not in accordance with my judgment of what is right.

I do not propose to discuss this measure, notwithstanding I believe that the consumption of time by debate is the wisest thing that can be done from now until the end of the session. My observation in my service here for a number of years is that a great many measures right upon the eve of final adjournment pass through the Senate and through Congress that ought not to be passed.

There is a tendency everywhere to increase salaries in this country, but I believe it is wrong. These judges at the age of seventy years, having performed service as judges for ten years, can retire upon the salaries which they now draw. It is a very valuable position for a man to hold, and I am not in favor of giving to these judges a large salary in their lifetime, and then pensioning them upon the people of the country after a service of ten years and their arrival at the age of seventy years.

I am sure that there is not the same service performed by some judges that is performed by others. My understanding is that there are some fifteen district judges who do not perform any very great amount of labor, and yet the proposition is to put them upon an equality with judges who are sitting eight and ten months in the year.

I shall vote against the bill, notwithstanding I have no doubt it contains some wise provisions.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I agree with the remarks made by the Senator from Delaware as to the propriety of raising the salaries of the district judges and putting them all on an equality. I have expressed my views on that subject several times before the Senate; but I shall vote for the bill, although that amendment has been adopted and become a part of it, because I believe that the benefits accruing to the people from the passage of the bill will fully compensate for the unjust raising of the salaries of the judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. COKE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I desire to say that I am very much in favor of the bill as reported. I am opposed, however, to an increase of the judges' salaries. Although I am unwilling to vote for a measure of that kind, yet in the hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will not be agreed to in conference I shall vote "yea" upon the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the passage of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and vote on the passage of the bill. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay." My pair, however, allows me to vote if it is necessary to make a quorum.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALDRICH (after having voted in the negative). I have been requested to pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], who would vote "yea" on the bill. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (after having voted in the negative). I ask leave to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT. After announcing my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] some one requested the Senator from Oregon to pair with that Senator. As he has paired with him I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I was not aware that there was a pair arranged with the Senator from Connecticut.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 6; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is an amendment to the title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee reported an amendment to the title.

The title was amended so as to read "An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled 'An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes,' and to further regulate the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave now to report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, with sundry amendments. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill early to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. How early?

Mr. ALLISON. As early as the Senate may choose to come here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 175) for a public building at Monroe, La., with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels, in certain cases, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MONROE, LA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the other House on the bill for a public building at Monroe, La.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON). The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 175) for a public building at Monroe, La.

Mr. MORGAN. The other House reduced the appropriation $25,000, and I ask that the Senate concur in the amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the amendments of the House of Representatives read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the House of Representatives will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 19, before the word "thousand," strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" and in line 20, after "dollars," insert:

Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000 for site and building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the context relating to the sum appropriated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment in connection with the context.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The first part; the context about the $75,000.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The plans and estimates for said building shall first be prepared, examined, and approved as required by section 3734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the ultimate cost shall not exceed the sum of $75,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It reads to amend how much?

The CHIEF CLERK. "One hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I wanted to get at.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. CALL rose.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield to me while I introduce a resolution for reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be instructed to inquire into the condition of the public schools of the District of Columbia, especially as compared with that of the schools in other cities of the United States, and report upon the same to the next session of Congress. Said committee shall be authorized to sit during the recess, the expense of said inquiry to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

JULIA DE QUINDRE.

Mr. CALL. I move to proceed to the consideration of——

Mr. PALMER. I desire to present a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be received.

Mr. PALMER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
T. W. PALMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. P. TAULBEE,
E. N. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not require any vote, the House receding.

MRS. M. E. WOODS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I submit a conference report.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the word "twelve" the word "twenty;" and that the House agree to the same.

PHILETUS SAWYER,
H. W. BLAIR,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. H. NEECE,
JNO. A. SWOPE,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was concurred in.

CUSTOM-HOUSE NIGHT INSPECTORS.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3116, Order of Business 1993.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON). The bill will be reported by its title for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3116) for the relief of night inspectors of the ports of New York and Baltimore.

RECESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that I move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will put his motion in a little different form. I suggest that he say "take a recess until 10 o'clock."

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; this gives us the same time.

Mr. HOAR. No; you have to read the Journal then instead of reading it at 11 o'clock. If you take a recess you have the advantage of another day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I moved to adjourn until 10 o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Make it a recess.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I will change my motion and move that the Senate now take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, March 3, at 10 o'clock a. m.

MORNING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., Thursday, March 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 10 having arrived the Senate resumes its session.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. CALL. Before the Senate took its recess last night I had moved to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3116.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum here. I think the Senator had better wait until we get the Senate a little fuller.

Mr. CALL. If I can do so without losing the privilege I have to the floor I will wait.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont suggests the absence of a quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not move to adjourn, because I believe Senators want to do something as of yesterday, but I really think we ought to wait a little while to have enough Senators here to make an air of decency about our performances.

Mr. CALL. I suppose it will not be right to proceed before there is formally a quorum in the Senate.

TELEGRAPHIC OCEAN CABLES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, on motion of Mr. MANDERSON, ordered to lie on the table. and be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, furnished in response to the resolution of the Senate of the 26th ultimo, calling for information touching the conditions under which certain transatlantic telegraph companies have been permitted to land their cables in the United States, and touching contracts of such companies with each other or with other cable or telegraph companies.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 2, 1887.

SERVICES OF COUNT PULASKI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 14th ultimo, requesting information concerning the service rendered by Count Casimir Pulaski, a brigadier-general of the Army of the United States in the years 1777, 1778, and 1779, and also respecting his pay and compensation, I transmit herewith reports upon the subject from the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 2, 1887.

BAYOU PLAQUEMINE, LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of engineer officers of the results of a survey made in compliance with the river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, of the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITION.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, Tenn., praying for the extension and encouragement of the Signal Service; which was ordered to lie on the table.

EMILE GUERIN AND CHERI P. MAJOR.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a privileged question. The other day I entered a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (H. R. 6330) relative to the private land claim of Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major. I have been assured that, although the bill is a quitclaim to particular parties, there is no other claimant, and that these parties are purchasers from people who held the estate for nearly a century. While it is not a very good way to investigate, I am satisfied that it must be so, and I ask leave to withdraw my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks leave to withdraw his motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 6330) to confirm to Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. EDMUMDS. The bill stands passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill stands passed.

CUSTOM-HOUSE NIGHT INSPECTORS.

Mr. CALL. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1993, being Senate bill 3116.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3116) for the relief of night inspectors of the ports of New York and Baltimore. The question is on agreeing to the motion. [Putting the question]. The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to object to that bill, but I want to give notice that I propose to object to every Senate bill that is brought up here until we have disposed of some of the House bills, which are matters of public importance and which ought to be passed. The House of Representatives has sent to us a large number of bills for bridges across navigable waters, matters of public interest that we ought to pass, and it will be indecent almost for the Senate to adjourn and leave those bills on the Calendar.

I am not going to object to this bill, of course, as it is up, but I give notice now, so that I shall not be charged with antagonizing any particular measure, that I shall object hereafter. I want to go to the Calendar and dispose of the class of bills to which I referred, and as many more as we can.

Mr. HOAR. What is the order of business just taken up?

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1993, a bill (S. 3116) for the relief of night inspectors of the ports of New York and Baltimore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

Mr. VEST. Is that a Senate bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. VEST. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been taken up already, and is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. It will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill may be correct, or it may not; but it is, of course, utterly hopeless, if it be a good bill, to pass it at this time, and we hardly want to take up time to go into a discussion and examination of the grounds on which the Secretary of the Treasury for an indefinite length of time is to have the free discretion to investigate the pay of the night inspectors at two ports in the United States, when there are a great many more ports that have night inspectors also, and proceed to take out of the Treasury and give them what he likes.

While it may be entirely right on explanation, it does seem to me that it would be better to consider bills to which there can be no objection and which are in such a state that they can be fairly passed, like some House bridge bills, I am told, that are matters of merely local interest, when safely guarded. But I do not want to do anything that my friend from Florida will think unkind. It is really hopeless, however, no matter how good the bill is, to go on with it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate. I am friendly to these persons, and I am assured by the highest authority that these cases have received consideration at the hands of the Treasury Department, and that this action is recommended and approved by it; that the cases are within the law, and highly meritorious cases. It simply refers the matter to the Secretary of the Treasury to examine into it and take evidence, and do what is right and proper in the premises. I understand that it is a measure of great justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am informed, and believe it to be correct, that there is yet an unexecuted resolution of the Senate calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information on this very subject, which the Secretary has not yet responded to, offered, I understand, not long ago by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], not now in his seat. Under those circumstances, and in order to test the sense of the Senate about getting on, with great respect to my friend from Florida, I move to lay the bill on the table without intending to prejudice it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to lay the pending bill on the table. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. CALL. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Vermont to allow the bill to remain on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. Yes; let it stay on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. The position of the bill is not changed.

The question being put on a division, the ayes were 20——

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Several SENATORS. Withdraw the call.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the demand. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] who has charge of the bill is now in the Chamber.

Mr. GORMAN. I reported the bill by direction of the Committee on Commerce, but, as the Senator from Vermont suggests, it will be utterly impossible to pass a Senate bill through both Houses. I will therefore appeal to my friend from Florida to allow the bill to be postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right; I withdraw the motion to lay on the table if we can stop debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was unable to hear the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CALL and others. Not indefinitely.

Mr. HARRIS. No; postponed until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the bill is simply to be postponed.

Mr. CAMERON. Not indefinitely?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HERBERT, Mr. SAYERS, and Mr. J. R. THOMAS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 264) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. BECK, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK.

WILLIAM M. MORRISON.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the Calendar of House bills and take up unobjected cases.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator listen to me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield if I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. It is in line with what the Senator wants to accomplish.

Mr. TELLER. I will not yield to anybody to lose the benefit of my motion. I propose to insist upon the motion to go to the Calendar and take up unobjected House bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Colorado that that motion can not be made under the rules. Unanimous consent can be asked that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar, but a motion must apply to one bill or one subject.

Mr. DAWES. I am obliged to leave the Senate Chamber probably for most of the day. There is a little House bill upon the Calendar that will not be reached under half or three-quartres of an hour.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the order of business?

Mr. DAWES. It is Order of Business 2259, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The amount involved is $1,800. There can be no objection to it. I do not want to interfere with the order of business suggested, but it would accommodate me very much if the Senate would take up that little bill. If there is any objection to it of course it will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has a right to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2629) for the relief of William M. Morrison.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to William M. Morrison, of Jefferson County, West Virginia, upon receiving report from Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommending same, the sum of $1,800, in full satisfaction for supplies furnished the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians under contract, and for goods stolen by Indians from his storehouse.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is no report.

Mr. DAWES. There is a House report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear that read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. FLEEGER to the House of Representatives June 22, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2629) for the relief of William M. Morrison, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

A bill for the relief of the claimant in this case was presented in the Forty-eighth Congress and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Mr. Graves, from said committee, made a report, finding the facts and recommending the passage of the bill for the amount of $1,800.

Your committee, after a careful examination of the case, concur in the report made by Mr. Graves, adopt the same, and recommend that the present bill be amended by inserting in the sixth line, between the words "appropriated" and "the," the following, "upon receiving report form Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommending same;" also by striking out, in the sixth and seventh lines, the words "two thousand one hundred and twenty dollars and fifty cents," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "eighteen hundred dollars," and as so amended recommend the passage of the bill.

The report of Mr. Graves was as follows, to wit:

[House of Representatives Report No. 2589, Forty-eighth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the claim of William M. Morrison, formerly a licensed trader at the agency of the Otoe and Missouria agency, has had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

That the claim embraced in the bill for $3,120.50 is composed of two accounts:

(1) A claim of $304.47 for goods and property stolen by the Indians of said agency from said Morrison's storehouse.

(2) A claim of $1,816.03 for supplies furnished under the direction of W. W. Dennison, at that time United States Indian agent for Otoe and Missouria Indians.

The first of said claims, for $304.47, is supported by the affidavit of the claimant, corroborated by the affidavits of Robert P. Dowell and Stephen Wood, who swear that they, of their own personal knowledge, know that the trading-house of said Morrison was broken into at the time named in his affidavit, and that it was robbed of a large amount of goods, and that from the fact that a part of the goods were found in possession of some of these Indians who confessed the depredation, as well as from other circumstances, these witnesses say they believe the robbery was committed by the Otoes and Missourias. Your committee is of opinion that this item of the claim is adequately proven, and that said Morrison is entitled to restitution out of any money held by the United States in trust for said Indians.

The second item, of $1,816.03, is placed upon the ground that in 1860 the crops of the Otoes and Missouria Indians were destroyed by drought, and that these Indians were in a starving condition, and that but for these supplies, furnished them by direction of the Indian agent, they would have greatly suffered, and perhaps starved.

The fact that the claimant, Morrison, under these circumstances, and at the request of the agent, William W. Dennison, furnished supplies to these Indians to relieve their distress is proved by the affidavits of the claimant, Morrison, and of two other witnesses, Robert P. Dowell and Stephen Wood, who testify that they were at that time assistant engineers in the Engineer Corps of the Army at the Indian reservation, and heard the agent give the orders to Morrison to advance supplies for the relief of these Indians. The witnesses, Wood and Dowell, also testify that Morrison did, in compliance with such orders of the agent, advance supplies, and thus prevented much distress, and perhaps starvation, among these Indians. But the claimant is the only witness who testifies as to the amount of goods so advanced, and he is the only witness who testifies to the value thereof. The same is likewise true concerning the evidence as to amount and value of goods embraced in the first of the foregoing items.

These claims were passed upon by a similar committee in the Forty-seventh Congress, and the one of $1,816.03 was disallowed, because it did not appear from any evidence but that claimant had already been paid out of annuities of these Indians, which by the evidence seems to have been stopped for that year for the purpose of furnishing the needful supplies for support of these Indians.

But letters from the Department of the Interior and Second Auditor's office, showing an examination of the proper records, fail to disclose any payment or allowance of any claim in favor of Morrison for the supplies so furnished these Indians upon the agent's orders. While it would have been more satisfactory had the testimony of the agent, W. W. Dennison, been procured, or its absence accounted for, yet, in the opinion of your committee, the evidence justifies the conclusion that upon both items of the account the claimant is entitled to relief, and would therefore report favorably upon said bill and recommend its passage for the amount of $1,800 in full satisfaction of such claims, instead of the amount named therein.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator explain it. The House report gives us no information at all.

Mr. DAWES. I will explain it. The Otoes and Missourias were in distress. There was no appropriation to supply them. The agent requested this man to supply them to keep them from starving, and he supplied them with $1,800 worth of provisions, and had the approval of the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose. It is to recover that sum that the bill provides.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a good bill then, as you state it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY.

Mr. PALMER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That will be a very good bill to take up the whole time of the Senate upon. There are other bills that ought to pass.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Michigan pending that to yield to me a moment.

Mr. PALMER. I will yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1989.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill be informally laid aside——

Mr. ALDRICH. How can it be laid aside before it is taken up?

Mr. HARRIS. The bill is not yet taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that there was no objection to it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There was objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I rose to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. What bill does he desire to get up?

Mr. MORRILL. The cable railroad bill; that will take all of the session.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly it will, and half of the next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The motion was not agreed to.

LAND TITLES IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10991) to quiet title to certain land in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that after this bill is passed I shall ask the Senate to take up bridge bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again calls the attention of Senators to the embarrassment under which he labors by the existing confusion in the order of business. The rules require that the Senator first rising shall be first recognized, but when there are upon the floor a large number simultaneously demanding recognition from the Chair it is impossible to recognize them all at once. It would be a great accommodation to the Chair and comport with the business of the Senate if some order of business could be adopted. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. PLATT. Suppose we have the bill read for information.

Mr. BECK. If that is a House bill I have no objection. I thought as stated it was a Senate bill.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a House bill, reported without amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Then I withdraw my request.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to quit-claim and release unto the heirs and assigns of James S. Magee, deceased, their heirs and assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to lot numbered 13, in square 691, in the city of Washington, as the same is laid down upon the original plat or plan of the city.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not rise for the purpose of saying that I was in favor of the bill, but for the purpose of hanging upon it a suggestion. If we go to the House bills on the Calendar favorably reported we can utilize the little time that remains to us. If we do not, the whole of the time until the legislative appropriation bill shall have been taken up will be wasted in a scramble for consideration. When the pending bill is disposed of I express the earnest hope that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills on the Calendar favorably reported.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. DOMINIC'S CHURCH.

Mr. VANCE. I move to take up for consideration a District of Columbia bill, Order of Business 2270, House bill 10799.

Mr. CONGER. I object to going back to take up bills not in order on the Calendar, unless the bridge bills, which have to be amended and sent back to the House for concurrence, some of them, and are of great public utility, can be passed first. Then I shall have no objection to going back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read by title.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say one word to the Senate. A committee, organized by both sides of the Senate, agreed, and we all understood it to be the universal consent of the Senate, that we should dispose of House bills in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar. I have upon the Senate Calendar some bills that I am particularly anxious to pass, but I have refrained from calling those up in my anxiety to see the Calendar of House bills disposed of, so that we may pass upon all cases coming from the House that are not objected to by anybody. I appeal to the Senator from North Carolina to let the Calendar go on and his bill will be reached, and will be passed if there is no objection to it. In the method we are now proceeding we are not going to accomplish anything. I ask the Senator to withdraw his motion and let us go to the Calendar of House bills, and run through it in regular order.

Mr. VANCE. I have been trying to get to the Calendar and have objected to several Senators' bills for the purpose of reaching the Calendar of House bills, and for no other purpose, and now that I have at last obtained the floor on the motion to take up this bill I hope I shall not be stopped until I get the bill through. Then I will help Senators to get to the Calender.

Mr. TELLER. When the Senator has his bill through.

Mr. VANCE. I have other bills more important to me, but we could have passed this bill without objection while the Senator and I have been talking about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that after the Senator from North Carolina shall get his little lamb out of the way I will try again to recall the Senate to the agreement made and the general understanding that we should proceed with House bills, and I will move to take up the first House bill on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that, after the pending motion has been disposed of, the Chair shall recognize Senators to move to take up unobjected House bills on the Calendar in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that, after the disposition of the pending question, the Chair shall recognize Senators asking for action upon House bills on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have equal rights.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report just made by me on the deficiency appropriation bill. There are certain other things in the committee which ought to be added to it before the final report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the report will be withdrawn.

ST. DOMINIC'S CHURCH.

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to make further opposition if the Senator from North Carolina insists on taking up his bill. If we can then go to the Calendar of House bills, I am willing we should so proceed. If not I give notice that there will be no further legislation in this session except the appropriation bills. I propose to see that we carry out an order that we have all agreed to in this part of the House, and that it shall not be said of this Senate that with plenty of opportunities to pass these unobjected cases we adjourned, leaving them on the Calendar to the great detriment of the public service. We can take up these bills and go through with them in their order until somebody objects or we shall cease legislation except upon the bills I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the title of the bill be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10799) for the relief of St. Dominic's Church, in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It is a direction to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remit all taxes, penalties, and interest heretofore assessed and now due and unpaid on all that portion of square No. 466, in the city of Washington, which is exclusively used for religious and educational purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report. All these churches stood on the same ground in respect to taxation about their property, and I should be glad to hear the report read to see how it happens that this particular society is to have relief without the others. Perhaps the others have got it already. Let us see what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, February 18, 1887:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10790) for the relief of St. Dominic's Church, in the District of Columbia, having considered the same, recommend its passage. A previous bill (S. 3097) having the same object in view, and couched in the same language, having been reported favorably and being now upon the Calendar, this bill is recommended as a substitute therefor, and that the further consideration of Senate bill 3097 be indefinitely postponed.

The Senate report No. 1663 is adopted as explaining the facts sufficiently.

The Secretary also read the following report, submitted by Mr. VANCE, January 17, 1887:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred Senate bill 3097, having considered the same, report as follows:

This bill for the relief of St. Dominic's church, in the city of Washington, is similar in its provisions to several other bills which have from time to time been acted upon favorably by Congress to relieve church property from taxes which have been assessed against it subsequent to the purchase of the ground for such purpose but prior to the erection of the building thereon.

The opinion of the commissioners of the District was requested upon this measure, to which they made the following reply, which is herewith incorporated and made part of this report:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 12, 1887.

DEAR SIR: The Rev. Father Donelly has informed me that you would be glad to hear without further preliminaries what the opinion of the commissioners of the District of Columbia is with respect to the application of St. Dominic's church, in the city of Washington, for exemption from taxation upon certain of the property held by that church for educational purposes. It appears to the satisfaction of the commissioners that the property in question has never been used for the purposes of revenue, but solely and entirely for educational and religious uses, part of it being occupied by an incomplete building used as a school and another part in connection with said school as a ground for necessary recreation. Upon the whole, and in view of the other and similar cases where exemption has been allowed, the commissioners think the property in question should be exempted as prayed, and so recommend.

Very respectfully,

W. B. WEBB, President.

Hon. ZEBULON VANCE,
United States Senate.

Your committee having found, upon examination, that the description by number of the lot is erroneous in part have amended the bill to cover only the property affected; and as so amended, recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROAD TO VICKSBURG NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the first House bill on the Calendar under the Harris rule.

The motion was agreed to

Mr. HARRIS. That is Order of Business 2196.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8593) for the repair and preservation of the road, heretofore constructed by the Government, leading from Vicksburg to the national cemetery adjacent thereto.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will continue the call of House bills in their order.

ALEXANDER WORRALL.

The bill (H. R. 4476) for the relief of Alexander Worrall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for payment to Alexander Worrall of $676.33, for the purpose of refunding and repaying to him the amount of judgment recovered from him for damages for the occupation of a property in the State of Virginia, the damages having been recovered for occupation by the owner of the property during a period when Worrall rented the property from the Government of the United States and paid rent therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS P. WESTMORELAND.

The bill (H. R. 6663) for the relief of Thomas P. Westmoreland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Thomas P. Westmoreland, of Atlanta, Ga., of $500, in payment and satisfaction for his services as prosecuting attorney for the people of the United States against Robert Bolton, W. B. Freeland, Charles Miller, and James F. Self, for murder, in the courts of the United States, under and pursuant to the order of the circuit judge of the United States court in the northern district of Georgia.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL F. RICE.

The bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Samuel F. Rice, of Montgomery, Ala., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, the same to be in full payment and satisfaction for his services as assistant prosecuting attorney for the people of the United States in forty-two criminal cases in the circuit court of the United States for the middle district of Alabama, forty-one of which were against deputy marshals for alleged violations of section 5438 of the Revised Statutes, and the other for alleged perjury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PUGH, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail-messengers in the postal service; and

A bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

NATIONAL BANKS IN RESERVE CITIES.

The bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report a substitute for that bill striking out the whole bill and inserting what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu to insert:

That whenever three-fourths in number of the national banks located in any city of the United States having a population of 50,000 people shall make application to the Comptroller of the Currency, in writing, asking that the name of the city in which such banks are located shall be added to the list of cities named in sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes, the Comptroller shall have authority to grant such request, upon the condition that every bank located in such city shall at all times thereafter have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 25 per cent. of its deposits, as provided in sections 5191 and 5195 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. That whenever three-fourths in number of the national banks located in any city of the United States having a population of 200,000 people shall make application to the Comptroller of the Currency, in writing, asking that such city may be a central reserve city, like the city of New York, in which one-half of the lawful-money reserve of the national banks located in other reserve cities may be deposited, as provided in section 5195 of the Revised Statutes, the Comptroller shall have authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to grant such request, upon the condition that every bank located in such city shall at all times thereafter have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, 25 per cent. of its deposits, as provided in section 5191 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have some Senator on the Finance Committee explain that; I am not familiar with its provisions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain it; and as this is an important bill I trust that Senators will listen to me while I explain it very briefly.

There has been a constant demand made upon the Finance Committee and upon Congress from time to time by rival cities in the United States to have what they call the benefits of reserve cities, described by section 5191 of the Revised Statutes. That section designated certain cities in the United States the banks in which were required to keep on hand 25 per cent. of the amount of their deposits, to deposit a portion of their deposits in the city of New York. They were called reserve cities, and all the other banks in the United States outside of those cities might deposit in banks in these reserve cities three-fifths of the amount of their deposits.

As this struggle constantly came before Congress the Committee on Finance have endeavored to prescribe a general rule by which cities containing 50,000 inhabitants and upwards may, upon a vote of the banks in those cities themselves, without applying to Congress, by the action of the Comptroller of the Currency, be designated as reserve cities. That is the explanation of the first section.

The second section is much more important. Some of the large cities like Chicago have complained that New York, under our banking laws, has a great advantage because it is the single central reserve of all the banks; but New York is required to keep on hand in the banks, without any right of deposit elsewhere, 25 per cent. of the deposits. This second section authorizes cities containing 200,000 inhabitants and upwards, upon the application of four-fifths of the banks in any such cities, to become like New York central reserves, the same condition that they shall stand exactly on the same footing as to deposits as the city of New York. That is, they shall have 25 per cent. of the amount of deposits.

The rule appeared to be so equitable and just that to relieve Congress from this contention between rival cities we adopted it. It has been very carefully prepared and we recommend its adoption as a permanent rule to enable the Comptroller of the Currency to allow any city of 50,000 inhabitants, whenever four-fifths of the banks there desire it, to be a reserve city; and whenever any city of 200,000 inhabitants thinks it is of so great importance that it should become a central reserve city it may become such upon a like application by the banks of that city and a like approval of the Comptroller of the Currency subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. Shall I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that under this substitute a reserve bank, for instance, in Kansas City, may keep a portion of its reserve in Chicago or any other city having 200,000 inhabitants?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator state exactly how that can be done?

Mr. SHERMAN. Under section 5195 of the Revised Statutes, which is especially referred to in the section, they can deposit in the cities named in section 5191 one-half——

Mr. ALLISON. Take, for illustration, Chicago. Suppose Chicago is designated as one of the central reserve cities like New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. One of the great reserve cities.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. Can Chicago deposit anywhere else except New York under this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, and it ought not to. It is put exactly on the same footing as New York. If Chicago becomes a great central reserve for the banks of reserve cities it must have in its vaults 25 per centum of the deposits.

Mr. ALLISON. So I agree.

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes it exactly like New York. New York can not put its deposits all over the country. I think there is no objection to the amendment. I do not care to say anything more about it.

Mr. CULLOM. I wanted the bill explained. I thought that was what it meant, but I was not sure about it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask a question as to the practical working of this bill. Take, for instance, the city of Omaha. That would have the right to make application which could be granted by the Comptroller of the Currency for the privileges of the first section. Then where would the deposit reserve of a national bank in Omaha be kept? Entirely in the city of Chicago, or part in the city of Chicago and part in New York?

Mr. SHERMAN. It could be put in either of the great central reserves; that is, one-half of the deposits required under the law in Omaha may be deposited in either New York or Chicago in case Chicago should become a great central reserve.

Mr. MANDERSON. A bank would have the option to deposit either in Chicago or in New York?

Mr. SHERMAN. No doubt about it.

Mr. MANDERSON. At the request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who is detained in a conference committee, I move to strike out the word "fifty," in line 5 of section 1, and insert "thirty," so that it will apply to cities of thirty thousand people and over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the Senator from Ohio from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust that will not be adopted. Fifty thousand even is a little too low in my judgment, because I do not think any place ought to be considered a reserve town for banking deposits unless it contains a larger population than that. Fifty thousand includes every city that has been named thus far as a competitor for this reserve privilege. For instance, in New England there is no necessity for any but Boston; Providence is so near, a large and flourishing city, and there are other large cities, yet they do not require it. It is really a burden on them, and therefore I beg do not ask it. This includes every city for which an application has been made to become a reserve city under the language of section 5191.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I offer a new section——

Mr. MORRILL. That is not in order now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would not be in order at this time.

Mr. VEST. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. In the present condition of the public business between the two Houses of Congress it amounts to a defeat of the bill. In the Revised Statutes Congress adopted in sections 5191 and 5192 the public policy of naming specifically the cities that should be called reserve cities under that law. In other words, Congress reserved to itself the discretion instead of vesting it in an officer or bureau of the Treasury Department to say when these cities should become reserve cities, and the original bill to which this is a substitute simply added certain cities, still pursuing the policy heretofore adopted of reserving this discretion to Congress alone.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to say to him that we could not pass the original bill without adding three or four or half-a-dozen names of cities, which would make it necessary to send the bill back to the House, and, as I understand it, the House is favorable to the amendment we propose, and that will obviate the addition of names every year to the list of reserve cities.

Mr. VEST. As I understand the position of the House of Representatives, without violating any parliamentary rule, the very reverse is the fact in regard to the probability of the enactment of this law and the passage of this substitute in the House. It will elicit debate there, and debate means defeat at this period of the session. I want the Senate to distinctly understand that the information I have now is that if this substitute is adopted it is equivalent to defeating all legislation during this Congress. On the other hand, if a few cities should be added to those named in the bill, one of which I suggested myself to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, those amendments would be concurred in by the House immediately, and it would not result in even a temporary delay.

Now, what is the result of this proposed legislation? Congress abnegates its own discretion in this matter and leaves it to the Comptroller of the Currency. It is not mandatory on that officer, but he exercises the discretion whether he, after the national banks in the different cities have petitioned, shall permit them to come in as reserve cities or not. It seems to me at this stage of the session we should understand distinctly the effect of adopting this substitute. It gives no sort of relief as compared with the original bill, but, on the other hand, it results in the defeat of any bill at all. I do not charge that that is the purpose of the committee. The bill has been pending before the Finance Committee; several of us have called on that committee from time to time to take action upon it, anticipating the very thing that has happened, that they would come in here at the close of the session when we were in this nebulous conditon, every man fighting for his local measure—come in here with some sort of amendment or substitute that would elicit debate in the House and defeat the original bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will see that this was reported three weeks ago.

Mr. VEST. I understand; but during all that interval why was not the bill taken up? We know what condition we are in, threatened with an extra session, committees of conference out, appropriation bills thrusting everything else aside. Now we are confronted with a substitute that will bring about such a condition in the House as will inevitably defeat the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MANDERSON. This is the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and I have received word from him that he will be here in a moment in order to press its consideration.

I desire, however, to call the attention of the Senate to another matter. I would not favor the bill as it came from the House. I think there are many practical objections to it which I will not take up time to consider. The substitute, I think, is quite acceptable to all who represent Western interests, with the explanation given by the Senator from Ohio. I think, however, that the criticism of the Senator from Missouri upon this substitute is a good one. I do not think Congress should abdicate its power and give the right to the Comptroller of the Currency or to the Secretary of the Treasury to say whether or not these cities should have the privileges granted by the two sections of this substitute, but it should be imperative upon the Comptroller when three-fourths of the banks in any city of 50,000 or 30,000 people, as the case may be, shall make application to grant to that city the reserve privileges.

I propose to follow up the amendment of the Senator from Kanaas which I have offered, with another to strike out from the first section of the substitute the words "have authority to," in line 10, and the words "have authority with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury to," in lines 9 and 10 of section 2, so that it shall be imperative on the Comptroller when the provisions of these sections are complied with to grant such requests.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate assemble at 11 o'clock on the 3rd of March, the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. It is obvious that it can not be made up by the Secretary in the short time remaining.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think that unanimous consent can be given at this time to suspend the reading of the Journal of a previous day.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Chair's pardon. We can abolish the rule requiring the reading of the Journal altogether by unanimous consent for the whole year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only by a change of the rules.

Mr. HOAR. Can not unanimous consent always change a rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when the Senate assemble to-morrow unanimous consent be given for dispensing with the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Senator will allow me to report a bill to be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the report will be received.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that as soon as the formal morning business is over I will move to take up House bills in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I assume that this matter of giving notice does not give precedence. It is merely the suggestion of the Senator giving the notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 57 minutes a. m., Thursday, March 3) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, March 3, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2965) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3354) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 10093) for the relief of Elizabeth Glassbrener and Mary Glassbrener.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, requested a conference with the House upon said bills and amendments, and had appointed on the part of the Senate conferees, as respectively indicated:

A bill (H. R. 8620) granting relief to Henry Durkee: Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL;

A bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon: Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL;

A bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley: Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL;

A bill (H. R. 8599) providing an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit, and for other purposes: Mr. EVARTS, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. GEORGE;

A bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor: Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL.

A bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of John A. London: Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL.

A bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the State of Colorado: Mr. RANSOM, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. EVARTS; and

A bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department: Mr. SPOONER, Mr. CHENEY, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

MRS. ARLANTA T. TAYLOR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 28th ultimo (the Senate concurring), I return herewith the bill of the House (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Mrs. Arlanta T. Taylor.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 1, 1887.

SAND-BAR AT SHREVEPORT, LA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a report relative to the removal of the sand-bar formed against the piers of the railway bridge across the Red River at Shreveport, La.; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and agree to a conference.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I object. Let the bill be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, is that one of the bills that came from the Senate this morning?

The SPEAKER. It is not. It has been upon the Speaker's table for two or three days.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to refer it to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. PETERS. That would be equivalent to killing the bill during this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in. The Chair will state that the original bill, which has been amended by the Senate, was reported to the House by the Committee on the Judiciary. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] now moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PETERS. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman from Kansas says that my motion is equivalent to killing this bill. Now, I do not want to say anything harsh, but I have my reasons, and, because there is that in this bill which ought not to become law, I have made my motion and am ready to take the responsibility.

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go to the Committee on the Judiciary, unless some other order is made by the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The amendment creates a new land district, and, in effect, provides for the disposal of over 3,000,000 acres of the public lands.

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, there is also in the amendment a provision extending the laws of the United States over No Man's Land——

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill might appropriately go to either committee, but the gentleman from Iowa moves that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion of Mr. WEAVER was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ANNEXATION TO WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendments, and that the bill be passed. The amendments are merely formal.

A MEMBER. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 4, line 14, after the word "matters," insert "excepting criminal proceedings."

Page 4, line 19, strike out "indictments."

Page 4, line 20, after "proceedings," insert "except in criminal matters."

Page 4, at the end of line 22, insert "all crimes heretofore committed in the territory by this act annexed to the Territory of Washington shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not passed."

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the majority of the Committee on Territories to state that that committee will concur and do concur in these amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. COBB. I object. I have not examined the amendments.

Mr. COBB subsequently withdrew his objection, and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were respectively referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Agriculture;

The bill (S. 260) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and providing a penalty for the violation of the same—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads;

The bill (S. 74) to grant an increase of pension to Frederick Beno—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 159) granting an increase of pension to Abby J. Slocum—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 234) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Waters—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 1246) for the relief of W. A. Lemaster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 1336) granting a pension to Jennie H. Coghill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 1581) granting an increase of pension to Gertrude K. Lyford—to the Committee on Pensions;

The bill (S. 2319) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret B. Todd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 2445) granting a pension to Charles W. Holland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 2564) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor S. Lawson—to the Committee on Pensions;

The bill (S. 2765) to increase the pension of James Mans—to the Committee on Pensions;

The bill (S. 2835) granting a pension to Miss Juliet G. Howe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 3190) granting a pension to Robert H. Sturgess—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 3305) granting a pension to Louise Paul—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 3328) granting a pension to Ida M. Welton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 3333) for the relief of Orrin R. McDaniel—to the Committee on Military Affairs;

The bill (S. 3334) for the relief of George W. Bolton, alias Charles W. Andrews—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

The bill (S. 3350) granting an increase of pension to George S. Hawley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and

The bill (S. 3353) granting an increase of pension to David L. Pool—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendments of the Senate are simply to strike out two or three little claims allowed by the House. The total amount covered by the bill is less than when it left the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to ask if the first clause has been amended?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has been amended by the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I shall make all the objections the rules entitle me to make to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendments will be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BLAND, for the remainder of the session, on account of a death in his family.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will appoint two additional members for the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. CONGER and Mr. SWOPE as additional members of said committee.

ENROLLED BILS SIGNED.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 118) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. FLEEGER to withdraw from the files of the House copies of papers in the case of Daniel H. Johnson (H. R. 8510), for an increase of pension, there being no adverse report.

Mr. BELMONT. Regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to submit a report.

Mr. BELMONT. I will yield for that purpose.

FIRE AT EASTPORT, ME.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 10069) for the relief of sufferers by fire at Eastport, Me.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the adverse report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask consent that the minority have leave to file their views hereafter.

There was no objection.

PACIFIC RAILROADS INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BELMONT. I renew the demand for the regular order.

Mr. CRISP. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment to allow me to call up the joint resolution of the House providing an investigation into the accounts of the Pacific railroads, with a view to moving non-concurrence in the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. BELMONT. I will yield for that motion.

Mr. CRISP. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Pacific Railroads from its further consideration, and non-concur in the Senate amendment to the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment will be read.

The amendment of the Senate was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia?

A second was not demanded.

The question was taken, and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the motion agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. CRISP, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. HAYDEN as managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. I now insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a single moment.

Mr. BELMONT. I am unable to yield any further time.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, it was announced at the beginning of the six days allowed for suspension of the rules that the Chair would feel constrained to give preference in matters of recognition to appropriation bills. To that statement I have not the slightest objection. I think it ought to be done. But I do not think the gentleman from New York ought to take the floor and then let others in, as has been done.

The SPEAKER. But there is a conference report pending.

Mr. BURROWS. There ought to be fair dealing in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, which is demanded, is the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand there are forty minutes remaining on each side of this question; and as it is so very late in the session, although that time is very brief for the discussion of the pending question, it seems to me it would be only proper to announce that at the expiration of the eighty minutes the previous question will be demanded.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it necessary to take that much time in this discussion?

Mr. BELMONT. I think it is.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman not call the previous question before the expiration of the eighty minutes?

Mr. HENLEY. It is to be hoped so.

Mr. REAGAN. This matter has been thoroughly discussed; and I ask that the debate be limited to twenty minutes on each side.

Mr. RICE. That would be acceptable to me.

Mr. BELMONT. It seems to me that it can not be in order for the gentleman to submit that motion, as the time has been already allowed under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is no motion pending.

Mr. KING. The motion of the gentleman from Texas is that the debate be limited to twenty minutes on each side, instead of forty.

The SPEAKER. That is only a suggestion, as the Chair understands, that debate be closed, and could only be done by unanimous consent. In the House the only way to cut off debate is by the previous question or by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. I suppose the gentleman from Texas means by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Texas, that debate be closed in forty minutes, twenty on each side. Is there objection?

Mr. RICE. Before that is determined I want to know exactly the position of the question.

Mr. BELMONT. I object to the request.

Mr. NELSON. Let us know the pending question.

The SPEAKER. It is on accepting the report of the conference committee, which is a disagreement, and the gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to forty minutes, twenty on each side.

Mr. BELMONT. To which I object.

Mr. RICE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICE. The report is now before the House and the first thing is, I suppose, to accept that report. Then I have given notice of a motion that the House recede from this amendment to the Senate bill. Now, is not the first vote upon that motion?

The SPEAKER. Not at all; not until the report is disposed of.

Mr. RICE. If the report be accepted?

The SPEAKER. Then the motion is in order.

Mr. RICE. There can be no objection, I presume, to accepting the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the time allowed for debate is passing.

Mr. RICE. I wish to state that I am willing to accept twenty minutes on each side.

Mr. REAGAN. In view of the objection made to my request, I will ask if the Chair will recognize any other gentleman to move the previons question and thus save this useless waste of the time of the House, in view of the fact that this bill has been already thoroughly discussed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pursue the usual practice by recognizing the gentleman who has charge of the report.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS].

Mr. CLEMENTS. I sincerely hope for one that a very short time may be taken this morning in the further discussion of this question. It is not the purpose of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to prolong this discussion unnecessarily. But we do think it is proper that the members of this House on both sides should understand what the differences really have been between the managers on the part of the House and the managers on the part of the Senate in this conference.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] on yesterday still insisted that this bill as passed by the House and as insisted upon now was subject to the objection that it was in violation of treaty rights.

Mr. RICE. The gentleman from Georgia misunderstood me.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to make a statement to that effect. If he disclaims it I pass from that question, saying, however, that the House managers proposed a distinct amendment which they were willing to agree to and recommend to the House.

Mr. RICE. And to which the Senate conferees were not unwilling to agree.

Mr. CLEMENTS. It was an amendment letting in every article that was entitled to come in under the treaty. The Senate conferees, as the gentleman states, were probably willing to recommend that, provided we would agree to strike out that part of the bill which authorized the President in his discretion to inhibit the incoming of cars and locomotives and other conveyances for transportation. I am free to say that I believe we have agreed upon every other point in the bill except that one.

Mr. RICE. And may I add the Senate conferees also would have agreed.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I mean all of the conferees. That is the vital point in this bill about which we differed.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts insists, and it was insisted elsewhere, that this amounted to a prohibition of the intercourse of friends and relatives across the line. It seems to me that this suggestion carries the discussion into the ridiculous. There is nothing in this bill that authorizes that. The true interpretation of the bill would be that inasmuch as it is proposed to inhibit the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, that the purpose of stopping the cars and other means of transportation is simply to enable the President to carry out what the gentleman now says the Senate bill proposes to do.

Gentlemen here and elsewhere have shifted the argument on this question. First the grant of this power was objected to because it was said to be in violation of the treaty. The question of the treaty was raised at all times in this argument until this morning; and when we have proposed to remove all doubt on that question by offering, as we did in conference, an amendment which all conceded would remove all doubt as to objection, now they say they are unwilling even to go as far as we can plainly and rightfully go outside of the treaty, not in violation of the treaty, to stop cars, locomotives, &c., not entitled under the treaty to come.

Now, the gentlemen propose to make this a local question, a mere question of the exclusion of fish from our markets. But in doing that, in order to get that exclusive protection on fish, they invoke the power of this Government, through its diplomatic authorities, to give that protection. They say the fishermen are willing to accept that, and they think that that is ample protection to exclude Canadian fish from our markets.

Mr. RICE. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have only ten minutes and do not desire to be interrupted.

Mr. RICE. Just let me say that fish is already protected by a pretty high duty. We do not ask for more.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Certain kinds of it are to some extent, but you propose to exclude it entirely; then you say you will be satisfied.

Mr. RICE. As long as they exclude our fishermen.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, we do not see why it should be confined to that. If we are going to have non-intercouse why is it? Simply because this controversy as to a violation of the treaty on the part of Canadian authorities grew out of the question of the rights of our fishermen? It becomes a national question, and why should we confine the inhibition, or so-called retaliation, to the one article of fish?

Mr. RICE. We do not.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The gentleman has an hour and I have only ten minutes, and I desire not to be interrupted.

Mr. RICE. But I must correct such statements as that.

Mr. CLEMENTS. These gentlemen sometimes argue that it is only confined to fish. At other times they claim that it goes further.

Mr. RICE. No one on our side has made that contention.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How far does the gentleman from Georgia say that the Senate bill goes?

Mr. CLEMENTS. There is some doubt whether it gives an effectual remedy against that or not.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman has not answered my question. What is your interpretation of it?

Mr. CLEMENTS. If it does make an inhibition in respect to other things, why not give the President power to carry that out?

Mr. MILLIKEN. What does it inhibit?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have said that it is doubtful as to how far the President could go.

It is a doubtful question, and we want to make it plain. If you say it goes further, why do you object to our making it plain that it does go further, and at the same time giving this authority to the President?

Mr. RICE. I say that it authorizes the exclusion of fresh fish, salt fish, or any other product.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I can not yield to the gentleman. He has had an hour. I repeat that the advocates of this Senate bill have narrowed it down to invoking the executive power of this Government upon the mere question of the exclusion of Canadian fish. If this is simply a little question about the commercial advantages of New England dealers in fish, why have you gone to the President of the United States about it? Why have you invoked the executive authority, and inaugurated this correspondence through the Department of State——

Mr. LONG. That is the only place we can go.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If it is a national question, as we insist it is, involving the rights of American citizens, involving a violation of their treaty rights, that is the proper place to go. If it is merely a question of excluding Canadian fish from the New England markets, why not do that by tariff legislation? If you can get this Congress to give you the exclusive right to deal in fish and to prevent the importation of foreign fish—which importation means cheap food to the American people—why do you not try by tariff legislation? Why invoke the executive power of this Government and seek to make this a national question for one purpose and a mere local, New England fish question for another?

Mr. RICE. Will the gentleman allow me to answer him?

Mr. CLEMENTS. No; I can not yield. The gentleman has had an hour. Now, I want to know if the gentleman thinks it will be satisfactory to the New England fishermen for him and those who may act with him here to say that they are unwilling to accept the remedy we offer simply because it affords too much remedy?

Mr. RICE. I will answer that if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I can not permit the gentleman to take the little time that remains to me. The only objection made to our bill is that it gives too much power to the President to retaliate, that it touches importations by the railroads. You propose to confer this discretion upon the President requiring him, by retaliatory means, to deal with this as an international question, and you do it all for the mere purpose of securing the exclusion of Canadian fish.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Your bill "retaliates" a good deal more upon your own country than upon Canada.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I see no reason why we should single out one product or one kind of goods, and lay an inhibition on that in order to cause Canada to cease violating our treaty rights, our commercial rights to fish and navigate and trade. We should not dwarf this question into a mere effort to get a commercial advantage, and then, for another purpose, call it an international question involving treaty rights. We propose to deal with it as an international question of treaty rights, as I believe it is, because it arises upon violations of the rights of American citizens secured by treaty. We have all been informed as to the harsh treatment of American citizens engaged in that business during the last fishing season, yet gentleman seem to be unwilling to give the President ample power to protect them against similar treatment during the coming season, simply because, as you think, our bill goes too far, and affects the business of some of the railroads that cross the line.

If you propose to give the President this extraordinary power at all, let it be ample to cover all emergencies that may arise. To effectually exclude the coming of Canadian products, which the Senate bill, it is insisted, authorizes, it may become necessary to exclude cars, locomotives, and vehicles for the transportation of Canadian products. The Senate bill authorizes the exclusion of Canadian vessels from our ports because they are means of transportation. Why should we not, with the same propriety, inhibit vehicles transportating inhibited goods by land?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE], who presented very fully what I suppose to be the general objections which are made to the House bill, declared that there was but one material difference between it and the Senate bill, and that that difference was as to including cars and locomotives in the exclusion of Canadian traffic with the United States. That, I undertake to say, is not the only material difference. There is an objection to the Senate bill per se, that it predicates the case of the United States against Great Britain upon the refusal of the Canadian authorities to grant to the United States the privileges of the most favored nation; and while that clause, bunglingly drawn and evidently put into the Senate bill by some hand that did not deal with words in their proper meanings, or did not understand perfectly what it was doing, has been again and again criticised and exposed upon the floor of this House, there has yet been no one bold enough to undertake its defense or to explain to the House how it is justifiable.

There is another material difference between these bills. The House bill in distinct terms looks, in a possible contingency, to the refusal to admit into American ports any vessel owned in whole or in part by a British subject, whereas the Senate bill uses the vague language, "vessels of the Dominion of Canada."

But, sir, I meet the gentleman upon his own ground. His speech is remarkable not more for what it says than for what it does not say. Neither he nor any gentleman on that side has undertaken to point out to this House any objection to the House bill; and I challenge any one now to show an objection to it. The gentleman says that it is extreme, and that he does not think the United States ought to refuse entirely commercial intercourse with Canada.

His speech, sir, is very generous of preamble and very scant of resolution. He tells us time and again that this is a very grave question; he tells us time and again that the New England fishermen have been terribly outraged; and then, making an appeal to this House not to go as far as it is willing to go in their defense, he reminds the gentleman from New York that we had better take care how we challenge England to war lest some gun may fire into New York city; and he recalls, to us the language of Webster, that "the tallest oaks sometimes sway, and the wisest men sometimes beat a retreat." Sir, if Daniel Webster were to-day in the Senate of the United States, or upon the floor of this House, I imagine that his voice would never be heard invoking the American Congress to take counsel of its fears lest a gun might be fired into New York city, and advising them to beat a retreat upon the commencement of a controversy in which we should all stand firm and go forward. [Applause.] And I venture to say that he would turn in his grave if he imagined the perverted use which is given to his words, and that he would bethink himself of those lines—

> Imperious Cæsar, dead, and turned to clay,
> Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.

The position on which the committee stands in this case is a broad American position, and I had hoped and believed that gentlemen on the other side, instead of criticising and censuring that position, would have been gratified to find that there was not a man on this side of the House who is not willing to pledge the whole authority of this nation to make New England's cause his cause and to lift this thing out of the attitude of a little local quarrel and hold it up before Great Britain as the position which America takes when that country has dared through her provinces to insult our flag in Canadian waters. [Applause.]

Sir, the position which the gentleman from Massachusetts takes is one which makes this a squabble between New England and Canada. If it is a squabble between New England and Canada, let them squabble it out to themselves. But when the gentleman introduces this question here he undertakes to ask that it be made a controversy between Great Britain and the United States; and when the Government of the United States takes its position it ought to take a firm, manly, broadside position along the whole line; and the patriotism of this country ought not to cower and hide in the shade upon the apprehension that the railroad magnates of the North and Northwest will look askant upon any action which may involve their interests in the steps taken to defend the country.

I said, sir, that the gentleman had not intimated the reason which makes some shrink from this bill. What can be the reason? I have looked in vain to discern a good one. Is it true that the "almighty dollar" has so eaten into the hearts and souls of men that the people who traffic upon the railroads of the United States are unwilling to make the cause of America their cause lest, perchance, they lose a little money while trade is suspended? Is it true, sir, that corporation power has become so vast along the northern line of the United States that corporation presidents and directors and bondholders and stockholders cry "halt" to the American Congress when it wants to make the whole people of the United States take the cause of the New England fishermen in their hands and settle it by showing Great Britain and Canada that we are not to be trifled with? If there be any other reason it has not been stated, and I have in vain sought for it.

I hope that the House of Representatives will stand by this bill and not yield one jot or tittle. You can not reproach this House that it has not been willing to pass legislation on this question. Last week you said that the Senate had not time, and that was to be the excuse for passing through here the Senate bill. The Senate has had time; it has debated this subject; it has refused to accept the House bill; and if the Senate of the United States chooses to take upon its shoulders the responsibility of saying, "We will not protect New England fishermen lest we may interfere for a little while with railroad traffic," let them take that position, and they will be held up to the reprehension of every independent American who is willing to make this a national question and to bring it at once into the dignity and importance which it ought to occupy before the nations. [Applause.]

I trust, sir, that the House of Representatives, to whom the Chief Magistrate of this nation looks to uphold his hands, knowing that this bill formulates very approximately, if not entirely, the views which have been presented by this administration, will say to him, "You have the responsibility, you have the care, you have the burden of this negotiation; you have shown," as the gentleman from Massachusetts said yesterday, "that you are willing, that you are patriotic, that you are able to conduct it." It is a poor tribute to him to give him the compliment of words and to refuse him the confidence of action. I appeal to this House, to every Democrat here and to every American here, to stand by the Chief Magistrate of this nation, not because he is a Democrat, but because he is the representative of this nation and deserves and ought to receive its unstinted confidence and its thorough backing in this controversy. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor, and yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague on the committee [Mr. HITT].

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I listened with great surprise to the charge made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] who has just taken his seat against those of us who favor the Senate bill that we are holding back or preventing action. We have urged action, and united, efficient action in our way and in any and every way. We have assented to, and every one of us voted for, a measure when it contained a most mischievous and objectionable railway-car prohibition rather than have nothing done. Looking solely to the good of our country, anxious to strengthen the Government in its dispute with a great foreign power, we on this side have all of us stood together firmly behind the President, even accepting and voting for the measure after you on the other side of the House had thrust into it a provision which was demonstrated on this floor to be unwise and ill-advised.

The sentiment of patriotism dominated even our aversion to a crudely, unwisely-framed bill with an extreme and unnecessary prohibition of railroad intercourse with Canada.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] said the House conferees whom we sent to confer with those from the Senate in regard to the difference between the two Houses on this subject, and who were expected to come to an agreement, could not do so because they felt that they ought not to yield to the Senate on the railroad transportation clause, nor give it up for the reason that it had been adopted by the almost unanimous final vote of this House. Had he forgotten that when that was first voted on separately in this House there were 124 votes against that clause, and that it was barely kept in on a vote that would have been reversed by only seven men changing? The gentleman has the whole history of this measure and this struggle upside down. It was after this clause, unwelcome and barely carried, had been put on the bill that it received the final large vote which we generously gave to present a united front in support of our Government. When we had been willing to yield so much, everything, he used the vote we gave for the whole bill, notwithstanding its obnoxious feature, as a reason for stubbornly sticking to that very feature in the conference with the Senate. And he persists in sticking to it now when it is evident that by doing so the House would simply defeat all legislative action, and leave the question in worse shape by our failure to act than if the matter of supporting the Government by the strengthening support of Congress had not been raised at all.

What has the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] and those with him proposed here? Our fishermen and fishing vessels are being harassed by a foreign power, and the Senate, after months of patient inquiry, pass a bill to strengthen the hands of the President. It comes before the House, broad, searching in its provisions, clothing the President with great powers, wisely guarded in terms, carefully framed—and do the gentlemen propose to take it up promptly and pass it? No; it lies a month waiting, and then they search the proceedings of the Senate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to find something which the Senate has long ago voted down by an almost unanimous voice, by a vote so great that it is unreasonable to expect that body to ever accept it, and they add that very clause to it, and make what is known as the Belmont bill—a bill that thus seems to have been contrived in order to produce confusion. That amendment barely passed this House, so close was the vote. Then the two Houses were in disagreement, and our conferees who went to represent this House refused to yield a step on this doubtful point, and all is to fall. That is the situation of this House, and I hope it will now promptly recede from that ill-contrived railway-car amendment and let this bill, all the rest of which is acceptable to Senate and House, become law immmediately.

There is urgent need of action, and has long been, for the relief of our fishing interest, yet nothing has been done. All has been unsuccessful and unfortunate on our side from the first. The Canadians are in a position to harass and vex and torment our fishermen at their ease. The administration, it seems, wants support here. We are willing to give it, but this contrivance called the Belmont bill is brought in and persistently pressed, certain to defeat our doing anything if we do not vote it down right now.

We have all of us, on both sides of this House, by our solemn vote, recorded our assent to everything in the Senate bill substantially. If any one sticks on minor points or forms, the Senate conferees, as reported by a gentleman from the conference committee, are ready to yield everything of that kind in order to secure a bill which will please the House. They will strike out the favored-nation clause in their bill, if we want it done, or make any other change of words which may be deemed necessary. But as to this very different thing—the obnoxious railroad-car prohibition, so overwhelmingly condemned by the Senate in the first instance—they are not willing to have forced on them at this late hour that proposition which the House could only be brought to accept the other day on a close vote, and which was then carried only by the interference and exercise of an authority outside of this Hall, which ought never to be brought to influence a separate and independent branch of the Government.

Why can not we now accept the Senate bill which we voted for once, though it had other things added then? Why not accept all that the Senate agree to when it is satisfactory to us? If we were wedded to the railway prohibition and could not get it accepted by the Senate, why not take that in which we do all agree at both ends of the Capitol? That is the ordinary and plain duty of a conference committee. But these gentlemen have a new rule by which conference is for the purpose of disagreement and preventing action.

The Senate bill proposes to do what is needed in a logical, business way. Our fishermen have been ill-treated. Our fishing interests have been injured. Perhaps it is not a great sum of money compared to our national wealth. It is not a great number of men, but they are American citizens. In response, for their injuries and for their vindication, we propose to clothe the President with a great power of retaliation that will reach our adversary's property to an amount many times larger in extent than our losses. This retaliation is a peaceful and efficient method of redress. It will soon inflict great and substantial losses upon our opponents and thus induce them to change their course of action. In retaliation for annoying our fishermen and fishing vessels when they go into their harbors, the Senate bill proposes to authorize the President to keep their fishing vessels and fishermen out of our ports altogether. They vex our fishing interests in order to constrain us to admit their fish to our markets without paying duty. Instead of yielding and permitting this, we authorize the President to say to them peremptorily, "You can not come here with any more of your fish, even if you pay the duty."

In addition to that, we would clothe the President with power in his discretion to prohibit any and all of the productions of Canada from coming into the United States. But the specific power pointed out particularly, to be first used, is retaliation in kind. We ought not to loose sight of the great importance and significance of making our retaliation exactly responsive to the injury and in kind wherever it can be done. Always keep the original injury plainly in sight of the world. For what do we resort to this action at all except to influence public opinion both abroad and at home. By selecting the fishing interest of Canada for our proscriptive legislation at first, we keep public opinion every moment centered upon the very point in dispute—the specific wrongs of which we complain. It is not by raising trouble with Manatoba, it is not by disturbing business in Columbia, it is not by cutting off railroads and causing a great shock to all trade in Detroit, Suspension Bridge, and all along the line of the border cities for a thousand miles, that you show the world convincingly that you wish to protect our fishermen along the coast of Nova Scotia. On the contrary, it raises new troubles and irritations worse than the old, inflaming the passions of both sides till the point of dispute is forgotten and far greater danger of mutual exasperation and war arises. Is that the work of statesmen charged with the welfare of nations and the peace of mankind?

But what sort of retaliation for wrongs to fishermen is this stoppage of railway cars and locomotives? Why, there is practically no way of travel or transportation by land in our generation except in railway cars. The whole commerce of mankind by land may now be said to be carried exclusively on railway cars. What, then, does retaliation of this kind mean? It means the total, absolute cessation of business communication, the interruption of all intercourse between adjoining towns and extensive populations adjacent to each other and closely knit by long intimacy along a stretch of 3,000 miles, crossed in more than a dozen places by lines of railway communication. Stopping their cars will be answered by reciprocally stopping ours. It will inflict a great injury. Yes; but upon whom? Nearly all of it upon our own people, upon our own interests. We have five cars crossing the lines where they have one. We turn back ten times as much of the products of our own farms on the way to market as we do of theirs. I thought retaliation was to inflict loss on our adversary. But by this plan we strike ourselves. They can see this as well as we can, and will laugh at such blind, self-injuring anger. When will that bring the Nova Scotians to terms and relieve our fishermen? And when will the passions that it will awaken adjust our dispute? In this ill-chosen, angry exercise of spite you cut off your nose to spite your face; you destroy your own trade and injure your own people, thinking to cripple your neighbors and retaliate for vexations to fishermen in the ports of Nova Scotia. [Applause.]

Mr. RICE. I now yield ten minutes to my colleague [Mr. WORTHINGTON].

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, what we want now is practical legislation upon this subject. We have protested through the Secretary of State and through our minister in England against the wrongs and aggressions practiced upon our American fishermen in Canadian waters. Our protests have been so far without avail.

The time has now come when the Congress of the United States must take prompt action. It would have been much better if we had not entered upon any attempt to pursue a policy of retaliation at all than to have it fail now because of disagreement between the two Houses.

What are the wrongs of which we complain? The Canadian authorities have hindered and annoyed our in-shore fishermen in the enjoyment of the privileges of shelter, repair, wood, and water guaranteed to them by the treaty of 1818. They have also insisted that the deep-sea fishermen were subject to the same limitations as those applying to the in-shore fishermen. That is all of the difficulty between us and Canada. There is nothing else in dispute. Our intercourse in every other respect is just as free and harmonious as ever.

Let us now look at what is proposed in the way of retaliation in kind. The Senate took the initiative in this matter. It passed a broad and comprehensive bill. Gentlemen tell us that it is limited only to the fisheries question; but clearly they must have misunderstood its meaning.

Let me call attention in the limited time I have, for I can not read it all, to what the Senate bill does provide. It authorizes the President to prohibit the entrance into American ports of Canadian vessels. Is not that wider than the mere question of fisheries involved in this controversy?

It authorizes him to prohibit the sale in the American markets of any kind of fish, whether salt, dried, or fresh, caught by Canadian fishermen.

It goes still further. It authorizes him to prohibit the introduction into the United States of any product of the Canadian soil. But, says my friend, the gentlemen from Virginia, the action of the President is to be based upon the "most favored nation clause." Why, Mr. Speaker, the language of the Senate bill is much wider. The conditions upon which the President's action is authorized are expressed in the disjunctive, and some of these conditions are as follows:

Whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that American fishing vessels or American fishermen visiting or being in the waters or at any ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been—

Now notice how broad this is—denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law, or are or then lately have been unjustly vexed or harassed in the enjoyment of such rights, or subjected to unreasonable restrictions, regulations, or requirements in respect of such rights, or otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed in said waters, ports, or places.

Is that not broad enough ground on which the President may stand; and upon whose occurrence he may act? Now, let us see if the powers vested in him by the Senate bill in the line of retaliation are not fully ample. He can close absolutely all American ports against Canadian vessels. He can forbid the introduction and sale in our markets of Canadian fish whether fresh, dried, or salted. More than this. He can forbid the entrance into American territory by land or sea of any Canadian product or products whether of the ground or of the factory. If the policy of retaliation is carried out to this extent and fails to secure the desired object, no policy of mere retaliation can secure it. The Senate, without distinction of party, without distinction of section, knowing no East, South, North, or West, trusting in the ability, firmness, and moderation of the President, passed this bill and sent it to the House where it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

What ought to have been the action of that committee? I signed neither the majority nor the minority report, and do not wish to criticise my friends in the majority for their action, but in my judgment that bill having passed the Senate almost unanimously, voted through with but a single vote in the negative, should have been promptly and unanimously reported by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. It should have been favorably reported and laid upon your desks for action within twenty-four hours after its reception by the committee. If it had been, in my opinion it would have been accepted and unanimously passed by this House without respect to party or section immediately upon its consideration. Then we would have stood together with an unbroken front. Passed in this way it would have carried with it a moral weight, a political inertia, that would have been felt in every part of the Dominion of Canada and at the court of Saint James.

Now, when the proposition was made here, which bill would you prefer, the Senate or the House bill, what was the vote? Two hundred and sixty-one voted upon that question, and there was a bare majority of 13 in favor of the House bill. The Senate unanimously presented its bill. I will go as far as any gentleman here in maintaining and preserving the rights and prerogatives of the House. I believe, directly representing as it does the people of the United States, that where there is a radical difference between the two Houses the other branch should yield, and not this. But there is no radical difference between the Houses upon this question. The power is ample under either bill, and the other branch of the legislative department have voted unanimously in favor of the grant of power as expressed in this Senate bill.

The House preferred the House bill by a bare majority of 13 in a full vote of that body.

Under these circumstances we lose none of our dignity, we surrender no prerogative, in receding from a choice manifested by a majority of 13 in favor of the unanimous expression of the Senate. Let us, then, take the course that secures practical and immediate legislation. Let us direct our committee of conference to recede and unite with the Senate without respect to party in presenting an unbroken front, a unified sentiment, and a firm and definite policy upon this question. [Applause.]

Mr. RICE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. When this question was before the House I submitted my views in favor of the substitute reported from the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. I did so, Mr. Speaker, because I thought it was eminently fit and proper that there should be some legislation upon this subject.

As is known to my colleagues upon the committee, I originally favored the Senate bill; first, as a representative, because I thought if we were in earnest about this matter we ought to pass a retaliatory measure as speedily as possible; second, because, viewing it from a political standpoint, I thought it would be to the advantage of my party to divide honors with the Senate by passing as speedily as possible the measure which they presented for our consideration. It turned out, however, that my vote in the committee would have defeated any legislation upon this question; and in order that there should be some I voted in favor of the substitute after it had been amended by the elimination of the third section, which provided for a commission to take testimony.

Now, actuated by the same motive, having in view the welfare of my country and that alone, without reference at all to the question of politics, I believe that this House ought to recede from its amendment and support the Senate bill. The only difference between the two measures, when we consider them from a practical standpoint, lies in the fact that the House bill is more specific in determining what shall be prohibited from entrance into the United States. If you read the Senate bill you will discover that it is not limited to a prohibition of the entrance of fish. A mistaken impression prevailed the other day on this side of the House in respect to this question. Our Democratic friends thought it was limited to fish in the prohibition of imports. Such is not the case; because the language of the Senate bill, although not as specific as the language of the House bill, still covers everything, no matter what it may be, that may be sought to be imported into this country. This is the language:

The President shall also have power to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said Dominion or other goods coming from said Dominion to the United States.

That language is broad; it is general; it is comprehensive; and the amendment which was put upon the House substitute upon my motion simply specified that the goods which were contained in any car or hauled by any locomotive should be prevented from entrance into the United States.

I was glad that the House conferees adhered to the substitute proposed by this House, because the honor of the chairman of the committee and the honor of the members of that committee were involved. For there appeared on the day after the passage of this bill and before it could possibly have reached the Senate, an interview with the chairman of the committee in which it is reported that he said in substance that he wanted legislation, and that if he had discovered before the passage of the subsitute that he could not succed in getting it through, he would have accepted the Senate bill, and, said he, "The country is safe. The world need not stand alarmed. There will be no war; because I will be chairman of the committee of conference of the House, and I tell you now we will take the Senate bill if we can do no better."

I, therefore, am glad for the sake of the committee of which the gentleman is the honored and distinguished chairman that he refused to recede; that he insisted upon the substitute. But the honor being saved it does not follow that all else is lost; and if he is willing to stand by his statement that if he can do no better he will take the Senate bill let him vote for it to-day; because the closing hours of this session are approaching and it is perfectly apparent that if we do not pass the Senate bill, or, in other words, if we do not recede from the House amendment we will have no bill at all.

The responsibility has been sought to be thrown on this side—not by Republican members but by a Democratic Representative; not for political effect; it is immaterial what the motive is. The fact remains that unless we recede from our amendment we will have no law.

I do not think that the distinguished gentleman who occupies the position of President of the United States seeks to shirk the responsibility of protecting the rights of American citizens. He has shown by his conduct in the vetoing of measures and in affixing his signature to others that he has the courage of his convictions, and that, without respect to the opinions of individuals or classes, he stands ready to do his duty as he understands it.

Therefore I say to this House that I believe it to be our duty, not as Democrats, not as Republicans, but as American citizens, to come to the front and pass the Senate bill, and to tell the people of Great Britain and the people of Canada that whenever the honor of this country is involved, whenever the rights of the citizens of the United States are assailed, this Government has the will and the courage, even if it has not the power, to protect those rights and to defend that honor. [Applause.]

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, upon this question no man can say what action this House will take, but in a few moments the position of a majority will be defined, because they must decide one way or the other. As far as I am concerned as an individual Representative, this matter is now just where I hope it will stop. I hope that this House will not recede, and I hope that the Senate will insist, and that this proposed legislation will die, where many a piece of legislation has died, in a committee of conference.

During this whole discussion it has not been discovered that any American citizen has been deprived of any of his rights, because investigation will show, so far as I am advised, that each and every vessel that has been molested in Canadian waters has been taken up in pursuance of a law which is not in derogation of any treaty existing between the two governments. It has not been claimed anywhere that there has been any violation of the existing treaty on the part of the English Government, and the laws of Canada, of which we complain, are in consonance with existing treaty, and when Americans violate them they do so at their own peril. No gentleman has claimed that such is not the case, and the difficulty with which we are brought face to face here is the difficulty which has come to us wherever we have had what is called diplomatic negotiation. Except, perhaps, in the instance when a treaty was negotiated with France during the Revolution, men have been appointed to represent this Government who have yielded everything that the representatives of the opposing government asked, and obtained nothing for us. Mr. Speaker, we are too fast in this matter. This pending bill, if it be carried out, if its provisions be put in force, is a virtual declaration of war against the British Government, a friendly power. I take no stock in this spread-eagle, bloody, and patriotic war talk. The people of this country have had war enough, they do not want any more without good reason. I rely upon the good sense of the American people, and upon the good sense of the English people, to adjust all difficulties; and, as I have said, I take no stock in this patriotic war talk. I yield to no man in my devotion to this country. Whenever I am called upon I am ready to take my stand for the maintenance of the sovereignty of the Government of the United States, and for the protection of our citizens in all their rights against every enemy, foreign or domestic. But what is the question presented here? It is a proposition for retaliatory legislation, although it has not been even charged—much less successfully maintained—that there has been any violation on the part of the British Government of any stipulation in any existing treaty; in fact it is admitted that the opposite is the truth. Vessels not violating law have not been molested, and being seized and the law complied with they have been released.

The true way to settle this question is through the diplomatic departments of the two governments; or, failing a settlement there, let us have a new treaty, taking care to appoint as our representatives men who will have sense enough not to yield to the commissioners of the British Government all they may demand, and get no advantageous concessions in return. There is no necessity for this haste, and no danger of any war; it is merely a matter of business, and such legislation is simply an effort to bring about by legislation a remedy for difficulties which exist by virtue of the incompetence of what are called diplomats.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, the points in this case in behalf of the position taken by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] have been so well stated this morning that I shall hardly require the five minutes allowed me. I am very glad that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] has so frankly stated his position, which is that things should remain as they are; in other words, that, according to his view, the House should insist upon its disagreement. For if the House insist upon its disagreement then there will be, as he hopes there will be, no legislation at all upon this subject.

It is practically an admission on his part of the position now taken not only by him but in effect by other gentlemen upon this floor who are insisting upon the disagreement between the two Houses, or upon the substitution of the House bill, which is tantamount to an insistance upon disagreement. It is the position of having no legislation at all. This is a matter of hard common sense which is before us now. It is not a question of party or of eloquent words. If we decide it upon party considerations, then we might as well abandon all hope of any legislation; but if we look at the question as a matter of pure, hard, common sense, then there is no doubt that we shall recede from our position and concur with the Senate, because that is the only way to secure any legislation at all.

What is this question of hard practical sense that is before us? It is this, the House is divided—substantially upon party lines—between two bills which look to the securing of a common object that everbody recognizes as vital, and which differ only in one or two particulars which have been pointed out. The Senate, containing members of both parties, but on this question rising above party considerations, stand unanimously in favor of their bill. What is the presumption? The presumption is that the Senate bill is the better one, and that there is no reason existing in this House to-day why we should refuse to concur in it except possibly a matter of party pride, or of pride in our committee, or pride in our branch of the legislature. Not only is there the presumption that the Senate bill is the better one, but that bill is in fact the better one.

Mr. CLEMENTS. There has been no vote in the Senate on this conference.

Mr. LONG. The Senate bill is better. This is a matter of a good deal of delicacy. Retaliation is a two-edged sword. We want to take it by the handle and not by the blade. The House bill goes farther than the interests which are at stake demand. The Senate bill itself goes a great way. I am inclined to think that possibly it goes too far in providing for the prohibiton of anything except the importation of fish. But it is at least ample; it goes far enough. The House bill goes still further, and, therefore, too far. It prohibits the interchange of railroad-car communication. Mr. Speaker, you might as well inhibit postal communication between the two countries. Such a measure is not demanded by the interests at stake. As surely as you pass this House bill you will create a reaction in public sentiment against the whole business, and I am not sure but that some gentlemen have that in mind. You would awake alarm all through the commercial and industrial interests of this country. They would recognize this as an attempt toward entire non-intercourse—toward staying international communication and business. There would be a reaction of public sentiment which would defeat this matter.

Therefore, because the Senate bill is all that the interests involved require or ask, because the House bill would result in a reaction of public sentiment, because the result of insisting on it would be to defeat any legislation at all, let us do this act of hard, practical, common sense and concur in the Senate bill. Otherwise we adjourn with no legislation at all, with no rebuke of the vexatious and harassing conduct of the Canadian authorities towards our fishermen; with no power lodged in the hands of the President to vindicate our national self-respect; and with the Canadians not only laughing at us but encouraged by our own act in continuing their aggressions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have six minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has six minutes.

Mr. RICE. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS].

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, I must refer to the eloquent arraignment made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] of the railroad system of the United States. It was beautiful as "the flowers of spring," and like them had "nothing to do with the case." [Laughter.] I must also insist in the interest of Massachusetts that the language which the gentleman put in the mouth of Daniel Webster, after he resurrected him, was so inferior to the eloquence of Virginia that the gentleman made some mistake in his resurrection. [Laughter.]

I want also to say, in full justification of my living friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE], that he has behaved with exceeding modesty in view of the peculiar position in which he is placed. He stood last evening a prophet facing the full fulfillment of his prophecy; for when the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, induced his committee by the slightest majority to adopt this unnecessary substitute, the gentleman from Massachusetts said to that committee what he said in this House when by a majority equally narrow—137 to 124—the House adopted and passed it. The Senate will never in the world accept this substitute, and there is no excuse for this action unless we wish to check all further progress in the direction of retaliatory legislation.

His prophecy is to-day the fact. And what are we to do in the premises? The answer depends upon whether we want to give the President additional powers in the direction of retaliation. If we do we must vote to recede from the amendment of the House. If we do not wish to give the President additional powers, which he may use to menace Great Britain into a compliance with his wishes, then all we have to do to-day is to follow again the blind leading of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and we shall get our wish. It is the Senate bill or nothing.

I say, Mr. Speaker, "additional powers," in order that the President may have stronger weapons with which to assault the foreign office of the British Government. Does the House forget that one year ago we said to the President just what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] wants us to say to-day: "We trust you; on you is the responsibility; take all that you ask." Does the House forget that then and there we passed the Dingley shipping bill without any trouble or delay, and said to the President: "Take what we are told you want; take it and fight the Canadian Government with fire as you wish; fight them with the same fire with which they fight us; here is your authority; close every port in the United States against Canadian vessels; deprive all of them in American ports of every right which American vessels are deprived of in the ports of the dominion." The President of the United States has had these powers for a year and has never yet used them. We might have hesitated in granting new ones under these circumstances, yet when his friends, giving no explanation for his lack of American pluck and spirit, came again to the Senate and said, "Give the President more authority; you have already told him that he can close all the ports of our country; now tell him that he may refuse entry, not only into all ports, but into all places to all Canadian products and goods. Let him enforce the silence of suspended trade;" the Senate did it unanimously, and——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has one minute remaining.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, the one minute I have left is all the time I wish. On the other side of this question is the prestige of the chairman of the committee [Mr. BELMONT] and the flowery eloquence of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. But I desire to call the attention of this House to the fact that behind me stands the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and when I move that the House recede from its amendment, I do so with the majority of that committee indorsing the motion, as is shown by the debate this morning. Mr. Speaker, as soon as that motion is entered, I shall move the previous question——

The SPEAKER. The motion is not pending.

Mr. RICE. I have given notice that I shall make it.

Several MEMBERS. Make it now.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has just made the motion.

The SPEAKER. He can not make it now. As soon as the report is accepted the motion may be made.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the difference between the House and the Senate, it is simply upon the question how far we shall go in adopting retaliatory measures to force a settlement of the fishery controversy.

I propose, sir, to look at this question briefly from a national standpoint of view, and then from a New England standpoint of view. In my judgment, if we adopt the Senate proposition, the fishery question can remain unsettled till doomsday. Suppose the Senate proposition is accepted, what power is vested in the President of the United States under it? He can simply prohibit Canadian vessels from entering our ports; he can also prohibit Canadian produce from entering the ports of the United States, and he can prohibit Canadian fish from entering the United States.

I presume, sir, the New England States can well afford to give up the right of fishing in disputed Canadian waters and the right of purchasing bait in Canada if thereby they secure the monopoly of the fish trade of the United States. But, sir, we are looking to retaliatory measures and if such a policy should be adopted, why do we not also authorize the President of the United States to exercise the right of excluding Canadian cars, which, if non-intercourse in the future is to be our policy, would be more effective in accomplishing the object we have in view, if such a policy is admissible at all, than all the other powers you propose to confer on the President. In both the Senate and House propositions the powers conferred on the President are discretionary and not mandatory. It is not to be presumed he will exercise them until all peaceable and conciliatory efforts have failed. But I call the attention of the House to the fact that the railroad interests of the Dominion of Canada and the interests of New England are practically one and the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BELMONT. I will give the gentleman from Pennsylvania two minutes longer.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, Mr. Speaker, the vast traffic from the West and Northwest, local to New England, and seeking the seaboard for transshipment to the continent of Europe, is not only of great importance to the railroads of New England, but also to the ports of Portland, Boston, and other New England cities, and the great bulk of this traffic reaches New England over Canadian railroads.

Mr. REED. In other words, we would hurt them more than ourselves if we tried it.

Mr. SCOTT. New England can not afford to sacrifice her railroad traffic and her great commercial centers for any policy, although that policy may be the best to maintain the honor of the United States and secure to the people the very rights growing out of this question. They want the railroads of Canada to be hauling into Portland, Boston, and the entire New England coast the traffic of the West and the Northwest, so far as this can be done; and at the same time they desire to have a monopoly of the fish trade of the country. The only concession they are willing to make, even in their own interests in connection with this subject, is that American bottoms can not purchase bait in Canada. [Laughter.] I say, sir, if you are going to adopt a retaliatory policy at all, confer upon the President of the United States the fullest and most effective powers possible to enable him to bring this question to a final settlement, which is to exclude Canadian cars along with Canadian bottoms, products, and fish. [Applause.]

Mr. BELMONT. I yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Who are the parties to the controversy? The Kingdom of Great Britain and the Republic of the United States. We belittle it when we say it is the Dominion of Canada and the fishermen of New England. What is the object of these proceedings? To authorize negotiations for the purpose of securing a treaty which will settle this controversy between Great Britain and America.

Whatever may have been the causes which produced this controversy, or the acts which have marked its progress, or the merits of the dispute, there is now pending between these great powers a controversy of such a character that in the Senate of the United States a grave Senator has said that during the recess of Congress there may be bloodshed.

Now, it is proposed to put into the hands of the President power—to do what? To force a negotiation with Great Britain for the purpose of securing a permanent peace. It is a peace measure. It takes a dispute about fish and the rights and privileges of fishing vessels, which may result in war, out of the hands of those who are interested in that given industry and puts it into the hands of the cabinets of Great Britain and America. How? The day of the kingdom of men has passed away, and the dominion of public opinion has come. This measure arouses public interest. It makes the entire border, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, alive to the danger of war and sensitive to the result, and anxious, therefore, for settlement; it makes the merchants of Great Britain, one of whose lines of transit from Great Britain to India is partly through America, anxious for the settlement of this controversy.

It makes the great railroad interests of the Dominion of Canada, of New England, and of the West, interested in this subject; and it gives to our administration the power to say to Great Britain: "Give us attention; stop for a moment from the discussion of the wrongs of Ireland and the remedies thereof; turn your attention from India and listen to America, as she demands a treaty that will settle this question."

I have not the time to discuss the merits of this controversy nor all the differences between the House and Senate bills. Since 1783, the date of our first treaty with Great Britain, or from the treaty of 1818, there have been enormous changes in the two countries; in the density of population along the frontier of America and Canada, and the maritime provinces of Canada; in the mode of fishing; in the recognized international privileges accorded to vessels in the ports of friendly nations; in the circumstances surrounding all parties to this controversy. We can not be remitted to the treaty nor to the days of 1818.

We have no treaty with Great Britain as to the commercial rights of our vessels in the ports of Canada. We must by treaty adjust all our difficulties upon a new basis. We must recognize the changes of the years and treat as our present condition requires.

This is the province of negotiation. The only excuse for, as the only province of, retaliation is to produce, to force, negotiation. It is not to punish, to annoy, but to cause peace; to secure a settlement. This is the object to be attained. The retaliation, to be efficient, must be sufficient to produce negotiation. Mere punishment may prolong controversy, and is unbecoming, beneath the dignity of a great country, and unworthy of the civilization of the age.

It is not a play of tit-for-tat, but a mode of forcing such negotiation as will remove all cause for further danger of war. It will necessarily cause temporary loss; perhaps some injury. This may be, must be, the result of all embargoes, of all non-intercourse, and to both parties. This must be understood.

Mr. Speaker, if we are not to have war how are we to avoid it except by negotiation? How are we to settle this irritating question? This question of fisheries has been upon us for nigh a hundred years.

I am, Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to me, trying to get away from the mere details of the controversy——

Mr. REED. Evidently.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Avoiding the discussion of the motives that may control some gentlemen; those who desire to increase the duty on fish, from which retaliatory measure profit to them will ensue, a duty which will be paid out of the pockets of the American fish consumers and to the fishermen of New England; of those who have guns to make and sell for coast defenses, by which a large standing army may be maintained, and the necessary appropriations made to provide for the same; those who clamor for extravagant appropriations under pretense of building a new navy; of those who denounce Great Britain to pose as the friends of Ireland, I desire to present the single issue what is the best course to pursue to produce the result which all desire, a treaty to permanently and amicably settle this controversy, so as to preserve the honor of America and secure all the rights and privileges to which any of her citizens may be entitled.

Mr. Speaker, it is urged that the Senate has the House by the throat. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] always incisive, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] always eloquent, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] with large diplomatic experience have declared that we must recede or there will be no legislation; which means when you boil down what they say that the Senate has the House by the throat, and if we do not acquiesce in what the Senate wants, we will be held responsible for doing nothing.

In the name of the people whom the House of Representatives immediately represent; in the name of the honor and dignity of this House, the popular branch of Congress, I protest against the indignity to the House that is involved in such an argument [applause], and put the responsibility of failure where it belongs, upon the Senate that will not give us power to make peace by means of sufficient retaliation.

And if it be true that it is wise to keep from our ports the vehicles that transport by sea, why is it not wise also to keep out of our territory the vehicles that go by land?

Why so sensitive when you touch the railroads of New England? Why so anxious to avoid retaliation that will be efficient and sufficient? Is it because by these means you make a double profit? You prohibit Canadian fish and profit by the squabble at the cost of the American fish consumers. You admit freight-bearing cars and profit again by the prohibition of vessels from our ports. The carrying trade on water is not in your hands, so you prohibit them from entering our ports, and your fish go up. The carrying trade on land is partly in your hands, and freight is increased by prohibiting vessels to enter our ports, and you profit by that prohibition. The House bill puts New England under bond to keep the peace, to prevent bloodshed, to be moderate in the claims presented and the mode of obtaining and exercising the rights and privileges claimed; the Senate bill offers a bonus to keep up the present operation, to risk extreme measures, to take violent measures. The House bill means peace now, and quick negotiation and speedy settlement; the Senate means—I fear was intended by some to mean—prolongation of this dispute, continuance of the irritation, and probably graver consequences hereafter.

Mr. Speaker, let us get somewhat higher than the level of the motives that may control those pecuniarily interested; let us take one pure breath of higher latitude than personal interest. Here we are in the controversy; these are American citizens owning these vessels with the American flag at their mastheads. They have cause, as they think, of complaint. We, too, so believe. That cause of complaint is against the Dominion of Canada, with which we can not have diplomatic relations, as it is a dependency of England. We must, therefore, through England make our negotiations. England refers our demand back to Canada, and we have not been able by this means, notwithstanding the brave, manly, and able presentation of our claim by the Secretary of State and our minister at the court of Great Britain, to secure prompt and proper consideration of our demands; and we are thus delayed by this alleged official courtesy from the home office to the authorities of Canada. We now desire to authorize our Executive to say to England we must have an end of this; we will not be longer baffled by your internal courtesy.

We will not be deterred from the settlement of this question by your claim that it shall be done through Canada. We will have this matter brought not to the arbitrament of war, but of negotiations, by requiring that the retaliatory measures we put into effect will be of such a character as will demand negotiation and settlement. That is the true course to pursue. There lies the remedy, and there is the road to honor and to peace; dignified, asking nothing to which we are not entitled; ready to concede what is friendly and just; powerful, because backed up by sixty millions of freemen, and because our quarrel is just; paltering with no local squabbles, making our case no longer contemptible by connecting it in any manner with mere local disputes, but treating it as a question in which all our people are interested, a national matter, because it is our flag that is involved, and as a national cause, at whatever cost it may be to any section of the country. [Applause.] I can afford to urge this, because I represent that district which over seventy years ago stood for the rights of the seamen and the flag; that district represented by the greatest of parliamentary leaders, who took the ground that I am taking to-day, that the President of the United States should be armed with power sufficient to retaliate with Great Britain for anything that Great Britain did to our commerce or to our seamen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BELMONT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. I deprecate war as should every intelligent and thoughtful representative man who will but for a moment reflect on the horrors that follow all armed conflicts. I do not believe this is likely to result in a struggle between Great Britain and the United States. The President of the United States is the authorized agent, the mouth-piece of the American people in all its controversies and its negotiations with foreign countries.

There is but a single question involved in the proposition presented. There has been some stress laid upon the unity of the Senate and the divided counsels of this House. I do not think justice has been done in that particular. I remember that when the minority on this question sought in large degree to modify the power of the President, after they failed in that, as has been stated, by 13 votes, they most wisely and, as I thought, in a most patriotic manner, affirmed the proposition of the House committee with but a single dissentient.

The question involved here is, shall we give to the President of the United States not an aggressive, but an effective power within the line and scope of negotiation, so that when we enter upon a retaliatory proceeding it shall reach a satisfactory conclusion. You might as well undertake to send a man into the physical arena with one arm tied to contest against another with both arms as attempt in this way to abridge the discretion of the President of the United States in his purpose to deal by negotiation with foreign governments as to disputes in which the interests of the American people are involved. They have all power. We want in this instance to give to the President of the United States, having confidence in his discretion and his patriotism, yes, and in his courage, such power that he may be able to bring this negotiation to a peaceful conclusion, with honor to both nations and with no discredit to either. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BELMONT. I call for the previous question on the acceptance of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof, the report was accepted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICE. I now move that the House recede from its amendment.

Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. RICE. I do.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, there are gentlemen somewhat distant from the scene of this controversy who can afford perhaps to make it a matter of politics; but those of us who live in New England have not that right, nor do we desire that privilege. With us it is a matter which concerns the business interests of our people; and if by any word I can call the attention of this House back to the practical, sensible aspect of this case, I shall do a service to the people of my district and perhaps to the people of the United States.

Some time ago the fishermen of the United States had the right under treaty of fishing in Canadian waters. That right has been taken away from them at their own request by the abrogation of the treaty. Thereupon the Canadians commenced a series of persecutions, having for their object the re-establishment of that treaty. Those persecutions consisted of harassment of our vessels by denying them the right which is given among all civilized communities, that right of ordinary hospitality which Christian nations always, and now even barbaric nations, grant upon their coasts. It is to rid ourselves of this inhospitable treatment that effort is now being made; and the sole question before this House is a question of expediency, a question as to what will enable us to accomplish the result.

There ought not to be either war or the shadow of war in the transactions. What we need is the use of peaceable means such as international law gives us, such as will be as effective as arguments ad hominem and not arguments ad bellum.

It is proposed by the Senate bill that the President shall have power of retaliation to such an extent as will make the Canadians who are alone doing this thing, realize that it is as disadvantageous to them as it is to us to drop the Christian methods of intercourse among civilized people. The proposition of the House goes one step further. The House bill proposes that we shall do of our own motion precisely the thing we are complaining of on their part; that we shall by refusing to allow railroads to transport their cars here break a treaty which by its very terms we have no right to break except by a notice of two full years; thus putting us, if that power is exercised, absolutely in the wrong before the civilized nations of the world.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. REED. Surely.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the clause prohibiting the passage of cars is not given——

Mr. REED. The gentleman must permit me to continue—his interruption is a little long.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well, sir.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House that this is not a matter for declamation; it is not a question of firing either the Southern or the Northern heart; and yet the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has certainly exhibited himself in an attitude that was surprising to this House. When the former proposition which was included in the shipping bill of my colleague [Mr. DINGLEY] was up for consideration, a proposition limited to the exclusion of those Canadian vessels that wanted merely to buy bait, he was the gentleman who stood here most conspiciously in opposition thereto; and now he out-Herods the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] in his demand that we shall give this tremendous power to the President, and in that demand he is backed up by the gentleman from the Erie district of Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], who desires, as everybody knows, to crush out the railroad traffic of this country. [Laughter.] Why, nobody need answer that any better than it has been answered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Governor LONG].

Everybody knows that if we attempt non-intercourse with Canada all along the line, we suffer more than they do, and that is the very reason why the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] takes his position and declares that we ought to have a retaliation which will make us suffer more than it will the enemy. [Laughter.] He says we, on one side, want to retaliate on the ocean carrying trade, and he says that is wrong, because we do not possess that trade; but that we ought to retaliate on the railroad trade, because we do possess that. In other words, his position is that retaliation against the enemy consists in hurting ourselves. [Laughter.]

Why, I only need to take off the rhetoric of the gentleman's statement in order that everybody may see the absurdity of his logic, and that, in the fervor of his zeal to rekindle his own patriotism, he has gone beyond the wishes of every one who is interested in this matter, and even beyond the wishes of his own side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, here is a business question which affects a large portion of our citizens, in whom the nation is much interested, for out of them we must man our Navy. The nation is thoroughly interested in their rights, and let me say, by the way, to the other side of the House, that eight out of ten of them are members of the Democratic party. Now, those men know what they want, and they know what will produce the result which they desire. The Senate of the United States is ready to give it to them, this side of the House is ready to give it to them, and I am happy to say that the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in this Democratic House is ready to give it to them; and the question now is whether the politicians upon the other side, fired up by an appeal from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] addressed to them as Democrats, will permit this just measure to be defeated and take away from a Democratic President the right and the power of using peaceable means to make the people of Canada understand the disadvantages as well as the inhumanity of the course which they themselves are pursuing.

Mr. RICE. Does my friend, the chairman of the committee, desire any additional time?

Mr. BELMONT. No. I trust that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] will carry out the intention which he expressed in his notice that he would call the previous question upon his motion.

Mr. RICE. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the chairman does not desire to occupy any time, I now move the previous question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] moves that the House recede from its amendment, and upon that he demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, requested that the House return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3349) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry, in place of Middletown.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; requested a conference with the House on said bill and joint resolution, and the amendments thereto; and had appointed on the part of the Senate conferees as respectively indicated.

A bill (H. R. 5959) granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes—Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. CAMERON, and Mr. HAMPTON.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, and William H. Cole—Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island;

A bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same;

A bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (H. R. 2244) for the relief of J. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 5477) to restore to John W. Mears a fine improperly imposed on him;

A bill (H. R. 10233) to convey and confirm in the city of Aurora, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois, a small island in Fox River located within the limits of said city; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

Mr. MCRAE, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 731) granting a pension to William H. Heister;

A bill (H. R. 752) granting a pension to James Smithpeter;

A bill (H. R. 1449) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry B. Jay;

A bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for a term of court at Duluth, Minn.; and

A bill (H. R. 11199) for the relief of Thomas B. Nalle.

NON-INTERCOURSE WITH CANADA.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on receding from the amendments adopted by the House.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to determine.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 136, not voting 35; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. TAULBEE said: I ask, by unanimous consent, to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. ROMEIS.

Mr. OATES with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. SADLER with Mr. BRADY.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (S. 2958) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a free bridge by the county of Davidson, Tennessee, over the Cumberland River; and

A bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit the following privileged report:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, having met and after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
JAMES M. RIGGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
WILLIAM MAHONE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. On that motion I think we ought to have the yeas and nays and therefore demand them.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BURROWS. I had some conversation with my friend from Georgia, and there was an understanding nothing was to be said in the way of debate. If I had supposed the gentleman would take the course he has taken, I would move the House recede with a view to present some matters to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Because of a misunderstanding on the part of the gentleman as to what I intended to do, I do not think I should be asked to surrender my rights.

Mr. BURROWS. If my friend insists, I will move the House recede and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection.

Mr. BURROWS. And on that motion I ask the yeas and nays. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. REED. But not on this motion.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question be ordered on the other motion, although it is in order to move to recede, it is not subject to debate.

Mr. REED. If that is the ruling it can not be done.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, there will be the debate under the rule.

The SPEAKER. There will be, of course, fifteen minutes on each side, but no general debate.

Mr. BURROWS. I was in hopes it could have been avoided.

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes are allowed under the rules, fifteen on each side.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to discuss the amendment?

Mr. BURROWS. I want to say a word.

RETURN OF A BILL FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. Before proceeding with this question, if there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House a resolution for immediate action, it being rendered necessary because of an error in the engrossment of a bill passed last evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 10644) to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi.

There was no objection, and the resolution was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the question of difference now between the two Houses is restricted simply to making provisions for the South American mail service. I understand that upon all other points there is an agreement. I do not propose to enter into a general discussion of this matter again, but since the debate in the House some matters have come to my knowledge which I think may influence the judgment of the House, and I desire to submit them at this time.

It will be remembered that there is nothing in this proposition but to place a sufficient sum of money in the hands of the Postmaster-General to enable him to provide for carrying our mails to the South American Republics and to the Empire of Brazil. Under the provisions of the Senate amendment he is not compelled to use a single dollar if he does not see fit to do so. He may use such portion of it as may be necessary to carry our mails to these countries, or he need not use any portion of it.

As I said when this matter was under argument, in 1858 the postage to the South American countries was 45 cents on our mails, and now it has been reduced to 5 cents. The law then restricted the Postmaster-General to compensation of sea and inland postage, which was 45 cents.

The House will readily see then the injustice of continuing in force a law which restricts the Postmaster-General to sea and inland postage when that postage is reduced from 45 cents a letter to 5 cents. That must be readily seen.

Now, the object of this amendment is to place in the hands of the Postmaster-General a sufficient fund to enable him to pay, if you please, what was paid when that law was passed. It came to me only recently that there had been a correspondence between the authorities of the Argentine Republic and the Secretary of State of this country upon this subject, and I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. Hanna, the consul-general at Buenos Ayres, directed to Mr. Bayard, and also the correspondence between the minister of foreign affairs of the Argentine Republic and our minister at Buenos Ayres, which I will ask to have incorporated in my remarks in this connection. It discloses this fact, that the Argentine Republic to-day proposes to pay $100,000 a year for a period of ten years to be used to establish a direct line between the River Plate and this country, and that proposition is now pending.

It is for this Congress, then, to say whether it will do anything towards establishing that line with this assistance from that republic, not by paying a hundred thousand dollars, but whether we will do anything or allow the Postmaster-General to do anything which will enable us to establish that line. There are some English, French, German, and other foreign lines standing ready to-day to take that bounty and establish a line between Buenos Ayres and the Government of the United States; and those lines, already subsidized by their home governments, propose to come in and accept the bounty of a hundred thousand dollars offered by the Argentine Republic for the period I have mentioned; and if they do that, it will necessarily drive our line from that service just as they have driven us from the trans-Atlantic service.

Let me insert here the last report of the consul-general from the United States to our State Department:

REPORT OF CONSUL-GENERAL HANNA.

In view of the settled anxiety on the part of this government to engage in closer commercial relations with the United States, and active movements in progress for establishing an American line of steamships between New York and Buenos Ayres, I have thought the Department might regard it worth while to consider some conclusions reached by a personal inspection of the route named, with reference to its safety, chief points of trade, the character of commerce it would probably foment and develop, and its feasibility and importance to the trading and manufacturing industries of the United States.

Before entering into the details of the question it may be proper to note that the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company, a corporation of the State of New York, and one or two other companies have recently had agents here surveying the field and negotiating with the Argentine Government in the matter of subsidy in aid of their designs to engage in this trade. They find a friendly and willing spirit on the part of the ministry in charge of such questions, but numerous and stubborn difficulties otherwise.

The long-established plant of the Lamport & Holt English ships, with their sixty-five vessels already in the service, securely resting upon a most enviable reputation for safety and business probity, with tried and efficient agencies in every port, their business in a great degree already embracing New York, Antwerp, and the vast trading centers of England, are liberally paid for the mail service they are doing; also the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, with their great and powerful ships plying semi-monthly between London, Southampton, Liverpool, the Brazilian coast, the River Plate, through the straits of Magellan, and up the Pacific coast to Panama; also the French, Italian, and German lines, each performing monthly service between their respective countries and the Argentine Republic, now the center of commercial attraction of all the American states south of the Caribbean Sea, altogether form a powerful drawback to any additional and weak enterprise seeking to open new paths of trade in South Atlantic waters. It may sound strangely, but there are now one hundred regular steamships plying between Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Ayres.

The United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company, as you are aware, has already a monthly service between New York and Rio, under the patronage of the Brazilian Government. The agents here, Messrs. Wilson, Sons & Co., well-known commercial agents of very wide connections and established reputation, have already been in communication with this Government with a view to procure a subsidy for extending their Brazilian line to this port. They have been cordially received by the Government, but have been met with formidable objections. The hindrances suggested are the many stops made along the Brazilian coast, and the further fact of the imperative necessity, during the most of the year, of quarantine against the yellow fever of Rio, which surely would cause a delay between that point and this of four days during the most of the year.

I send herewith, as an inclosure, the petition of Yarrow, Kett & Co., by Green & Johnson, all agents of Wilson, Sons & Co., offering to run the United States and Brazil steamships here for a subsidy of $5,000 for each voyage made from New York to Buenos Ayres.

The minister for the interior, in whose department the petition is pending, has propounded to them some very pertinent questions bearing upon the slow progress and sanitary hindrances in the way of the extension of the line already operated between New York and Rio. I understand, however, the Government is willing to give them a subvention of $100,000 gold for twelve annual trips between New York and this port, stopping at no Brazilian city this side of Para, near the mouth of the Amazon. This would be $8,333.33⅓ per trip—a strong inducement. It is quite desirable that it may be accepted, if not by the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company, by some other able and willing to put on the line. There is little room to doubt that it will prove eminently successful to its owners, and be the inauguration of a prosperous trade between the two countries, and in time be so enlarged as to become dominant, as the Lamport & Holt line now is, between the River Plate and the European coast.

TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

We have but limited trade now with this country, mainly because merchants will not venture to make or fill orders by slow and uncertain lines of communication.

The certainty of rapid transit in maritime traffic is about the same thing in that regard which stability is in all business—the sine qua non of the entire system. The commercial world will not consent to grope its way in the dark. Information about changes at hand and changes to come are the primary essentials of its success. It must know what it is doing, and in a distant country like this its ventures largely follow the advices of the mails. A regular, vigorous, trustworthy postal service, and frequent ships coming and going at fixed certain intervals, are the chief concern of maritime merchants everywhere—a need which has never yet been supplied here. The solution is easy, that these two essentials form the condition precedent to an extended trade between the United States and the Argentine Republic; the necessity is present and pressing. Will the steamships and the mail service be supplied before all is transferred to the European markets?

The great fact we know still remains to us, that the inventive genius and boundless raw material of the United States afford us something of a reserved guarantee of safety, but that is about all that will be left to us if our enterprise does not speedily stretch out its hand in this direction. This is a wonderful country of marvelous possibilities. Do we want to share in the benefits it offers to the commercial world, accept what it offers in exchange for its needs, or shall we passively let others have that which is rightfully our own?

That is the language of our representative at the Argentine Republic to-day, and that is the question which we are asked to meet. The Argentine Republic stands with the bounty of $100,000 in its hand and says to the American Government: "If you will do something to help us establish a line between the United States and our republic, we are willing to pay this amount each year for ten years. We do not ask you to pay $100,000, but to do something." Now we should remember at the same time that Great Britain and France and Germany stand waiting ready to establish these lines and take the bounty; and when we let this opportunity slip I want to say to you it is the end of our commerce in the very beginning with this whole South American country.

I will reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes of his time remaining.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 117) to authorize the use of hot water off the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg, asked a conference with the House on said bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. CAMERON, and Mr. CAMDEN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not concur in the Senate amendment. I have heard no argument that seemed to me to justify this appropriation of $500,000. The measure does not differ in principle from the measure which was before Congress at the last session proposing the appropriation of $800,000 as a subsidy to the owner of ships. The amount involved is not the important feature. It is the principle involved that should arrest attention. But even as regards the matter of expediency, look at the injustice of this kind of legislation. The amount proposed last year was mainly in the interest of the trade between San Francisco and China and Japan. There were two lines of vessels in that trade—that of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and that of the Oriental and Occidental Steamship Company.

These were competing lines, the one American, with its vessels under the American flag, but largely owned by foreigners, the other, with vessels owned by Americans, but built abroad and under the British flag; the one line with foreign-built vessels, owned by American owners, carrying the mails for the sea-postage; the other line, largely owned by foreign capitalists, but with vessels registered as American vessels and built in the United States, refusing to carry our mails unless you gave them a large subsidy. And this House was assured that unless that subsidy was granted the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which was here on the ground by its agents, would continue to refuse carrying the mails unless the subsidy was granted, and that the only dependence would be on the other line of vessels, the number of which was insufficient to secure an efficient service. But under the advice of your able and efficient Postmaster-General, you refused the subsidy, and as soon as Congress refused the grant that company was glad to come in and take the compensation heretofore paid instead of the enormous demand made, a dollar a mile going and coming, which would have increased their compensation six or eight fold the rates which were being paid to the Occidental and Oriental Steamship Company, the vessels of which were owned by American capitalists.

Both lines are now carrying your mails and are glad to carry them. One line is, as I have said, largely foreign. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company receives not only the sea postage but the land postage for the transportation, the other the sea postage only—a large increase, as the gentleman will observe—while the other being more American than the Pacific line on account of the fact that the vessels are not built in the United States, are receiving the mails for the ocean postage alone, and yet both are willing and perhaps anxious to carry your mails, and the compensation of either is ample.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; anxious.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now the same is true with reference to the lines between this country and the ports of South America. The same condition of things exists. Our people have a large amount of capital invested in foreign ships. The carrying-trade of the world is the most cosmopolitan of all employments, and the fact that a vessel sails under the French flag or the flag of Nicaragua is no indication of where the capital belongs that is invested in the vessel.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose the gentleman from Indiana does not require to be informed that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company is not involved in this question.
